Mr. SMITH. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota that the matter was brought to the attention of the counsel for our commission in New Jersey, and it was still the counsel's opinion that the legislation which was passed in New Jersey simply provided for turning over the unemployment service under the Wagner-Peyser Act as it existed prior to the present amendment, and that therefore new legislation would be required before we would be eligible to take advantage permanently of this legislation. It raises the question of whether New Jersey must be compelled to take this new act in carrying on its unemployment program. It is one of those questions that gives me a good deal of difficulty.

I thank the Senator from Minnesota for calling attenton to the proviso. Of course, I was familiar with it. But I still must reiterate that counsel for the commission in my State believes that it does not clear the question which was presented by the telegram I have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURDOCK in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 2, beginning in line 3.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I desire to point out that this amendment is the one which rewrites the Wagner-Peyser Act.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BALL. The pending amendment, I believe, is section 102 at the top of page 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the question is on the committee amendment on page 2, after line 2, to insert a new section 102.

Mr. TAFT. I thought the question was on the next amendment. My only comment on the pending amendment is that I have some doubt and reservation as to whether the USES ought to go back to the Labor Department. I have some doubt as to whether the unemployment compensation activity and the employment service at the Federal level should not be together somewhere. But I am not disposed to dispute the particular amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 2, after line 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 15, to strike out:

The act of Congress approved on June 6, 1933, and entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such system, and for other purposes" (48 Stat. 113–117), as amended, is hereby amended as follows:

SEC. 201. Section 2 is amended by deleting from the first sentence thereof the following clauses: ", without regard to the civil-service laws," and ", without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended,".

SEC. 202. Section 3 (b) is amended by inserting after the word "Hawaii" the following: ", Puerto Rico."

SEC. 203. Section 5 is amended by deleting subsections (a) and (b) thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(a) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums annually as the Congress may deem necessary.

"(b) The Secretary shall from time to time certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to each State which is in compliance with the provisions of section 4 of this act, and such rules, regulations, and standards of efficiency as may be prescribed under this act, such amounts as the Secretary determines to be necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the State system of public employment offices during the fiscal year for which payment is to be made. The Secretary's determination shall be based on (1) the population of the State and an estimate of the number of persons who will be served by the public employment office system in the State; (2) an estimate of the cost of proper and efficient administration of the State system of public employment offices; and (3) such other factors as the Secretary finds relevant."

SEC. 204. Section 6 is amended by deleting the present provisions thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"The Secretary shall not certify for payment under this section in any fiscal year a total amount in excess of the amount appropriated for such fiscal year."

SEC. 205. Section 7 is amended by deleting the present provision and substituting therefor the following:

"Out of the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon receiving a certification under subsection (b), pay, through the fiscal service of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, to the State agency designated to cooperate with the Secretary under this act, the amount so certified."

And insert:

The act of Congress approved on June 6, 1933, and entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such system, and for other purposes" (48 Stat. 113–117), as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That in order to promote the establishment and maintenance of a national system of public employment offices there is hereby created in the Department of Labor a bureau to be known as the United States Employment Service, at the head of which shall be a Director. The Director shall be appointed by the Secretary of Labor. The Secretary may delegate to the Director any authority vested in him under this act and may authorize the Director to further delegate any authority so delegated.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of Labor is authorized to appoint and to fix the compensation of one or more Assistant Directors and such other officers, employees, and assistants, and to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere and for lawbooks, books of reference, and periodicals) as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. In case of appointments for service in the veterans' employment service provided for in section 3 of this act, the Secretary shall appoint only veterans of wars of the United States.

"SEC. 3. (a) It shall be the province and duty of the Secretary through the bureau to promote and develop a national system of employment offices for men, women, and juniors who are legally qualified to engage in gainful occupations; to maintain a veterans' service to be devoted to securing employment for veterans; to maintain a farm placement service; to promote, develop, and assure the maintenance of such other special-service programs as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; to maintain a public employment service for the District of Columbia; to assist, in the manner hereinafter provided, in establishing and maintaining systems of public employment offices in the several States and the political subdivisions thereof in which there shall be located a veterans' employment service; and to assure that such employment service facilities and information as may be required for the proper and efficient administration of unemployment-compensation laws are provided to all agencies charged with the administration of unemployment-compensation laws. The Secretary of Labor and the Social Security Board shall facilitate proper cooperation and coordination between public employment service and unemployment-compensation programs. The Secretary shall also assist in coordinating the public employment offices throughout the country and in increasing their usefulness by developing and prescribing minimum standards of efficiency, assisting them in meeting problems peculiar to their localities, promoting uniformity in their administrative and statistical procedure, furnishing and publishing information as to opportunities for employment and other information of value in the operation of the system, and maintaining a system for clearing labor between the several States and facilitating the free movement of workers seeking employment and employers seeking workers.

"(b) Whenever in this act the word 'State' or 'States' is used it shall be understood to include Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and Alaska.

"SEC. 4. In order to obtain the benefits of appropriations available under section 5, a State shall, through its legislature, accept the provisions of this act and designate or authorize the creation of a single State agency vested with all powers necessary to cooperate with the United States Employment Service under this act: Provided, That until the expiration of 1 week after the close of the first session of the legislature of any State which begins after the date of enactment of this proviso, such State shall, whether or not it has complied with the foreign provisions of this section and all of the provisions of the other sections of this act, be entitled to obtain the benefits of such appropriations if the Secretary finds that such State is complying with the requirements of this act to the extent permitted under the law of such State.

"SEC. 5. (a) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums annually as the Congress may deem necessary.

"(b) The Secretary shall from time to time certify for payment to each State which is in compliance with the provisions of section 4 of this act, and such rules, regulations, and standards of efficiency as may be prescribed under this act, such amounts as the Secretary determines to be necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the State system of public employment offices during the fiscal year for which payment is to be made. The Secretary's determination shall be based on (1) the population of the State and an estimate of the number of persons who will be served by the public employment office system in the State; (2) an estimate of the cost of proper and efficient administration of the State system of public employment offices; and (3) such other factors as the Secretary finds relevant.

"(c) Whenever the State agency designated to cooperate with the United States Employment Service under this act is also the State agency charged with the administration of the State's unemployment compensation law for which grants are made under title III of the Social Security Act, as amended, such State agency may, if it so elects, submit to the Secretary and the Social Security Board a joint budget covering both the functions for which grants are made under this act and the functions for which grants are made under such title III. In such a case the Secretary shall certify to the Social Security Board the amounts to be paid to the State under this act. Upon such certification, the Social Security Board shall certify such amounts to the Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to the amount, if any, payable by said Board under the provisions of section 302 (a) of the Social Security Act, as amended.

"(d) In cases to which subsection (c) does not apply, certifications made by the Secretary under subsection (b) shall be made to the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(e) Whenever funds are paid to the same State agency under this act and under title III of the Social Security Act, as amended, the State agency may commingle such funds and account therefor by such accounting, statistical, sampling, or other methods as may be found by the Secretary and the Social Security Board, respectively, to afford reasonable assurance that the funds paid to the State agency under this act and the funds paid to the State agency under title III of the Social Security Act, as amended, are expended for the respective purposes of this act and such title III.

"SEC. 6. The Secretary shall not certify for payment under section 5 in any fiscal year, a total amount in excess of the amount appropriated for such fiscal year.

"SEC. 7. Out of the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon receiving a certification under section 5, pay, through the fiscal service of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, to the State agency designated to cooperate with the United States Employment Service under this act, the amount so certified.

"SEC. 8. (a) The State agency designated to cooperate with the United States Employment Service under this act shall operate under such methods of administration relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, as are found by the Secretary to be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, except that the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods; and such State agency shall also replace, within a reasonable time, any moneys received under this act which, because of any action or contingency, have been lost or have been expended for purposes other than or in amounts in excess of those found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State system of public employment offices. In those States where a State board, department, or agency exists which is charged with the administration of State laws for vocational rehabilitation of physically handicapped persons, the agency designated to cooperate with the United States Employment Service under this act shall make provision for cooperation with such Board, department, or agency.

"(b) The agency designated to cooperate with the United States Employment Service in any State under this act may, at the election of such agency, submit to the Secretary detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act within such State. If such plans are in conformity with the provisions of this act and reasonably appropriate and adequate to carry out its purposes, they shall be approved by the Secretary and due notice of such approval shall be given to the State agency.

"SEC. 9. (a) Each State agency cooperating with the United States Employment Service under this act shall make such reports concerning its operations and expenditures as shall be prescribed by the Secretary and shall comply with such provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to carry out his obligations under this act. It shall be the duty of the Secretary to ascertain whether the system of public employment offices maintained in each State is conducted in accordance with the rules and regulations and the standards of efficiency prescribed by the Secretary in accordance with the provisions of this act and to make such studies and investigations as may be necessary in connection therewith. The Secretary may revoke any existing certificates or withhold any further certificate provided for in section 5, whenever he shall determine, as to any State, that the cooperating State agency has not properly expended the moneys paid to it or there has been a substantial failure of compliance by such State agency with the provisions of this act or the rules, regulations, or standards of efficiency prescribed thereunder. Before any such certificate shall be revoked or withheld in the case of any State, the Secretary shall give notice in writing to the State agency stating specifically wherein the State agency has not properly expended such moneys or has failed so to comply, and shall afford such State agency a reasonable opportunity for hearing.

"(b) The Secretary is authorized to expend in any State so much of the funds appropriated and made available under section 5 of this act as may be necessary to operate a State-wide system of public employment offices under the control of the Secretary if no State system of public employment offices exists in such State or if, and for as long as, the State is not eligible for funds in accordance with the provisions of this act. Except to the extent that a system of employment offices under the control of the Secretary is operated within a State either (1) pursuant to the specific request of the Governor of such State or (2) with funds specifically appropriated by the Congress for the operation of such system under the control of the Secretary, the Secretary shall not expend more than $1,000,000 in any fiscal year pursuant to this subsection or operate a system of employment offices in any State pursuant to this subsection for more than 3 months in any fiscal year.

SEC. 10. In carrying out the provisions of this act, no person shall be referred to a position (a) without due notice to the applicant, if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lock-out, or other labor dispute; (b) if the wages, hours, or other conditions of the work offered are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality, except upon request of the applicant; or (c) if as determined by the State agency the position is one which does not utilize the person's highest skill, until and unless a reasonable effort has been made to place him in a position that does utilize his highest skill.

"SEC. 11. The Secretary shall establish a Federal Advisory Council composed of men and women representing employers and employees in equal numbers and the public for the purpose of formulating policies and discussing problems relating to employment and insuring impartiality, neutrality, and freedom from political influence in the solution of such problems. Members of such council shall be selected from time to time in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe and shall serve at $25 per diem, and when attending meetings of the council they shall be allowed necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law for civilian employees in the executive branch of the Government. The council shall have access to all files and records of the United States Employment Service. The Secretary shall also require the organization of similar State advisory councils, which shall also be composed of men and women representing employers and employees in equal numbers and the public.

"SEC. 12. The Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 13. The Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to extend to all State systems of public employment offices which receive funds appropriated under this act penalty mailing privileges for the transmission of official mail matter in connection with the administration of such State systems of public employment offices in the same manner as such privileges are extended to any agency, department, or independent establishment of the Federal Government. Reimbursement to the general fund of the Treasury for such privileges shall be made in such amounts from funds appropriated to the Department of Labor for that purpose, and in such manner, as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of Labor and the Postmaster General.

"SEC. 14. No provision of this act shall be construed to amend or in any way modify the provisions of title IV of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. I move to strike out section 11, on page 13, beginning with line 7, and extending through line 25 on page 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the committee amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement in connection with the amendment. As appears from the committee amendment, this section proposes the establishment of an Advisory Council. There are several vices in the committee amendment. In the first place, no limitation is placed on the number of persons who are to serve on the Advisory Council. It could be composed of 10, 100, 1,000, 10,000, or any other number the Secretary of Labor might see fit to appoint. The members would all receive $25 for each day of attendance at sessions, in addition to all their travel and subsistence expenses.

There is also a requirement in the committee amendment that the States shall all have similar advisory councils, with no limitation whatever on the number of persons to be appointed in the States, or on the amount to be paid members of the advisory councils within the States. If the compensation were fixed at $25 a day, which is the amount proposed to be paid to members of the Advisory Council in the Federal Government, the State advisory council could be quite a powerful political body in the hands of the governor of a State who wished to use it for political purposes.

The purposes of the Council and its powers are rather nebulous. I do not believe it is necessary to incur this additional expense throughout the Nation all the way down to the State levels. This section in the committee amendment is rather awkwardly worded. If the Secretary wishes to obtain advisers he can do so in the ordinary way. He can employ persons in the Department to advise him. There is nothing in the present law which would prevent him from appointing an advisory committee. But I do not believe that we should leave the door wide open to abuses all the way down to the State level in each of the 48 States in connection with a matter which might involve the expenditure of a large sum of money without accomplishing any useful purpose.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator from Georgia know whether I am correctly informed, that the only part of section 11, on page 13, not now in the Wagner-Peyser Act is the provision with reference to the per diem fee? As I understand, all the other provisions of section 11 are already in the law. What is attempted by this amendment is to provide for payment of the fee which is uniformly paid to members of advisory councils in other branches of the Government.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand that in the original Wagner-Peyser Act there is some language to provide for an advisory council; but to my mind there is considerable difference between the language in the present law and the language of the committee amendment.

It is my understanding that the present law provides that members of the Advisory Council shall serve without compensation. The provision in the committee amendment would allow members of the Advisory Council compensation of $25 a day. The committee amendment provides compensation of $25 a day for each person the Secretary of Labor might see fit to appoint, without limitation on the number, to advise with him on the formulation of policy. I think it is much better for the Secretary of Labor to formulate policies with the aid of experts in his Department, particularly when we are providing for a similar council in each of the States. It is a rather ridiculous situation to have a specific requirement that each of the 48 States shall have an advisory council, the expenses of which are to be paid 100 percent out of the Federal Treasury, in a bill which gives the Secretary of Labor the power to formulate policies which will bind the States. There is no machinery for bringing the advice of the various State councils to the Secretary of Labor; and anything they might do in an advisory way could be immediately overruled and annulled when the Secretary of Labor, under the terms of the bill, promulgated a regulation.

Mr. MORSE. Would not the objection of the Senator from Georgia—and I think it has great merit—be met if an amendment were inserted to fix the maximum amount which might be paid to a member of an advisory council during any period of time, such as 1 year? Possibly also we should fix the number of people that can be appointed to an advisory council in any State during a period of time such as a year. If we are to obtain the most competent experts to serve, I think it would be quite unfair to ask a man to serve on the advisory council and not pay him a reasonable amount for his time and expenses. As I understand, the figure used in the committee amendment is the amount uniformly paid for such services in other branches of the Government. I think it is only fair that members of the advisory council should receive compensation. However, in order to avoid the potential evil of which the Senator from Georgia speaks, could we not establish a maximum limit on the total amount that could be paid for any particular period of time, such as a year?

Mr. RUSSELL. That would considerably improve the provision in the committee amendment, but it would not relieve my fundamental objection.

In the first place, we are attempting to insert language in the bill which provides for 100-percent Federal financing of this activity. The original theory provided for matching on a fifty-fifty basis. The State advisory committees which would be required to be appointed under the provisions of the committee amendment would be fifth wheels. They would be absolutely useless when we rewrite the remainder of the law and give the Federal Government power—and I think properly so, when the operation is financed altogether out of Federal funds—to prescribe the methods of operation and lay down the rules and regulations for the conduct of the program within the States.

I am opposed to this provision for other reasons. The original Wagner-Peyser Act was enacted back in 1933. I happened to be a Member of this body at that time. We were enacting legislation which contained some rather new concepts. In 1933 we could not pass a bill without providing for a "brain trust." Every bill which was passed establishing a new activity or creating a new agency contained a provision for a little private brain trust within the department to advise the head of the department as to how he should administer the law. I think we have rather gotten away from the brain-trust days. If the Secretary of Labor wishes to have advisers on these questions, he should employ them in his Department. There is nothing in the present law which would prevent him from employing experts within his normal budget at $25 a day.

I do not like this nebulous language. It is coupled with the provision on page 14, which gives the Secretary of Labor authority to make any rules and regulations which may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of the act. That is probably necessary language in the bill. I have no objection to it as a general principle; but when it is proposed to establish an advisory council to advise with him, under the rather nebulous provisions set forth in the bill, I say that it is altogether unnecessary and would entail an expense which could well be dispensed with.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I understand that the origin of that provision is the Wagner-Peyser Act, and so it is desirable that section 11 should remain in the bill.

The Senator from Oregon thinks section 11 should remain in the bill, and to that extent he disagrees with the Senator from Georgia.

But if we are to have it, we should fix a maximum number of days which can be served with pay during the year. I should like to suggest to those who have charge of the bill that as a minimum the words "not in excess of 15 days a year" be inserted in the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that would not cure the difficulty in regard to the number who could be appointed. Ten thousand could be appointed in 15 days, and they could be kept coming in relays. Under the changed concept of this service to the American people, whereby it would become a purely federally financed function to be operated by the States, rather than to be operated on a 50–50 matching basis, as provided by the original Wagner-Peyser Act, I submit there is absolutely no necessity for section 11. It neither adds to nor detracts from anything in the other sections of the bill, and it can only bring about increased expense and confusion.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. While in the main this was a part of the original Wagner-Peyser Act, the whole plan will work without having any of section 11 in the bill, so far as we can see. While we do not have authority to say that the committee agrees, I do not think there will be any serious objection on the part of the committee if this portion is stricken out.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I agree with the Senator from Delaware. I think we picked up the section from the original Wagner-Peyser Act, and I am very much inclined to agree with the Senator from Georgia that we are overdoing the question of advisory committees in all the departments. I cannot see much use in the provision.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the committee amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I think should be considered before the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No such amendment can be considered or acted upon while the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is pending.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, on yesterday I called attention to certain language on page 13 of the bill, namely, lines 3 to 6. It refers to the referral to positions, and in substance it prescribes that in carrying out the provisions of this measure no person shall be referred to a position without certain prerequisites; and then, in subsection (c), which is the particular portion on page 13 to which I refer, the following provision is found:

> (c) If as determined by the State agency the position is one which does not utilize the person's highest skill, until and unless a reasonable effort has been made to place him in a position that does utilize his highest skill.

The point I made yesterday was that there is, to say the least, an ambiguity as to whose function it will be under this language to determine whether a reasonable effort has been made to place an applicant in a position that does utilize his highest skill. In the course of the colloquy, as I recall, the Senator from Minnesota indicated that it had been his understanding that by the insertion in line 3 of the words "as determined by the State agency" it was meant not only to vest the State agency with the power of determination as to what position utilizes the person's highest skill but also to vest in the State agency the power of determination as to whether a reasonable effort had been made to place the individual in a position which does utilize his highest skill.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I was about to try to obtain recognition by the Chair in order to suggest an amendment in line 5, on page 13, after the word "unless", to insert "such agency determines that."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, that will meet with my entire approval. The words which I was going to suggest, and which I did suggest yesterday, were "the State agency determines that."

Upon reconsideration, Mr. President, I think I prefer the language I suggested yesterday, because the word "such" might possibly be subject to the interpretation of meaning the Department of Labor. Therefore, I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota and to the chairman of the subcommittee that following the word "unless," there be inserted the words "the State agency determines that."

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I see no objection. I think the word "such" would clearly mean the State agency. But if the Senator from Missouri is worried about it, let us make it read "unless the State agency determines that."

Mr. DONNELL. Yes.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I offer that amendment.

Mr. DONNELL. It may well be that the Senator from Minnesota is correct in his interpretation, but I think the language I have suggested would certainly remove any ambiguity.

Mr. BALL. I adopt the language and offer it as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: On page 12, strike out subsection (b) of section 9.

I offer this amendment after conferring with my constituents in New Jersey with regard to the entire set-up. They call to my attention that if for any reason the Secretary of Labor should not approve of the program we in New Jersey have been working with very successfully, he could very well make New Jersey ineligible for funds, and then the Federal Government could take over our whole program. We recognize that that might not happen, but nevertheless the power to do so would exist under the bill, and therefore we urge that subsection (b) be eliminated.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I wonder whether the Senator will be willing to limit his amendment to such an extent that the first six lines of the subsection—in other words, down through the word "State", in line 9—would remain. If the amendment were limited to that extent, subsection (b) as thus amended would then read as follows:

> (b) The Secretary is authorized to expend in any State so much of the funds appropriated and made available under section 5 of this act as may be necessary to operate a State-wide system of public employment offices under the control of the Secretary if no State system of public employment offices exists in such State.

That is substantially the provision of the present Wagner-Peyser Act.

Mr. SMITH. I am very glad to accept that modification, because I had in mind, of course, a State like my own State of New Jersey, where there are provisions of this sort. We do not wish to have them removed.

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator from New Jersey will modify his amendment accordingly, his amendment then will provide that in subsection (b) of section 9, on page 12, beginning with the words "or if", in line 9, to strike out from that point down through line 20.

Mr. SMITH. I am very glad to modify the amendment in line with that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey will state the amendment as he wishes to have it modified.

Mr. SMITH. My modified amendment is as follows: On page 12, in subsection (b) of section 9, strike out, beginning with the words "or if", in line 9, and all the following words through the end of line 20, which ends with the words "in any fiscal year."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the portion of the committee amendment which it is proposed to strike out.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, in line 9, after the words "or if", it is proposed to strike out the following: "and for as long as, the State is not eligible for funds in accordance with the provisions of this act. Except to the extent that a system of employment offices under the control of the Secretary is operated within a State either (1) pursuant to the specific request of the Governor of such State or (2) with funds specifically appropriated by the Congress for the operation of such system under the control of the Secretary, the Secretary shall not expend more than $1,000,000 in any fiscal year pursuant to this subsection or operate a system of employment offices in any State pursuant to this subsection for more than 3 months in any fiscal year."

Mr. TUNNELL, Mr. DONNELL, and Mr. MORSE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gurney	Murray
Andrews	Hart	Myers
Austin	Hawkes	O'Daniel
Ball	Hayden	O'Mahoney
Barkley	Hill	Overton
Bridges	Hoey	Reed
Brooks	Huffman	Revercomb

Ferguson	Magnuson	Walsh
Fulbright	Mead	Wherry
George	Millikin	White
Gerry	Mitchell	Wiley
Gossett	Moore	Willis
Green	Morse	Wilson
Guffey	Murdock

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] to the committee amendment on page 12.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have conferred further with the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] and the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], and together we have checked up on the language of the Wagner-Peyser Act. In view of the conversation which we have had, I modify my amendment to strike by including all of paragraph (b) of section 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment. The clerk will now state the language which it is proposed to strike out.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, in line 4, it is proposed to strike out the following:

(b) The Secretary is authorized to expend in any State so much of the funds appropriated and made available under section 5 of this act as may be necessary to operate a State-wide system of public employment offices under the control of the Secretary if no State system of public employment offices exists in such State or if, and for as long as, the State is not eligible for funds in accordance with the provisions of this act. Except to the extent that a system of employment offices under the control of the Secretary is operated within a State either (1) pursuant to the specific request of the Governor of such State or (2) with funds specifically appropriated by the Congress for the operation of such system under the control of the Secretary, the Secretary shall not expend more than $1,000,000 in any fiscal year pursuant to this subsection or operate a system of employment offices in any State pursuant to this subsection for more than 3 months in any fiscal year.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, I certainly object to the amendment. The language which it is proposed to strike out is of such nature as to take care of two classes of persons during the interim period. The first class is employees in the particular State concerned. If the language is deleted there will remain no organization for the unemployed. Therefore, the members of the staff will not be employed during a period of time. That situtation is unquestionably the first which is aimed at by the motion. In other words, it is designed completely to demoralize the force in any particular State. Allow me to read a part of the language which it is proposed to strike out:

(b) The Secretary is authorized to expend in any State so much of the funds appropriated and made available under section 5 of this act as may be necessary to operate a State-wide system of public employment offices under the control of the Secretary if no State system of public employment offices exists in such State.

That is the first part of the language which it is proposed to strike out in order to take away from the Secretary the right to use funds in maintaining an employment system. I do not quite understand the purpose of striking out that provision; but I fear the result which would ensue.

But the proposal of the Senator from New Jersey goes further than that. It would mean that in some States there would be no protection for the unemployed at all, the purpose being to prevent any temporary arrangement by which employment facilities could be furnished, "if, and for as long as, the State is not eligible for funds in accordance with the provisions of this act." The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey would give the State authority the right to prevent the unemployed from having this assistance, even to the extent of preventing the Federal Government from helping the unemployed in the State, for the amendment would strike out the provision:

Except to the extent that a system of unemployment offices under the control of the Secretary is operated within a State either (1) pursuant to a specific request of the governor of such State or (2) with funds specifically appropriated by the Congress for the operation of such system under the control of the Secretary, the Secretary shall not expend more than $1,000,000 in any fiscal year pursuant to this subsectiton or operate a system of employment offices in any State pursuant to this section for more than 3 months in any fiscal year.

If that provision is stricken out the Secretary of Labor will not be permitted to bridge over the period of 3 months.

Under the bill as reported he is limited to 3 months, and the amount he may expend is limited to the entire United States to $1,000,000, according to my interpretation of the bill. I understand from statements made on the floor yesterday that $1,000,000, which is the maximum amount the Secretary could spend, would not carry on the office in the State of New York for 3 months. In other words, the whole Nation will have for the purpose of bridging over the temporary period only sufficient funds to carry on perhaps for a month, and I do not know whether it could be done even for a month, but, in any event, a very short time.

What could be the object of saying that the Secretary shall not have this power, unless there be a lingering fear of helping the unemployed in those States where the Governor and the State authorities refuse to comply with the Federal law. Not only is it proposed that such States shall have no assistance, but the organization in the States is to be demoralized until such time as the State shall put itself within the provisions of the law.

I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, it is my opinion that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey is very important and that it strikes at the very heart and center of the pending legislation. It certainly will impair the standards, and, as the able Senator from Delaware has stated, in some States it will result in complete and widespread demoralization.

Under the present Wagner-Peyser Act the Secretary has authority, as has been stated many times on the floor, to issue rules and regulations and to prescribe standards of efficiency. The law imposes on the Secretary the duty of ascertaining whether the public employment offices maintained in each State are conducted in accordance with such rules, regulations, and standards of efficiency as are prescribed by the Director of the United States Employment Service. For the failure of any State to comply therewith the Secretary of Labor may withhold further grants to the State.

As the very able Senator from Delaware has pointed out, the effect of the pending proposal would be to close down public employment offices in the States. This would mean that there would be no method by which servicemen could be paid readjustment allowances or civilians their unemployment compensation, since the respective statutes under which these allowances are paid require that they be paid through public employment offices. So we must have public employment offices.

Mr. President, as a practical matter, the Secretary of Labor has no method by which he can require compliance with the rules and regulations which he is authorized to promulgate under the Wagner-Peyser Act. He could only close down the employment service in the State, an action which he probably would not resort to, in the face of the natural repercussions which would result therefrom. I think he would hesitate and probably refrain even in the most severe circumstances from closing down public employment agencies.

It is for this reason, because they know full well that there is no practical method of requiring compliance with such regulations or even assuring that in any State there will be maintained an effective employment service, that the State representatives have so vigorously opposed this bill, for this bill, for the first time, while precluding Federal domination and continued Federal operation, nevertheless furnishes some method of assuring continued effective employment service programs in every State.

Mr. President, aside from the fact that the Federal Government is paying 100 percent of the cost, we have a very important stake in this problem. It seems that no one objects to the Secretary's authority to withhold funds, but when it comes to the proposition of assuring that the Federal Government's obligation under the GI bill of rights to maintain an effective employment and job counseling service for veterans is carried out there seems to be a feeling that no assurances are required. Section 9 (b) is the only real basis on which we can have reasonable assurance that there will be an effective and uninterrupted system of public employment offices in every State. The 3 months and $1,000,000 limitations in this bill preclude indefinite Federal operation but permit the continued operation of an employment service until appropriate State legislative action is taken where needed or until necessary congressional action can be taken.

Mr. President, on this particular amendment and on this particular point I have a letter from the assistant director of the national legislative service of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. It is one of a number of letters I have received bearing on this portion of the bill. This letter goes on to state:

KANSAS CITY, MO., June 13, 1946.

Senator JAMES M. MEAD,
United States Senate, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MEAD: In the very near future, the Labor Department appropriation bill will be presented for consideration of your subcommittee. It is in regard to the House-inserted provisions relating to the return of public employment offices to the States on October 1, 1946, that I write this letter in behalf of the great veterans' organization I represent. In my testimony before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor on March 19, 1946, in regard to the return of public employment offices to the States, I rightfully insisted that the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States was not concerned with the ultimate control of these offices by either State or Federal Government, but that we are very much concerned with the continuation of a high standard of services to millions of unemployed veterans. We were heartened by the Senate committee's action in favorably reporting the bill, H. R. 4437, which contained a provision designed to insure certain standards of operation, which the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States recommended, and which we believe is essential in order that the veterans might continue to receive effective job placment and counseling.

Needless to say, it was somewhat disheartening to note that the House inserted provisions not only nullifying our efforts, but threatening to cause a premature return of the public employment offices without such minimum standards. An unfortunate disruption and diminution of services during the time when the United States Employment Service is carrying a peak load of veteran unemployment is inescapable.

In behalf of 1,700,000 veterans, members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, and in the interests of millions of unemployed veterans, I respectfully commend to you the suggestion that the House-inserted proviso be stricken by your committee and that the question be left to separate legislation, such as H. R. 4437, reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, and now on the Senate Calendar.

Respectfully yours,
JOHN C. WILLIAMSON,
Assistant Director, National Legislative Service.

As I said in the beginning, Mr. President, this is a very important matter. It strikes at the very heart and center of the bill, and the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I wish briefly to tell the Senate the origin of the compromise we are considering.

The administration bill introduced in both the House and the Senate provided for a wide open recapture power on the part of the Secretary of Labor. In other words, he would have been authorized under those bills, whenever he withheld funds from a State, to go into the State and operate the State system with Federal funds. The State administrators were very much afraid that such power would be used to federalize the employment service. Yet there is a case to be made for making sure that employment offices will continue to be available in any State, regardless of whether the Secretary may find it necessary to withhold certification of funds or not. The Federal Government especially has a duty in that respect now, because we have taken on a special obligation to try to help some 12,000,000 veterans to find jobs.

Therefore, in order to make sure that this particular subsection could not be used as a vehicle to federalize the system, we inserted the limitations which the Senator from Delaware recited. In other words, under this subsection the Secretary can operate a State system only for 3 months, or expend a total of $1,000,000 in a fiscal year in the whole United States, unless he meets one of two requirements. First, he must have the request of the governor of the State in writing to operate the system. It has happened in one State—I believe it was Arizona—that the State simply did not want to operate employment offices, and the Federal Government had to step in, and it did so under language inserted in an appropriation act, through an amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. It is possible such situation might arise again.

The second condition the Secretary must meet if he is to continue to operate a State system beyond 3 months is that he must get the approval, presumably, of both the Appropriations Committees and both Houses, and I do not think he can do that unless there is a flagrant failure on the part of the State to carry out the purposes of the act.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr HAYDEN. The situation in Arizona was that without action by the State legislature we could not have had a State employment service. So the Governor very properly asked the Federal Government to take care of the situation in the interim, which was done by amendment on an appropriation bill. There was no other way out of it.

As I look at this provision the Senator favors, it is a guarantee of operation in the interim between the time when the State decides that the transfer shall take place, and actual operation by the State. I think it is perfectly safe. I cannot see why there should be any objection to the provision at all. I heartily favor retaining in the bill the amendment as written.

Mr. BALL. I thank the Senator. I agree with him. Under the amendment I think there is absolutely no danger of what the States fear, namely, the federalization of the system. They are afraid it may give the Secretary a little too much bargaining power if he gets into a dispute with a State over a particular rule or regulation, but I think the Secretary has probably been before the Committees on Appropriations a sufficient number of times to make him know that he must have a very good case if he expects to make it stick in the committees.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. Does not the Senator believe that under the bill as it would be amended by the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey the Secretary could, by raising objections to the situation in any particular State, perhaps put the State in such a position that it could not have any unemployment assistance?

Mr. BALL. The Senator from New Jersey modified his amendment, and is now moving to strike out the whole subsection. As it originally stood, with the suggestion that the first sentence be left in the bill, it would have been wide open to a recapture.

Mr. TUNNELL. I do not think the Senate understands my point. If the amendment as it would be after striking out all of subsection (b) were agreed to, suppose a difficulty arose, as the Senator suggests, between the Secretary of Labor and the authorities in any particular State. The Secretary could say, "Well, you have not complied"——

Mr. BALL. And he could withhold funds.

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes; he could shut off funds on any pretense whatever.

Mr. BALL. Oh, yes; he could do that.

Mr. TUNNELL. So that under the proposed amendment he would really have power to shut off assistance in any State.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to supplement the statement made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL], the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL]. I think the Senator from Minnesota has stated the case very clearly as to what would happen if the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Jersey should be agreed to.

I think we need to keep in mind the statement in the report of the Committee on Education and Labor on the bill, that in essence it is a reenactment of the Wagner-Peyser Act, with certain amendments. Although it looks as though we are presenting very long amendments, what we really have done is to present to the Senate again the Wagner-Peyser Act almost in toto, with certain additions to it.

I think we need also to keep in mind that under the Wagner-Peyser Act, which has been in operation many years, the Employment Service has not been a State service alone, but it has been a combined Federal-State service. It was a combined Federal-State service when the matching was 50–50, 50 percent of Federal funds and 50 percent of State funds, in round numbers, at least.

Now we are considering a proposal under which the money appropriated is 100 percent Federal funds, and I think we have to keep in mind, as a Congress, that if we are appropriating on the basis of 100 percent the money of the Federal taxpayers, it is of great importance that we surround with reasonable safeguards the expenditure of the money by the States. I submit that the bill reported by the committee does exactly that, and that section 9 (b) is of great importance to an efficient administration of the bill. What will happen if a State does not meet the standards which I insist it is our obligation to see to it are set up in the bill? The people who will suffer under the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Jersey are the unemployed individuals, many of whom are veterans, because, as the Senator from Minnesota has pointed out, we now have taken unto ourselves—and rightly so—an additional employment service obligation in relation to about 12,000,000 veterans. Therefore, I think it very important that in carrying out our obligations to the veterans, when a State does not meet the standards set up in the bill, at least, there should be some period of time for a continuation of the employment service, under Federal auspices, if necessary, until the difficulty within the State can be adjusted. I think every Member of the Senate knows that when that particular problem arises in any State it will be ironed out within 90 days, because the agitation for its settlement will certainly become very strong within the 90-day period.

The proposal of the Senator from New Jersey would place a tremendous burden upon the Secretary of Labor. It would put him on the spot, so to speak. He would have to assume the responsibility either of discontinuing completely any employment service whatsoever, or going along with a State that refuses to set up such decent standards and criteria as ought to be maintained if it is to have the use of and the expenditure of the Federal funds provided for in the bill. I think it is not fair to the Secretary of Labor to put him in such a position. We have plenty of checks on him, as the Senator from Minnesota has pointed out, through the Appropriations Committee. He is well aware that if he exercises any of the arbitrary tendencies which I understand the proponents of this amendment fear it might be possible for him to exercise, we have checks on him and they will be used.

But what we should not overlook, as we consider this amendment, Mr. President, are the individuals, the people who are going to benefit from an employment service. I say it is our clear duty, when a State does not meet the prescribed standards, at least to see to it that an employment service is continued, by the Federal Government, for at least 90 days, which is what the bill now provides for, or for such period as may be necessary, in accordance, however, with the specific provisions of this section itself.

I think the necessary checks and guaranties are there. I think it is a mistake to call this section, as it has been called in this debate, the so-called recapture section. What we ought to call it is "a guaranty-of-operations section." That is, a guaranty to individuals, including the veterans concerned, that until any difficulties that may arise over the criteria and the standards applied by the Secretary of Labor can be worked out, we guarantee to the individual that for a period of at least 90 days there will be an employment service. I say that we cannot justify doing less.

Therefore I submit that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey goes to the very heart of this bill, and, if the amendment should be adopted, I take the position that in specific cases great injustice would be done to millions of individuals who ought to have the guaranty of the continuation of the service until the difficulties between the States and the Federal Government over standards in specific cases can be worked out.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator from Oregon has just said I desire to say a word about what my amendment does. The Senator from Oregon is always persuasive with his fine presentations. There is no difference between us as to what we want to accomplish. I am just as eager as are those opposed to my amendment to have an effective employment service set up for our people and to make sure that there shall be no failure of such service. It is merely a question of whether we are going to accomplish that result as effectively if the Federal hand is in the State situation, rather than by allowing the States to handle their respective situations by putting in the right kind of employment systems.

My State of New Jersey has had its unemployment system for years, and it strikes me as unnecessary to have the system arbitrarily changed simply because Federal agencies think something else might be better.

Mr. President, we must put this service back in the States, because we have to decentralize this job. We cannot handle it effectively from Washington, and so far as possible I want the States to do the job. That is the reason I have offered my amendment. I do not want the possibility to exist that the work which the States should definitely do may be taken back by the Federal Government. I think it ought to be made as simple as possible for the States to share at least in putting this job over. I think it should be their job to take care of their people. I think we cannot better take care of our veterans and others who may be unemployed throughout the country than by having the States take care of them. In other words, I believe the States should assume this responsibility, that the Federal Government should help them but should not interfere with the administration.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, most of those who are in favor of this section really believe in federalization of the unemployment compensation service and the employment offices throughout the country. For that purpose, this is a perfectly logical section. But I suppose we will face that issue. I imagine the Congress will face squarely, within another year probably, the question whether we wish to federalize the whole system. When that times comes the question can be determined in accordance with the wishes of the majority of the Congress. But what we are doing here is setting up a State-aid system. We have many systems of Federal aid to the States. I do not know that any of them provide as an ultimate sanction that the Federal Government shall take over and operate the particular activity which we are interested in financing. The reason for it is perfectly clear. If the ultimate sanction against the failure of the State to perform is that the Federal Government will step in and do the job itself, then there is very little incentive for the States to continue to operate. There is very little reason for a State system at all if the sanction for failure of the State to operate is Federal operation.

The whole point of the State system is that we want to encourage the States to engage in a certain activity, but if the States refuse to engage in the activity, that is the concern of the people of the State, and unless we admit that it is their concern and their choice whether they will take Federal money or not for this kind of an operation, we might as well abolish the State system. The purpose is to establish the initiative and the operation and the experimentation and the individuality of State operation in these fields. Now, if we want to federalize the job, that is another question.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator stated that this proposal is backed by those who believe in Federal control, and he referred to various systems of Federal aid to States. Can the Senator name one activity that was taken over from the States during the war in connection with which the Government is authorized to return and take over again in the event of the failure of the States to act?

Mr. TAFT. No; there are no other activities in which, so far as I know, the Federal Government is authorized to step in on the failure of the State to act, and operate it as a Federal agency. The provision of the Wagner-Peyser Act to take over if the State failed to operate a State unemployment office expired in 1938, and since that time there has been no power in the Federal Government to take over State offices.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator totally misinterprets my point of view in this matter. I am not concerned about having this agency operated by the Federal Government at this time. That is not my concern at all. All I am concerned with is an orderly transfer from the Federal Government back to the States, and that, I presume, is also what the Senator wants to have accomplished.

Mr. TAFT. But this particular section has nothing to do with the orderly transfer back to the States. This is a provision that, after the function is transferred back to the States, the Federal Government may reclaim it.

Mr. HAYDEN. No. The Senator totally misinterprets the section, as I read it. There is a provision now that this service shall go back to the States, but upon request of the governor, or some condition of that kind, the service can be carried on under Federal control pending that time. As the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] has very properly said, it is a guaranty of operations. It is a guaranty that the time will not come when the man out of a job in a State will have no place to go to get help.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, referring to the question of return, this is a permanent provision of law, a provision for the next 50 years. If the State does not conform to every detail and to every order of the administration, which may extend to the employment of Mr. X, how much he shall be paid, and every other detail of operation, the Federal Government is authorized to step in and operate the public employment offices. If things are not done in just the way Federal officials want them done, the Federal Government is authorized to operate the employment offices. A Secretary who is inclined to favor Federal operation will naturally use that power more freely than one who is not.

So far as the transition period is concerned, this has nothing whatever to do with the transition period. It is purely a permanent provision of law. My suggestion is this: So long as there exists a sanction with respect to the State-operated system, the system has no life of its own. It is in effect a Federal system, a system which may be made expressly a Federal system on the slightest excuse. While it is provided that the Federal Government shall not expend more than $1,000,000 or operate for more than 3 months in any fiscal year for this purpose, I take it that that provision would be inoperative if the governor said that he would like to have the Federal Government operate the system. So if we have Governors who believe in Federal operation, the Secretary can step in and use all his money to conduct a Federal system.

I admit that the only difference between this State-aid system and others is that the Federal Government supplies practically 100 percent of the funds. Why is that? It is obviously because when the social-security tax of three-tenths of 1 percent on every employer of eight or more persons throughout the United States was levied, specifically for the purpose of dealing with the problem of unemployment, it was provided that that money could be used to pay the expenses of State bureaus of unemployment compensation. It is true that technically it was a Federal tax, but it was a Federal tax raised for a particular function. That function was the operation of these offices. It was extended also to cover the cost of operation of the employment offices operated by the States, on the theory that while the money was technically Federal money, it was derived from a tax levied on the taxpayers in the States for the specific purpose of operating these offices.

In the course of administration of the Social Security Act we have collected $1,275,000,000 from the employers of the various States, as a pay-roll tax, for the purpose of dealing with unemployment. Incidentally, of that fund we have turned back to the States during that period, for the operation of the unemployment compensation offices and for the operation of the employment offices, until the Federal Government took them over during the war, only $477,000,000. So the Federal Government has made a profit from the tax, after paying all the expenses of this operation, of $798,000,000, which has gone into the General Treasury and has been used for Federal purposes. So, while I believe that a system of this sort is better on a matching basis, because I think the States ought to make some exertion of their own in raising money, to show their interest, nevertheless, the reason why it is a 100-percent grant is perfectly evident from the history of the tax of three-tenths of 1 percent.

It seems to me that in a State-aid system we must rely on the States to act. If the State should fall down and the Federal Government should cut off the funds, the State would be responsible for bringing that particular disaster on itself, and public opinion against the State would be so violent that no State would dare to fail. If it were ruled out temporarily, it would have to raise the money itself in some way, or settle the problem with the Federal Government.

What this provision does is to discourage the States from activity of their own. It removes all initiative and interest in the operation by the States of their own employment offices. It subjects them to the club of every order of the Secretary of Labor and of every traveling official representing the Secretary of Labor who comes into a State office and says, "You must do this. If you do not do it, we will take over your unemployment offices tomorrow and put you out of business, and establish a Federal operation in this State."

The States may be able to say, "You cannot do it for very long." That does not make any difference. The fact that it can be done for 3 months is a sufficient club to force every State to comply with the slightest wish of the Secretary of Labor, and utterly to deprive the States of any independence in the operation of employment offices. So it seems to me that we should rely for enforcement on the withholding of funds, and on public opinion, just as we do in connection with every other State-aid system which we have established. Therefore, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to comment on some of the observations of the Senator from Ohio. As one of the supporters of the bill in its present form, I cannot be included in the category mentioned by the Senator from Ohio when he says that most of the proponents of the bill believe in federalization of the employment service. The record is perfectly clear. Time and time again the junior Senator from Oregon has voted against federalization of the employment service.

However, I cannot agree with what I think is implicit in the remarks of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], namely, that these problems are either exclusively Federal or exclusively State problems. We have never recognized this problem as a 100-percent Federal problem or a 100-percent State problem. Under the Wagner-Peyser Act we recognized it as a State and Federal problem. Many of our problems are mixed problems of Federal and State responsibility. I know of no clearer example of a mixed problem of Federal and State responsibility than the one now before the Senate involving employment services for the people of this country.

Of course, there is a responsibility on the part of the State to see to it that an employment service is maintained under this act, and that the money contributed by the Federal Government for the operation of that service, to the extent of 100 percent, is expended in accordance with reasonable standards and criteria set up in the act.

I think the Senator from Ohio will agree with me that on innumerable occasions he and I have been of one mind on the proposition that when we enact legislation of this type we ought to establish very definite standards to be followed by the States if they are to benefit from the expenditure of Federal funds. I could mention several examples. I mention one in passing. That was our joint opinion in regard to the hospital bill. I think we are pretty much of one mind on all bills which involve Federal money to be expended by the States. The States ought to meet reasonable and decent standards established by the Federal Government if they are to enjoy Federal grants in aid. I submit that that is what is sought to be accomplished by this bill. We cannot get away from the fact that 100 percent of this money is coming from the Federal Government, and that if a State does not meet certain standards the only check we have as a Federal Government is to withdraw or withhold the funds.

However, in such an event it is not the State which suffers. Unemployed men and women suffer. Unemployed individuals suffer. Unemployed human beings suffer unless there is a guaranty-of-operation clause in the bill; and that is what section 9 (b) is. It is that section which the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Ohio would strike from this bill. I say that there is provided in the bill a very definite check upon the State to see to it that it meets decent standards. If a Secretary of Labor should abuse his rights under the bill, that would be a reflection upon us, as a Congress. If he starts to do so, then it is time for us, as a Congress, to go into action and see to it that any arbitrary action on his part is quickly stopped.

I take the position that we cannot justify handing out huge sums of money to the States and letting them spend it as they will, placing the Secretary of Labor in the position of having to make the decision either to let them spend it on the basis of subnormal standards, or to cut off the money entirely and cause individuals to suffer. This guaranty-of-operation clause would at least insure protection of individuals until the problem could be solved between the State and the Federal Government. I repeat that that clause goes to the very heart of the bill. If we strike it out, we do a great injustice to individuals.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President——

Mr. KNOWLAND. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. TUNNELL. I wish to speak for a few minutes at this time.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARVILLE in the chair). The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the amendment and I have wondered what argument could be made in support of it. The only argument in support of it which has been advanced thus far is that the Federal Government could thereby take over. That argument was suggested by the Senator from Ohio. He has said that the bill is built on the theory of those who favor a Federal employment system. I disagree with him entirely. I do not think there is the slightest ground for his position. I do not think there is anything in the bill which warrants such a statement. The bill is not built on the theory of a Federal system at all. I frankly say that I would favor such a system, but I have departed from that theory; and I think this bill meets the objections of those who favor the State systems, and I believe that a great majority of the Congress favors them.

Mr. President, those who oppose a continuous service by either the State governments or the Federal Government for the benefit of the unemployed should vote for the amendment. Those who favor a continuous service for the benefit of the unemployed should support the bill as it is now written and should oppose the amendment. Those who wish to put the States in a position to stop unemployment assistance whenever they may desire to do so and not permit the Federal Government to step in and conduct a Federal unemployment system for 3 months should favor the amendment. In other words, those who wish to strike out the unemployment system and who wish to take such a position at the expense of the unemployed should vote for the Senator's amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Can the Senator tell me the name of one State in the United States which wishes to do any harm whatever to the unemployed or which wishes to strike out or remove unemployment assistance?

Mr. TUNNELL. I am not suggesting the names of particular States. I am talking about the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, which would do just what I have said.

Mr. SMITH. I take issue with the Senator from Delaware. I know of no State which wishes to do harm to unemployed persons.

Mr. TUNNELL. I realize that the Senator from New Jersey takes issue, but I disagree with his argument.

The point is that the Senator from New Jersey proposes the amendment, and his amendment would take away from both the State and the Federal Government the right to conduct a system for the aid of the unemployed, whenever there is a difference between the State and the Federal Government as to the requirements. However, the amendment does not take away from the Secretary of Labor the right to stop the payment of funds. He has that right. He has the right to take away from a State the payment of funds for the support of the unemployment system.

The question now is, What will happen when he does that? Under the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, the Federal Government would be powerless to see that the unemployed received such assistance. Who would be benefited is more than I can understand. The unemployed would not be benefited. The employees of the State would not be benefited. Those who are employed for the purpose of trying to obtain employment for the unemployed would not be benefited. Not even those who are responsible for the appointment of the various State employees would be benefited. The State employees themselves would become unemployed, and would remain so until such time as the State might comply with the requirements. The Federal Government has that power. It retains that power through the Secretary of Labor. All this amendment attempts to do is to protect the unemployed in this service during the interim.

It has been said that there would be a great deal of State resentment and that the States would be compelled to comply. I think that is true. But in the meantime they would be without any unemployment service, under the provisions of the pending amendment. If any Senator wishes to put the unemployed in a position of having no service in a particular State, he should vote for the amendment, because that is just what it will do.

Exception is taken by the Senator from Ohio, in particular, because of the provision "Except to the extent that a system of employment offices under the control of the Secretary is operated within a State either (1) pursuant to specific request of the governor of such State," and so forth.

Now, our friends are afraid of the governors of the various States. I do not know, but I do not think they need be so fearful that the governors of the States will attempt to throw to the Federal Government the power of appointment of employees in the unemployment offices. It seems that they are afraid of the Secretary of Labor and now they are afraid of the governors of the States. They are afraid that, through some chicanery, the governors will take away from the States the right to make their own appointments.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator from Delaware know of any governor of a State who would not welcome an opportunity to receive 100 percent Federal money for the maintenance of a State agency? Does the Senator know of any governor that would not be willing to comply with reasonable Federal standards if he could receive Federal support on such a basis and have full administrative control of the agency subject only to reasonable Federal standards? I know of none.

Mr. TUNNELL. I think the Senator is correct. The arguments in support of the amendment are simply a reduction to the absurd.

Mr. MORSE. Even the pay roll itself and the appointment of staff would be quite an inducement to any governor; would they not?

Mr. TUNNELL. That is correct.

Mr. MORSE. Especially so if the governor had something to say about the selection of the staff.

Mr. TUNNELL. That is correct. There is no one who would be benefited by the course advocated by the proponents of the amendment.

Mr. President, I think the States can be depended upon. As the Senator from Oregon has suggested, I do not think we need become so afraid about what the governors of the States will do in respect to those employees.

But I am pleading for the employment of the American people. I am pleading for the continuation of employment of the employees of this organization. I am pleading for the employment of the boys who come home from the armed forces. I am pleading for the employment of the unemployed throughout the Nation.

I do not think my State of Delaware or the State of New Jersey should be discriminated against because of a difficulty between the Secretary of Labor and the State authorities. I do not think our States should be deprived of that service, or that the citizens of any other States should be deprived of that service. I am not afraid of any disloyalty on the part of the governor of any State. I care not what his politics or his religion or his race may be, I think we can trust the governors of the States to be loyal to the interests of the States. I do not believe we need to strike out a protection for the unemployed of the Nation because of a fear that there may be some disloyalty on the part of a governor.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	Myers
Andrews	Hayden	O'Daniel
Austin	Hill	O'Mahoney
Ball	Hoey	Overton

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] to strike out section 9 (b) of the committee amendment on page 12.

Mr. TUNNELL and Mr. WHITE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. TUNNELL. On this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS] are detained on public business.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] are absent on official business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] is absent on official business, having been appointed to the Commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine Independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

I also announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] has a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

I announce that if present and voting the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] is absent by leave of the Senate, being a member of a committee designated by the Senate to attend the atomic bombing at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] are absent on official business, being members of the Commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 39, as follows:

So, Mr. SMITH's amendment, as modified, to the committee amendment, was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6064) to extend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 2544. An act for the relief of Willie Hines;

H. R. 2954. An act for the relief of John Hamlet;

H. R. 3010. An act for the relief of Mrs. Marie Edens Nast, Mrs. Bessie Amann, and George R. Townsend;

H. R. 3565. An act to authorize the charging of tolls for the passage of transit of Government traffic over the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge; and

H. R. 5208. An act for the relief of Michael J. Keaveney and Mary C. Keaveney.

RETURN OF PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT OFFICES TO STATE OPERATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 4437) to provide for the return of public employment offices to State operation, to amend the act of Congress approved June 6, 1933 (48 Stat. 113), and for other purposes.

Mr. MEAD. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 7, in line 18, it is proposed to insert the following: "Funds appropriated to the United States Employment Service for the fiscal year 1947 shall be available to carry out the purposes of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR AUSTIN

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, Senator WARREN ROBINSON AUSTIN came to the Senate in 1931. At that time I had been in the Senate for quite a number of years. I remember the impression he made upon me at the time. He was a quiet, unobtrusive, dignified, and evidently a very highly educated man. He spoke very little in the Senate for a number of years.

He was, and is, a typical New Englander, a very able lawyer, and whenever he did speak, he had something to say. I was impressed with him at first, and Senator AUSTIN has grown every day he has been in the Senate. He has been an ornament to this body ever since he has been in it. He is conservative in his views and yet at the same time liberal enough when the time comes to change. If a change is needed, he is as quick to see it as anybody and he does not hesitate to advocate it.

One of the finest characteristics about Senator AUSTIN is his lack of fear. He is not afraid to vote his convictions. I do not agree with him always but I have noticed that he votes his convictions, it makes no matter who agrees or disagrees with him.

He is a busy Senator; he is a hard working Senator; he is an effective working Senator; he is a good speaker and his views are always listened to by his brother Senators. I doubt if New England has had a more active Senator than he is, although New England Senators are ordinarily very active and quite effective, and one of them is the great leader of the Republican Party in this body.

I was greatly surprised, not that Senator AUSTIN was to be appointed as the representative of the United States of America on the Security Council of the United Nations, but that he would accept the appointment. He was so well fitted for the duties of a Senator; he fitted in so well with the senatorial system; he enjoyed the friendship and confidence of so many of his fellow Senators and was making such a success of his great office here, that I was surprised that he would be willing to go to a new field.

However, I am sure that he will carry the same vigorous determinations to succeed, the same energies, the same abilities, the same high qualifications to his new office that he has exhibited to such a high degree in his present office.

Mr. President, I wish Senator AUSTIN well. I wish him every success and happiness in his new field of labor. I think all his colleagues regreat his leaving the Senate. I doubt if there is any Senator who does not regret it. I know I regret very much that he is going to leave us. We shall miss him tremendously here, but at the same time I sincerely hope that he will enjoy his new work to the fullest.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I desire to take just a moment of the time of the Senate to express my very deep gratitude to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, the President pro tempore of this great deliberative body, from which with a feeling of sorrow I am soon to depart.

I, too, remember the days 15 years ago, and I recall very well the impression which the distinguished Senator from Tennesee made upon me. I then recognized something that is more than an institution in the Senate of the United States, and that is the tremendous value of experience and even of seniority, for the distinguished Senator from Tennessee had been here taking a leading part in this body for 20 years when I came here 15 years ago. Many times he and I were found opposed to each other upon very important legislation. On the other hand, many times, I admired him in those early days for the pioneering, judgment, skill, and real power that he exercised.

He can well be called the father of the air-mail transportation system, for it was he who was the author of the first appropriation for it, and it happened that that was an appropriation for a line which led northward from Washington to my own home section. It was relatively a very small amount of money—$100,000—but rapidly, stimulated by his efforts in the United States Senate, this remarkable instrumentality of communication developed. I shall always think of him as being one of those great statesmen who had the vision early to promote this wonderful institution of progress—the systematic, regular, scheduled transportation of the mails of the United States by air.

I say we were found opposed to each other sometimes. So it was when he was pioneering another great project—TVA. I was opposed to his views upon that matter, but I must say that in debate he knew where an opponent's jugular vein was, yet the rapier which he carried never let any blood. If a rose was not on the tip of it, it was found somewhere, and today it seems very comforting, inspiring, and gives me confidence when I find it is not one rose but a whole bouquet of roses that comes to me from this very distinguished and very much loved friend.

RETURN OF PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT OFFICES TO STATE OPERATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 4437) to provide for the return of public employment offices to State operation, to amend the act of Congress approved June 6, 1933 (48 Stat. 113), and for other purposes.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it in title II?

Mr. DONNELL. In title III.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will withhold the offer of the amendment for a moment until we finish with title II, then he will be recognized.

If there are no further perfecting amendments to title II, the question is: Shall the Senate agree to the committee amendment, title II, as amended?

Title II, the committee amendment as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention, if I may, of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL], who have presented this bill. On page 15 of the bill——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Missouri permit the Chair to interrupt him again? The Chair finds there are committee amendments to title III, which take precedence over the Senator's amendment, and after they are disposed of the Senator will be recognized.

The clerk will state the first committee amendment in title III.

The first committee amendment in title III was, on page 15, line 3, after "(1)", to insert "(a)".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, in line 5, after the word "who", to insert "(on the day preceding the effective dates of the transfer of the employment offices to the State under this act)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, in line 14, after the word "terminated", to insert "under the applicable State merit system."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, in line 17, after the word "separated", to strike out "after they have been given a reasonable opportunity", and insert "(A) if they have failed."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the amendment that I had in mind offering has reference to the committee amendment which is now before us, and I am wondering——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment is in order.

Mr. DONNELL. I shall not present the amendment at this time. I understand the committee amendment has precedence, but I should like to address myself to the committee amendment, namely, the committee amendment just stated by the clerk. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Delaware with respect to this situation. The committee amendment in lines 17 and 18 strikes out the words "after they have been given a reasonable opportunity", and inserts "(A) if they have failed." Then subsequently, in lines 23 and 24, after striking out the word "positions" it is proposed to insert certain language italicized down to the word "or."

Mr. President, the effect of the particular portion of the bill set forth in subdivision (1) of section 301 is to make provision for the retention in the State-wide system of public employment offices of employees of the Federal Government who have been employed in State and local service functions in such State, and so forth; with certain distinct exceptions: First, that individuals so transferred from the Federal Government back to the State government "may be separated or terminated"—and by those terms I understand that they may no longer be allowed to work for the State government "for good cause as determined in individual cases under the applicable State merit system."

The second exception to the retention is that they may be "separated or terminated under the applicable State merit system by reason of reductions in force found necessary in the interests of efficient operations."

The third exception to the retention of Federal employees is that which is the subject of this particular committee amendment. In the committee amendment the exception is that the Federal employees may be separated or relieved from further employment "if they have failed to acquire eligibility for continued employment in the State-wide system of public employment offices after having been given a reasonable opportunity to acquire such eligibility."

The effect of this amendment is illustrated by the following example: If a Federal employee takes an examination along with other persons who desire the same position and fails to pass the examination, he may be discharged or let out. But if he passes the examination along with others, he has an automatic preference by which he stays in, regardless of the fact that the other persons who pass the examination may have greater experience, may have higher grades, or may for any other reason be preferred to the Federal employee.

The language as it came over from the House of Representatives provided that such employees "may be separated after they have been given a reasonable opportunity to acquire eligibility for continued employment in the State-wide system of public-employment offices under the State merit system in the positions occupied by them under the Federal service or in reasonably comparable positions."

It seems to me that adequate preference is given to the Federal employee by the provision as it came from the House of Representatives, for under that provision he may be separated from employment in the event he has had reasonable opportunity to acquire eligibility and has failed to do so. But under the committee amendment, as I have indicated, if he takes the examination and passes the examination, he has an automatic retention of his position, regardless of whether the State desires him to be separated or not.

I am hoping that the Senator in charge of the bill may consent to substitute for the language of the committee amendment that which was contained in the House provision. That would mean striking out, on page 15, in line 18, "(A) if they have failed" and inserting in lieu thereof "after they have been given a reasonable opportunity"; also, in lines 23 and 24, the words to be striken out would be "positions, after having been given a reasonable opportunity to acquire such eligibility," and there would be inserted in lieu thereof the word "positions." I respectfully inquire whether the Senator in charge of the bill would be willing to accept the House language in lieu of the language of the committee amendment?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri has not quite correctly interpreted the effect of the amendment. As the language came over from the House, it would give the employees transferred absolutely no protection whatever in their jobs, no matter what they did in a civil-service examination, even though they might pass at the head of the list. Once they had been given a reasonable opportunity to acquire eligibility, the State would be perfectly free to fire, dismiss, or to retain them, as it wished.

There was considerable pressure on the committee to require the States to agree to blanket all these Federal employees into the State service on the basis of merely a qualifying examination. The Senator from Missouri has interpreted this language as meaning that. However, it does not. In the merit system parlance there is a difference between qualifying and becoming eligible for appointment. What this language means is that if the individual now holding a job in the State system, after it is transferred, takes a competitive civil-service examination in competition with all the others who are trying for that job—and in most cases there will be from 10 to 100 positions in the same classification, and probably several hundred competing for them—and passes the competitive examination with a sufficiently high grade, considering veterans' preference, which applies to most of these positions, so that under the State merit system he is among the top three or four who are certified for appointment, the State must agree to appoint him. If the individual now in the position passes a competitive examination with a high enough grade so that he is among the top three certified, the State must agree to keep him in that position or a comparable position. This provision would not give him the right merely to pass a qualifying and noncompetitive examination and be blanketed into State employment. It seems to me that that is a reasonable protection in the interest of continuity of service to give those who have joined the service since it was transferred to the Federal Government.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Minnesota has correctly interpreted the language. That is the very ground on which I object to the committee amendment. As I see it, the language of the committee amendment means that if John Smith were employed in the Federal work, and the activity were transferred to the State, if he took an examination along with 300 others, and passed the examination among the first three who would be qualified for appointment under the State act, it would be obligatory upon the State to appoint him, regardless of the comparative grades of the other two who would be eligible for appointment. It seems to me that that is an undue preference.

In my opinion, the language in the House provision gives sufficient preference to Federal employees. The House language makes it possible for the Federal employee to take an examination in the grade which he has attained in Federal employment, whereas, as I understand, under the State merit system, otherwise an individual would have to take an examination at the foot of the ladder, for the lowest grade of employment open under the State merit system. So the system provided by the House language would give to the Federal employee a very considerable advantage, because it would entitle him to take the examination in the grade at which he was employed in the Federal service. The objection I have is the very fact which the Senator from Minnesota has pointed out, namely, that after he takes the examination and is found to be among the first three, the other two of whom may have a very much higher grade than he has, may have had greater experience than he has had, and may for excellent reasons be preferable, the State would be obliged to blanket him into State employment. For that reason I do not believe that the committee amendment should be sustained.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I merely wish to point out that this amendment would afford protection to employees who have joined the State services since the Federal Government took them over. Of course, once they are appointed the State can discharge them at any time it wishes to do so. But it is provided that they shall be given an appointment if they pass an examination high enough to be among the top three certified for appointment. We are doing much less for the employees than the Federal Government did for the State employees when it took over the services, because the Government, by Executive order blanketed all the State employees of the State services into the Federal civil service, at their then grades, without any examination—not even a qualifying examination. It seems to me that the 14,000 persons involved are entitled to at least the consideration given them by the committee amendment. The House language gives them absolutely no protection. It simply provides that they shall have an opportunity to become eligible. Once they have had the opportunity, the State has no further obligation under the House language.

I hope the committee amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 15, beginning on line 17, after the word "separated" and ending with the word "eligibility" in line 24. [Putting the question.]

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This vote is on the committee amendment, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. A division has been called for.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. Is the effect of the action just taken to reinstate the content of the House bill at that point, in lieu of the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct; that is the effect of the vote.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. Is it in order to move to reconsider the action just taken by the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is. Does the Senator make a motion to reconsider?

Mr. MORSE. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator who has made the motion to reconsider was upon the losing side; was he not?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in the absence of a yea-and-nay vote, any Senator may move to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is eligible to make the motion to reconsider.

Mr. MORSE. So, Mr. President, I have moved that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was rejected.

I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gurney	Murray
Andrews	Hart	Myers
Austin	Hawkes	O'Daniel
Ball	Hayden	O'Mahoney
Barkley	Hill	Overton
Bridges	Hoey	Reed
Brooks	Huffman	Revercomb
Buck	Johnson, Colo.	Robertson
Burch	Johnston, S. C.	Russell
Bushfield	Kilgore	Smith
Capehart	Knowland	Stanfill
Capper	La Follette	Stewart
Carville	McCarran	Swift
Chavez	McClellan	Taft
Donnell	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	McMahon	Tunnell
Eastland	Magnuson	Wagner
Ferguson	Mead	Walsh
Fulbright	Millikin	Wherry
George	Mitchell	White
Gerry	Moore	Wiley
Green	Morse	Willis
Guffey	Murdock	Wilson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 15 was disagreed to.

Mr. MORSE. On this question I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President——

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Do I understand that a vote "yea" will be to sustain the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. REVERCOMB. And a vote "nay" would sustain the position of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. Is the motion of the Senator from Oregon debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is debatable.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the pending question on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Missouri was agreed to?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; it is a motion to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 15, line 17, was rejected.

Mr. HILL. Very well.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the language on which we are about to vote is on page 15, in line 17, after the word "separated", beginning with the word "after" and ending in line 24 with the word "eligibility." That is one of the transfer provisions relating to employees of State services who were hired since the Federal Government took over the services, and have no status in the State merit system. Under the House language of the bill those individuals might be separated from the service after having been given a reasonable opportunity to acquire eligibility. All the language of the committee amendment would afford to those persons—and there are some 14,000 of them—is the right to take a competitive examination under the State civil-service system in their respective States. If they pass highest on the list, very well. There would be no obligation, whatever, of the State to retain them once they had been given an opportunity to take the examination and did not pass with high grades. They are not to be blanketed in under a qualifying examination, but after they take a competitive examination, if they pass the examination high enough so that they are among the top three or four to be certified for appointment, the State then is under the obligation to appoint them and retain them in the positions which they have held, or in comparable position. That situation will obtain only so long as their services are satisfactory. Even though they have once been appointed, they still may be separated from their employment under the State system. What the committee amendment does is only to give them a right to continue in their original employment if they pass a competitive examination with a sufficiently high grade. The examination is a competitive one and not a qualifying one. Their ratings must be high enough to place them among the top three to be certified.

Mr. STANFILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. STANFILL. I should like to have the Senator explain to me how he arrives at the conclusion that if a person takes the examination and receives a rating which places him among the top three or four applicants, that person is eligible to appointment.

Mr. BALL. That is not provided for in the bill, because the State merit system must apply. There is a general provision in most civil service State laws that the civil service commission shall certify the top three applicants for appointment.

Mr. STANFILL. Suppose a person who has been a Federal employee should take the examination together with 10 or 12 other persons, and that he received a grade which placed him fifth or sixth man from the top of the list. Would the law give him the right to the job?

Mr. BALL. No; not unless he receives a grade which is high enough to be certified by the Civil Service Commission, or whatever the commission may be in the State which handles such matters. He must pass the examination with a grade sufficiently high to enable him to be certified for appointment.

Mr. STANFILL. According to the State law.

Mr. BALL. Yes. Usually that means that he must be among the three top candidates.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word. Quite apart from the merits of the proposal which the Senator from Minnesota has been discussing, I believe it is apparent that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] took the first opportunity which was offered him to move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 15 had been rejected. It seems to me that that comity which does and should prevail between Senators should accord him a right to have a vote taken on his motion, so that the merits of the amendment may be passed upon in that manner.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, if I understand correctly what we are trying to do, is to return the State employment offices to the States, as we promised to do.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

In view of the excellent suggestion which has been made by the minority leader, if it is within my power to do so I consent to the reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment on page 15 was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have already been ordered. It will require unanimous consent to vacate the order for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays be vacated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Hearing none, it is so ordered. The question recurs on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, the subject which we are discussing is one which concerns the return of employment agencies to the respective States. If we are going to return them, and I am certain that we are, let us return them in as nearly the same condition as they were in when we took them over in 1942. Likewise, let us return them to the States on the basis of allowing the States to employ their own personnel under their own rules and regulations. Why tie the hands of the Governors of the respective States and establish rules and regulations by which they must employ this person or that person?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPEHART. I am very happy to yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. In view of the fact that unanimous consent has been given to vacate the order for the yeas and nays, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider so that we can proceed with the discussion of the merits concerning which the Senator from Indiana is addressing the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair states that the motion to reconsider has already been agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will vote to eliminate the committee amendment and permit the 48 States to choose their own employees and operate their own business so far as employment offices are concerned.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I should like to be heard briefly on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment is in section 301 (1) (a) under title III. Subdivision 1 of that section relates to a requirement that the State must, in order to secure moneys under the employment service appropriations, make provision for the transfer and retention in the State-wide system of public employment offices, of employees of the Federal Government, who, on the date preceding the effective date of the transfer of the public employment offices to the State under this bill, had been employed locally, and that they shall continue their employment in the State-wide system of public employment offices under the State merit systems in the positions occupied by them under the Federal service, or in reasonably comparable positions.

Subdivision 1 proceeds to make three exceptions to this mandatory requirement for transfer to and retention in the State-wide system of public employment offices. Those exceptions are, first, that individuals so transferred back to the States "may be separated or terminated for good cause as determined in individual cases under the applicable State merit system"; second, that they may be "separated or terminated under the applicable State merit system by reason of reductions in force found necessary in the interests of efficient operation"; and, third, may be separated, according to the committee amendment, "if they have failed to acquire eligibility for continued employment in the State-wide system of public employment offices under the State merit system in the positions occupied by them under the Federal service or in reasonably comparable positions, after having been given a reasonable opportunity to acquire such eligibility."

Mr. President, as I understand, the effect of subsection 1 is, first, that an obligation is cast upon the States to consent to the transfer back to them and to the retention by them in State public employment offices of employees of the Federal Government, except these three classes I have mentioned, and unless a person comes within one of those exemptions, the State must retain him.

The first exception relates to a case where a man may be terminated for good cause. There is no objection to that.

Second, he may be terminated by reason of reductions in force found necessary in the interest of efficient operations.

There is only one other contingency in which a Federal employee may be dismissed from his job by the State, and under the committee amendment that third exception is in a case where the individual has failed to acquire eligibility for continued employment.

Mr. President, the effect of that is best indicated by an illustration. Let us take the case of a Federal employee who goes back to the State of Illinois, we will say, and passes an examination, which is given by the State of Illinois merit system authorities, and let us suppose he is among the first three of the persons who pass the examination, that is to say, the first three in point of grades; but let us suppose he is the third as among the three. Under the statute as it would be written under the committee amendment it would be obligatory on the State authorities of Illinois to retain that man, even though there were two others of the three who had acquired eligibility, who had higher grades, who may have had long experience, who might be better qualified than he would be under the law and under the facts to occupy the position.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. What effect, in the opinion of my able colleague from Missouri, would that have on a veteran's preference?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, that is covered on the next page. I do not think that is affected by the provision to which I am referring. Subdivision (b), on page 16, again under subsection (1), requires that the States shall have—made provision for the extension to employees of the Federal Government who left employment-service positions in such State in order to perform training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States or service in the merchant marine.

I may point out that there is an "or" which appears between "(A)" and "(B)" on page 15. It is my understanding that the language on page 16 makes adequate provision for those who have been in the war. If I am mistaken in that, I have no doubt the Senator from Minnesota or the Senator from Delaware will correct me, and I pause for such correction, if either of them thinks I am in error.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That point covers a man in the Federal service who is a veteran; but does it not give him more or less of a superpriority against a veteran who has not been in the Federal service but otherwise might be considered by a State for employment?

Mr. DONNELL. That may be. I think perhaps the Senator from Minnesota could better answer that question than can I.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. BALL. No; it gives him no superpriority at all. It merely says that if he is an employee who was employed in the State service after the Federal Government took it over and left the service to go into the armed forces and returned after the employment services were transferred back to the States he shall have the same rights he would have had if he had returned one day before the services were turned back. It gives him no super rights at all.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the point I make, boiled down, is simply this: That under the language of the committee amendment, unless the Federal employee shall fail to acquire eligibility by continued employment—or, for illustration, in the case I have cited, failed to be one of the first three in point of grades—unless he fails, he cannot be separated from the employment, whereas, as I see it, under the House provision, he may be separated from the employment after he has been given a reasonable opportunity to acquire eligibility.

In my judgment, the recommendation of the committee to the Senate gives this man not only the right to take an examination in the higher grade in which he is employed in the Federal work, but, in addition to that, in the illustration which I have suggested, if he is one of the first three, he has an absolute preference as against the other two who are within the three, even though the other two may each have higher grades, and be better qualified, in the judgment of the State director, than is the Federal employee.

Mr. President, to my mind that is not advisable. To my mind, it is more preferable to adopt the House language, which likewise guarantees to the employee a reasonable opportunity to acquire eligibility, but does not require that he shall be continued in the service of the State if after he has acquired eligibility the appointing authorities may deem it advisable to appoint one of the other two I have mentioned in the illustration.

Mr. BALL obtained the floor.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The point I wish to cover is not the case of a man who has been in the Federal or State service and has left to go into the armed services and has returned. The point I wish to have cleared up is this: If there is a man in the Federal service who was not in the armed services, and there is a person outside of the employment service who was in the armed services and has come to take his civil-service examination, and normally would be entitled to a veteran's preference, having served in the armed forces, is he foreclosed from getting a job because a man who has been in the Federal service has a priority over him?

Mr. BALL. No; I do not think so, because the applicable State law would apply, and I think a great many State laws provide that a veteran who is certified for appointment cannot be passed over; he has an absolute preference.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is what I wish to make clear, and I want the record here to show that that is the intent, so that if this matter ever comes up in the courts we will be sure to have the legislative intent indicated, that the veteran is not being pushed aside and deprived of the rights he normally would have under veterans' preference.

Mr. BALL. That is correct. If a State law gives him absolute preference, if he is in the top three certified, or four, or five, or whatever the number may be, and has absolutely a right to the appointment, then the State law applies, because we specifically provide that the whole proceeding is under the State merit system, and obviously in such a case the holder of the position has not acquired eligibility because someone else has prior eligibility.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 15, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 15, line 17, after the word "separated", it is proposed to strike out "after they have been given a reasonable opportunity," and insert "(A) if they have failed"; and on line 22, after the word "comparable", to strike out "postions" and insert "positions, after having been given a reasonable opportunity to acquire such eligibility."

Mr. BALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MORSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withdraw his request if the yeas and nays are ordered?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DONNELL. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. A vote "yea" is in favor of the committee amendment, and a vote "nay" is against the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The yeas and nays having been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS] are detained on public business.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] are absent on official business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] is absent on official business, having been appointed to the Commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

I also announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] has a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

I announce that if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "yea."

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent on official business attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] is absent by leave of the Senate, being a member of a committee designated by the Senate to attend the atomic bombing at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] are absent on official business, being members of the commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 24, as follows:

So the committee amendment on page 15, in lines 22, 23, and 24, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Without objection, the remainder of the committee amendment, beginning in line 24, on page 15, and ending in line 12, on page 16, is agreed to.

The committee amendment so agreed to was, on page 15, in line 24, after the previous amendment, to insert: "or (B) if the Secretary has determined that it is impracticable for them to be given an opportunity to acquire such eligibility; and (b) has made provision for the extension to employees of the Federal Government who left employment-service positions in such State in order to perform training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States or service in the merchant marine as defined in Public Law No. 87, Seventy-eighth Congress, of the same employment rights and privileges as those provided for Federal employees transferring to State employment in accordance with the provisions of this section."

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BARKLEY submitted the following conference report, which was ordered to lie on the table:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That section 1 (b) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by striking out 'June 30, 1946' and substituting 'June 30, 1947.'

"SEC. 2. Section 6 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by striking out 'June 30, 1946' and substituting 'June 30, 1947.'

"SEC. 3. Title I of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting after section 1 thereof a new section as follows:

"'PURPOSES AND POLICIES IN THE TRANSITION PERIOD

"'SEC. 1A. (a) Objectives: The Congress hereby affirms—

"'(1) that because of abnormally excess spending power in relation to the presently available supply of commodities, rapid attainment of production equal to the public demand is one of the necessary and urgent objectives for the prevention of inflation and for the achievement of a reasonable stability in the general level of prices and rents, cost of living and costs of production (including labor costs), for the purposes set forth in section 1 of this Act and for the further purposes of protecting the real value of benefits provided by law for veterans and their dependents, of keeping faith with purchasers of United States War Bonds, and of making possible a successful transition to a peacetime economy of maximum employment, production, and purchasing power under a system of free enterprise;

"'(2) that unnecessary or unduly prolonged controls over prices and rents and use of subsidies would be inconsistent with the return to such a peacetime economy and would tend to repress and prevent the attainment of this and the other goals herein declared; and

"'(3) that adequate prices are necessary stimulants to the production thus desired and the expeditious attainment of said goals.

"'(b) Declaration of decontrol policy: Therefore it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that the Office of Price Administration, and other agencies of the Government, shall use their price, subsidy, and other powers to promote the earliest practicable balance between production and the demand therefor of commodities under their control, and that the general control of prices and the use of subsidy powers shall, subject to other specific provisions of this act, be terminated as rapidly as possible consistent with the policies and purposes set forth in this section and in no extent later than June 30, 1947, and on that date the Office of Price Administration shall be abolished.

"'(c) Recommendations by the President to the Congress: (1) As soon as practicable after the enactment of this section and in any event on or before January 15, 1947, the President shall recommend to the Congress such further legislation as in his judgment is needed to establish monetary, fiscal, and other policies which are adequate to supplement the control of prices and wages during the balance of the fiscal year 1947, and to insure that general control of prices and wages can be terminated by the end of that fiscal year without danger of inflation thereafter.

"'(2) On or before April 1, 1947, the President shall report to the Congress what, if any, commodities or classes of commodities, including housing accommodations, are in such critically short supply as to necessitate, in his judgment, the continuance of the powers granted by this act as to them after June 30, 1947, together with his recommendations as to established departments or agencies of the Government (other than the Office of Price Administration) which should be charged with the administration of such powers.

"'(d) Decontrol of nonagricultural commodities: (1) On or before December 31, 1946, the Administrator shall decontrol all nonagricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs, and prior to that date shall proceed with such decontrol as rapidly as, in his judgment, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect. In no event shall maximum prices be maintained after December 31, 1946, for any nonagricultural commodity or class of commodities unless the same has been expressly found by the Administrator to be important in relation to business costs or living costs.

"'(2) The Administrator shall provide for the prompt removal of maximum prices in the case of any nonagricultural commodity whenever the supply thereof exceeds or is in approximate balance with the demand therefor (including appropriate inventory requirements).

"'(3) Whenever, after a reasonable test period, it appears that the supply of a nonagricultural commodity which has been decontrolled is no longer consistent with the applicable decontrol standard, the Administrator, with the advance consent in writing of the Price Decontrol Board established under subsection (h), shall reestablish such maximum prices for the commodity, consistent with applicable provisions of law, as in his judgment may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

"'(e) Agricultural commodities: (1) On the first day of the first calendar month which begins more than thirty days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the Price Administrator each agricultural commodity which such Secretary determines to be in short supply. Thereafter, on the first day of each succeeding calendar month the Secretary shall certify modifications of such certification by adding other agricultural commodities which have become in short supply and by removing from such certification such commodities which he determines are no longer in short supply. No maximum price shall be applicable with respect to any agricultural commodity during any calendar month which begins more than thirty days after the date of enactment or this section, unless such commodity is certified to the Price Administrator under this paragraph as being in short supply.

"'(2) (A) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that maximum prices applicable to any agricultural commodity which is in short supply are impeding the necessary production of such commodity, he may recommend to the Price Administrator such adjustments in such maximum prices as the Secretary determines to be necessary to attain the necessary production of such commodity.

"'(B) The Secretary of Agriculture by December 31, 1946, shall recommend to the Price Administrator the removal of maximum prices on all agricultural commodities, whether or not in short supply, not important in relation to business costs or living costs, and prior to that date shall make such recommendations as rapidly as, in his judgment, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect.

"'(C) Within ten days after the receipt of any recommendation under this subsection for the adjustment of maximum prices applicable to any agricultural commodity, or for the removal of maximum prices on agricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs, the Price Administrator shall adjust or remove such maximum prices in accordance with such recommendations.

"'(3) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that an agricultural commodity with respect to which maximum prices have been removed is in short supply and that the reestablishment of maximum prices with respect thereto is necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act, the Secretary, with the written consent of the Price Decontrol Board, may recommend to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall establish, such maximum prices with respect to such commodity, consistent with applicable provisions of law, as in the judgment of the Secretary are necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

"'(4) For the purposes of this section—

"'(A) an agricultural commodity shall be deemed to be in short supply unless the supply of such commodity equals or exceeds the requirements for such commodity for the current marketing season;

"'(B) the term "agricultural commodity" shall be deemed to mean any agricultural commodity and any food or feed product processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity.

"'(5) Notwithstanding any other provision of this or any other law, except as provided in subsection (h), the Secretary of Agriculture, in exercising his functions under this Act, shall not be subject to the direction or control of any other appointive officer or agency in the executive branch of the Government, and no such officer or agency shall undertake to exercise any direction or control over the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to the exercise of such functions. The Secretary of Agriculture may at any time withdraw his approval of any action with respect to which his approval is required under this Act, and upon the withdrawal of his approval such action shall be rescinded.

"'(6) No maximum price and no regulation or order under this Act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any service rendered with respect to any agricultural commodity, unless a regulation or order establishing a maximum price with respect to such commodity had been issued under this Act prior to April 1, 1946.

"'(f) Saving provision: Nothing in this section shall limit the Administrator's authority to remove maximum prices for any nonagricultural commodity, or any agricultural commodity with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, at an earlier time than would be required by this section, if in his judgment or in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, as the case may be, such action would be consistent with the purposes of this section.

"'(g) Petitions for decontrol: (1) If in the judgment of the industry advisory committee appointed by the Administrator in accordance with section 2 (a) of this Act to advise and consult with respect to a commodity, the standards set forth in this section require the removal of maximum prices for such commodity, it may file a petition for the removal of such maximum prices. In the case of any nonagricultural commodity, such petition shall be filed with the Administrator in accordance with regulations prescribed by him. In the case of agricultural commodities, such petition shall be filed with the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with regulations prescribed by him and shall request that he make an appropriate certification or recommendation to the Price Administrator. The petition shall specifically state the grounds upon which the committee believes such action to be required and shall be accompanied by affidavits or other written evidence in support thereof:

"'(2) Within fifteen days after receiving a petition filed in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, the Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture, as the case may be, shall either grant the petition or inform the committee in writing why in his judgment the standards for decontrol stated in subsections (d) and (e) have not been satisfied with respect to the commodity involved. If the petition is not granted in full, the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall, within ten days after the receipt of a request by the committee for further consideration of its petition, hold a hearing before himself or before a deputy administrator (or, in the case of the Secretary, before such officer as he may designate) at which the committee may present its argument in support of the petition. The Consumers Advisory Committee and the Labor Advisory Committee appointed by the Administrator shall be given notice of any such hearing and an opportunity to present their views with respect to the petition and may, not later than five days prior to such hearing, present in writing evidence relating thereto. Within fifteen days after such hearing, the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall either grant the petition in full or furnish the industry advisory committee with a statement in writing of his reasons for denying it in whole or in part, together with a statement of any economic data or other facts of which he has taken official notice in connection with such denial.

"'(3) At any time within thirty days after the denial in whole or in part, following a hearing, of a petition filed under this subsection, the petitioning industry advisory committee may petition the Price Decontrol Board established under subsection (h) for a review of the action of the Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture. If the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, fails to act upon a petition within the time prescribed by paragraph (2), the industry advisory committee may, at any time within thirty days after the expiration of the time so prescribed, petition the Price Decontrol Board for the removal of maximum prices on the commodity involved.

"'(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to take away or impair any right of any person to protest, in accordance with the provisions of sections 203 and 204 of this Act, the further maintenance of maximum prices for a commodity under the standards of subsection (d) or (e): Provided, That the filing of such a protest or of a petition under paragraph 3 of this subsection shall not be grounds for staying any proceeding brought pursuant to section 205 of this Act or section 37 of the Criminal Code, and no retroactive effect shall be given to any judgment setting aside a provision of a regulation, order, or price schedule under the standards set forth in this section.

"'(h) Price decontrol board: (1) There is hereby established as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government a Price Decontrol Board, to be composed of three members appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than two members of the Board shall be members of the same political party. Two members of the Board shall constitute a quorum, and a vacancy in the membership of the Board shall not impair the power of the remaining members to exercise its functions. Members of the Board shall receive compensation at the rate of $12,000 a year.

"'(2) The Board shall appoint and fix the compensation of a secretary for the Board and such other officers and employees as may be necessary to enable it to perform its functions. The Board may make such expenditures as may be necessary for performing its functions. The Board may, with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, utilize the facilities, services, and personnel of other agencies or departments of the Government. The Board shall maintain an office in charge of its secretary in the District of Columbia, which shall be open on all business days for the receipt of petitions for review and the transaction of other business of the Board. The Board shall prescribe regulations and procedures for the conduct of its business which will provide for summary disposition, with the utmost expedition consistent with sound decision, of petitions filed with the Board.

"'(3) A petition made under subsection (g) (3) shall specifically state the grounds upon which the petitioning industry advisory committee believes that maximum prices on the commodity involved should be removed. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served on the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, who shall within such time as may be fixed by the Board certify and file with the Board a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the petition under subsection (g) as are material. Such transcript shall include a statement in writing of the Administrator's or Secretary's reasons for believing that maximum prices on the commodity involved should not be removed, together with a statement of any economic data or other facts of which he has taken official notice. At the earliest practicable time the Board shall conduct a hearing upon the petition, at which the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, and the committee shall be given an opportunity to present their views and argument orally or in writing. If application is made to the Board by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence, the Board may permit such evidence to be introduced or filed with it if it deems it material and determines that such evidence could not reasonably have been offered or included in the proceedings under subsection (g). At the earliest practicable time after the hearing on any petition, the Board shall make and issue an order specifying the extent, if any, to which maximum prices on the commodity involved shall be removed. The Board shall order the removal of such maximum prices if and to the extent that in its judgment the standards of decontrol stated in subsection (d) or (e) have been satisfied with respect to the commodity involved. The Administrator shall remove maximum prices with respect to the commodity in question within such time and to such extent as shall be specified in the order of the Board. Orders of the Board shall not be subject to modification or review by any other department or agency or by any court.

"'(4) No petition may be filed with the Board with respect to any commodity within a period of three months after the issuance of an order of the Board with respect to the same commodity.

"'(5) The members of the Board may serve as such without regard to the provisions of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code (18 U. S. C., secs. 198 and 203) or section 19 (e) of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, except insofar as such sections may prohibit any such member from receiving compensation in respect of any particular matter which is within the jurisdiction of the Board.

"'(6) If the number of petitions filed with the Board should at any time become so great as to prevent the Board from promptly conducting hearings upon such petitions, the Board shall appoint such hearing commissioners as it deems necessary in order to expedite the transaction of its business. The Board may authorize one or more of the hearing commissioners so appointed to conduct the hearing upon any petition under this subsection and to exercise the authority of the Board with respect to such hearing. After a hearing conducted before a hearing commissioner, the commissioner shall make recommendations consistent with this subsection to the Board concerning its action with respect to the petition. If the Board approves such recommendations, it shall issue an order in conformity therewith. If the Board does not approve such recommendations, the Board may issue such order as it deems proper upon the record or may conduct a new hearing upon the petition before the Board.'

"SEC. 4. Section 2 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'In administering the provisions of this subsection relating to the establishment of industry advisory committee, the Administrator, upon the request of a substantial portion of the industry in any region, shall promptly appoint a regional industry advisory committee for such region.'

"SEC. 5. Section 2 (b) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph as follows:

"'After the date upon which this paragraph takes effect, the Administrator, when establishing rent ceilings on hotels or when passing upon applications for adjustments of rent ceilings on hotels, is authorized to take into consideration the distinction between transient hotels and residential or apartment hotels, including the difference in the investment, operation, expenses, and mechanical details of operation between the transient hotels and the residential and apartment hotels, and is directed to classify separately by regulation (1) transient hotels, (2) residential and apartment hotels, and (3) tourist courts, rooming houses, and boarding houses.'

"SEC. 6. (a) The last paragraph of section 2 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended by the Stabilization Extension Act of 1944, shall not apply with respect to operations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation: Provided, That with respect to such corporations and such operations, the making of subsidy payments and buying for resale at a loss shall be limited as follows:

"Payments and purchases may be made with respect to operations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, which involve subsidies and anticipated losses as follows:

"(1) With respect to rubber produced in Latin America and Africa for which commitments were made before January 1, 1946, $31,000,000.

"(2) With respect to copper, lead, and zinc, in the form of premium price payments, $100,000,000: Provided, That (A) premiums shall be paid on ores mined or removed from mine dumps or tailing piles before July 1, 1947, though shipped and/or processed and marketed subsequently thereto; and that (B) the premium price plan for copper, lead, and zinc shall be extended until June 30, 1947, on terms not less favorable to the producer than heretofore and (i) adjustments shall be made to encourage exploration and development work, (ii) adequate allowances shall be made for depreciation and depletion, and (iii) all classes of premiums shall be noncancelable unless necessary in order to make individual adjustments of income to specific mines.

"(3) With respect to purchases by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, of such tin ores and concentrates as it deems necessary to insure continued operation of the Texas City tin smelter.

"(4) With respect to noncrop programs, 1946 crop program operations and the 1947 crop program operations relating to sugar, flour, petroleum, petroleum products, and other domestic and imported materials and commodities, $869,000,000: Provided, That the operations authorized under this subparagraph (4) shall be progressively reduced, shall be terminated not later than April 1, 1947, and shall not cost more than $629,000,000 during the last six months of the calendar year 1946. Operations shall not be carried out under authority of this subparagraph (4) with respect to any commodity for any period during which maximum prices on such commodity are not in effect under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended: Provided, That subsidies with respect to petroleum produced from stripper wells may be continued at not to exceed the existing rates. No new subsidy or purchase and sale operations shall be undertaken under the authority of this subparagraph (4), and no change shall be made in the basis of any existing operations for which funds are made available under this subparagraph which will increase the rate of any subsidy or the rate of loss incurred with respect to any commodity.

"(b) When any direct or indirect subsidy to an industry is reduced or terminated, any maximum price applicable to the product affected shall be correspondingly increased, except in the case of transportation subsidies and differential subsidies to high-cost producers.

"(c) Where roll-back subsidies have previously been or presently are in effect, and have been discontinued, or shall hereafter be discontinued, the industries which have received such subsidies shall be permitted to increase their ceiling prices at least an amount equivalent to the amount of the discontinued roll-back subsidy. Such price increase shall become effective either upon discontinuance of the roll-back subsidy or upon passage of this Act, whichever date is the later. For the purposes of this paragraph, the term 'roll-back subsidies' means subsidy payments, or purchases and sales of a commodity at a loss by the Government of the United States (including any Government-owned or controlled corporation), or contracts therefor, which resulted directly or indirectly in the lowering of ceiling prices below the maximum price levels established by the Office of Price Administration prior to the institution of the subsidy payments or purchases and sales at a loss, or the execution of the contracts therefor, whichever date is the earlier.

"(d) Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the provisions of Public Laws 30, 88, 164, and 328 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, or to prevent the use of the sums authorized in such laws to fulfill obligations incurred prior to July 1, 1946, with respect to operations prior to such date.

"(e) Nothwithstanding any of the foregoing provisions of this section 6, 1946 and 1947 crop program operations with respect to sugar, may, while maximum prices are in effect with respect to sugar, be continued until such crops are processed and distributed, and the cost of 1946 crop program operations with respect to sugar may be charged to the funds authorized by Public Law 30, Seventy-ninth Congress, as amended by Public Law 328, Seventy-ninth Congress. For the purpose of this section 6, no subsidy program operation on sugar shall be considered to be a new subsidy.

"(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed as a limitation upon operations authorized by the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946 (Public Law 388, Seventy-ninth Congress).

"SEC. 7. Section 2 (i) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(i) For the purposes of this Act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, fish and other sea foods shall be deemed to be agriculture commodities, and commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from fish or other sea foods shall be deemed to be manufactured in whole or substantial part from agricultural commodities: Provided, That the provisions of section 3 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall not be applicable with respect to fish and other sea foods and commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, but the maximum price established for any fish or sea food commodity or for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom shall not be below the average price therefor in the year 1942.'

"SEC. 8. Section 2 (j) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following: 'or (5) as authorizing any regulation or order of the Administrator to fix a quantity or percentage of any product which any seller may sell to any buyer.'

"SEC. 9. Section 2 (k) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting the words 'or any operator of any service establishment' after the words 'seller of goods at retail.'

"SEC. 10. Section 2 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"'(o) No maximum price shall be applicable to any item served in any restaurant or other eating establishment if such item consists in whole or major part of a commodity to which no maximum price is applicable with respect to sales to restaurants and other eating establishments, unless the maximum price of such item, when sold by such restaurant or other eating establishment, is determined, under the applicable maximum price regulation or order, by the addition of a customary margin to the acquisition cost of such item.

"'(p) After July 1, 1946, no maximum price regulation or order shall be issued or continued in effect requiring any seller to limit his sales by any weighted average price limitation based on his previous sales.

"'(q) In the case of any retail industry, the principal sales of which consisted during the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, of sales of a commodity or commodities the production or retail distribution of which has been reduced, for a period of three years beginning on or after March 2, 1942, by 75 per centum or more below such production or retail distribution for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, as a result of the operation of any governmental regulation or restriction, the Administrator shall not, in establishing maximum prices under this section, reduce established peacetime retail trade discounts or mark-ups or dealer handling charges for any such commodity before the retail unit sales of such commodity for a period of six months shall have reached the average annual retail unit sales thereof for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive.

"'(r) In the case of any wholesale industry, the principal sales of which consisted during the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, of sales of a commodity or commodities, the production or wholesale distribution of which has been reduced for a period of three years beginning on or after March 2, 1942, by 75 per centum or more below such production or wholesale distribution for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, as the result of the operation of any governmental regulation or restriction, the Administrator shall not in establishing maximum prices under this section reduce established wholesale trade discounts or normal wholesale mark-ups for any such commodity prevailing on March 2, 1942, before the wholesale unit sales of such commodity for a period of six months shall have reached the average annual wholesale unit sales thereof for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive.

"'(s) No maximum price regulation or order shall require the reduction of the established peacetime discounts or mark-ups for the sale of any manufactured or processed commodity (treating as a single commodity for the purposes of this paragraph all commodities in a line of related commodities which, for the purpose of establishing manufacturers' and processors' maximum prices, have been placed by the Office of Price Administration under a single regulation) if the retail, wholesale, or other distributive trade selling such commodity shows that the commodity constituted approximately one-half or more of the gross sales income of a majority of the persons engaged in such trade in 1945 and that, in the first quarter of 1946, the deliveries of such commodity to such distributive trade were less than 100 per centum of the deliveries thereof in the corresponding quarter of 1945.

"'(t) No maximum price applicable to any distributor, wholesaler, or retailer, shall be established or maintained for any commodity below a price which will return to such distributor, wholesaler, or retailer with respect to such commodity his January 1, 1946 discount or the sum of (1) total current cost of acquisition plus (2) his January 1, 1946 mark-up. The January 1, 1946 discount or mark-up shall be the percentage discount or percentage mark-up of such distributor, wholesaler, or retailer in effect on January 1, 1946.

"'(u) After the date upon which this subsection takes effect, no maximum price shall be established or maintained, under this Act or under any other provision of law, with respect to any new commodity when the Administrator upon application finds that its use, in the production, manufacturing, or processing of any commodity or commodities, without increasing the cost to the ultimate user, either increases the life or reduces the cost of production, manufacture, or processing of the commodity or commodities produced, manufactured or processed. As used in this subsection the term "new commodity" means a commodity which was not commercially or industrially available prior to January 30, 1942.'

"SEC. 11. The Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting after section 5 thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 6. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of this Act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, but only after the procedure prescribed in subsection (d) hereof, no maximum price applicable to any producer, manufacturer, or processor shall be established or maintained for any product below the price of such producer, manufacturer, or processor for such product during the base period, increased by an amount equal to (or by a percentage factor which on a weighted average basis is equal to) the increase in the weighted average of the per unit costs of a reasonable number of typical producers, manufacturers, or processors with respect to such product since the base period, but if such product as now produced, manufactured, or processed has a different size, quality, or other characteristic, then with appropriate adjustments for such differences. This section shall not apply with respect to any new product which was not produced, manufactured, or processed in the base period, nor with respect to any product if the weighted average per unit costs of a reasonable number of typical producers, manufacturers, or processors with respect to such product has decreased since the base period. In determining costs for the purposes of this section, all costs shall be included which are considered as such under the established accounting practices of the industry.

"'(b) For the purposes of this section—

"'(1) in the case of any product with respect to which a maximum price established by a price schedule issued pursuant to any Executive order was in effect between October 1 and October 15, 1941, the "base period" shall be the two-week period immediately preceding the date upon which a maximum price so established first became effective with respect to such product; and

"'(2) in the case of any other product, the "base period" shall be the period between October 1 and October 15, 1941, except that, if in the case of any product there were no prevailing prices during the period prescribed in clause (1) or (2), as the case may be, or the prevailing prices during such period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, the base period shall be the nearest period not exceeding 60 days, in which, in the judgment of the Administrator, the prevailing prices were substantially normal.

"'(c) As used in this section, "product" shall mean any major item, or any article different in character from other products of the industry; but all the styles, models, or other varieties of any such item or article shall be considered as one product.

"'(d) Any industry advisory committee may apply to the Administrator for the application to any product of the standard set forth in subsection (a) hereof, and shall present with the application comprehensive evidence with relation to the increase in cost of such product from the base period to the date of such application. The Administrator shall consider the evidence so presented and all evidence otherwise available to him and shall, within sixty days after the receipt of such application, determine the increase in the weighted average of the per unit costs of a reasonable number of typical producers, manufacturers, or processors with respect to such product since the base period and announce the amount of such increase. Such increase in weighted average of the per unit costs may be determined and announced in terms of a specified sum per unit or in terms of a percentage factor, as the Administrator may elect. In determining such weighted average of the per unit costs of producers, manufacturers, or processors, it shall not be necessary to obtain detailed cost accounting figures from any producer, manufacturer, or processor who does not already have such figures or to obtain the usual detailed accounting reports from more than a reasonable number of typical producers, manufacturers, and processors, but the Administrator shall promptly reach a conclusion from the best evidence available to him. He shall exclude from his calculations any producers, manufacturers, or processors whose costs by reason of special conditions are completely abnormal. If the Administrator fails to determine and announce the increase in the weighted average of the per unit costs for any product within the sixty-day period prescribed in this subsection, the industry advisory committee concerned may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals, created pursuant to section 204, for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the Administrator to determine and announce such increase within such time, not to exceed thirty days, as may be fixed by the court. If the Administrator fails to determine and announce such increase within the time so fixed, no maximum price shall thereafter be applicable with respect to any sale of such product by any seller.

"'(e) Whenever the Administrator has announced the increase in the weighted average of the per unit costs for any product under subsection (d), it shall be lawful for any producer, manufacturer, or processor to sell such product at the price per unit he charged in the base period, plus the increase per unit so announced by the Administrator, with appropriate adjustments for differences in size, quality, or other characteristics.

"'(f) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, in the case of any agricultural commodity, the base period shall be the calendar year 1941, and in lieu of computing the maximum prices required or permitted by this section by adding the increase in the weighted average of per unit costs to the base period prices of particular producers, such maximum prices shall be computed by adding such increase to the average 1941 price for such agricultural commodity (with appropriate adjustments for grade location, and seasonal differentials) as determined and announced by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"'(g) The provisions of this section shall not apply with respect to any maximum price applicable to manufacturers or processors in the case of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn or wool or wool yarn.'

"SEC. 12. (a) The second sentence of section 205 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) Such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50, as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge or overcharges if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation, order, or price schedule in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation.'

"(b) Section 205 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"'The Administrator may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States, or, if such action has been instituted, the Administrator shall withdraw the same—

"'(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the commodity acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the Administrator or any regional administrator or district director of the Office of Price Administration; or

"'(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of a commodity to any agency of the Government, or to any public housing authority whose operations are supervised or financed in whole or in part by any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

"'The Administrator shall not institute or maintain any enforcement action under this subsection against any manufacturer of apparel items where the Administrator shall determine (1) that the transactions on which such proceeding is based consisted of the manufacturer's selling such an item at his published March 1942 price list prices instead of his March 1942 delivered prices, and (2) that the seller's customary pricing patterns for related apparel items would be distorted by a requirement that his ceilings be the March 1942 delivered prices. The Administrator's determinations under this paragraph shall be subject to review by the Emergency Court of Appeals in accordance with sections 203 and 204.'

"SEC. 13. The third sentence of paragraph (2) of section 205 (f) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'If any such court finds that such person has violated any of the provisions of such license, regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement after the receipt of the warning notice, such court shall issue an order suspending the license to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell the commodity or commodities in connection with which the violation has occurred, or to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell any commodity or commodities with respect to which a regulation or order issued under section 2, or a price schedule effective in accordance with the provisions of section 206, is applicable; but no suspension shall be for a period of more than twelve months, and if the defendant proves that the violation in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation, then in that event no suspension shall be ordered or directed.'

"SEC. 14. Section 3 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'On and after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, it shall be unlawful to establish, or maintain, any maximum price applicable to manufacturers or processors, for any major item in the case of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn or wool or wool yarn, unless the maximum price for such major item is fixed and maintained at not less than the sum of the following:

"'(1) The cotton or wool cost (which must be computed at not less than the parity price or the current cost, whichever is greater, of the grade and staple of cotton or wool used in such item, delivered at the mill);

"'(2) A weighted average of mill conversion costs; and

"'(3) A reasonable profit (which shall not be less than a weighted average profit for each unit of such item equal to the weighted average of the profit earned on an equivalent unit of such item during the period 1939 to 1941, both inclusive).'

"SEC. 15. The Secretary of Agriculture, through the Commodity Credit Corporation or otherwise, is hereby authorized to allocate feed which he controls to feeders of livestock and poultry in domestic areas which he may determine to be in an emergency shortage condition with respect to animal and poultry feed.

"SEC. 16. (a) In the event producers of wheat are required by an order issued pursuant to the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended, to sell all or any part of wheat delivered to an elevator prior to April 1, 1947, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall offer to purchase the wheat so required to be sold at a price determined as follows: The purchase price paid for the wheat shall be the market price at the point of delivery as of any date the producer may elect between the date of delivery and March 31, 1947, inclusive: Provided, however, That only one election may be made for each lot of wheat: And provided further, That the producer may not elect a date prior to the date on which he mails a written notice to Commodity Credit Corporation of his election. In the event the producer does not notify Commodity Credit Corporation in writing by March 31, 1947, of his election of a date for determining the market price, such date shall be deemed to be March 31, 1947.

"(b) Any producer of wheat who, prior to the date of enactment of this Act, has sold any wheat pursuant to the requirements of paragraph (ee) (1) of War Food Order Numbered 144, may, at any time within thirty days after the date of enactment of this Act, pay to the Commodity Credit Corporation a sum equal to the amount for which he sold such wheat. Any producer paying any such sum to the Commodity Credit Corporation shall be deemed to have sold and delivered to the Commodity Credit Corporation as of the date he pays such sum a quantity of wheat equal in grade and quality to the quantity sold by him pursuant to such requirements and the purchase price to be paid to him for such wheat shall be determined in the same manner as in the case of a sale of wheat to the Commodity Credit Corporation pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) of this section.

"SEC. 17. This Act may be cited as the 'Price Control Extension Act of 1946.'

"SEC. 18. The provisions of this Act shall take effect upon the date of its enactment; but insofar as such provisions require any change in any maximum price, such provisions shall not be deemed to require such change to be made before the thirtieth day following the date of enactment of this Act."

RETURN OF PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT OFFICES TO STATE OPERATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 4437) to provide for the return of public employment offices to State operation, to amend the act of Congress approved June 6, 1933 (48 Stat. 113), and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next committee amendment was, on page 16, in line 13, after the words "detail of", to strike out "such employees" and insert "the employees referred to in paragraph (1) (a) of this section."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BALL. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BALL. Was the language of the committee amendment beginning in line 24, at the bottom of page 15, with the word "or", and ending in line 12 on page 16 with the word "section", adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment was agreed to.

The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 16, in line 15, after the word "following", to strike out "proviso: Provided further, That so" and insert "provisions. So."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, in line 18 after the word "necessary", to strike out "are authorized to be made" and insert "shall be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, in line 22, after the words "prior to the", to strike out "enactment of this act" and insert "effective date of the transfer of the employment offices to the State under this act)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, in line 3, after the words "opportunity to", to strike out "qualify" and insert "acquire eligibility."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, in line 5, after the word "this", to strike out "paragraph" and insert "section."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, in line 11, after the word "amended", to insert "by this act."

Mr. DONNELL. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. Is it in order at this time to offer an amendment to subdivision (2) of section 301?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not until the committee amendments have been completed. It will be in order to offer an amendment at that time.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 17, line 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 24, to insert the following:

SEC. 303. The Civil Service Retirement Act approved May 29, 1930, as amended, is amended by inserting after the first paragraph of section 5 thereof a new paragraph as follows:

"Service rendered with a State employment security agency between June 6, 1933, and January 1, 1942, by any person who was appointed to a position in the Social Security Board under Executive Order 8990 of December 23, 1941, on or after January 1, 1942, shall for the purposes of this act, be considered service as an employee of the United States, subject to the following limitations: This paragraph shall not apply with respect to any period of such service rendered by any individual with the State employment security agency of any State (1) unless he shall have served continuously as an officer or employee of the United States for at least 1 year after December 31, 1941 (except that this limitation shall not apply in the case of any individual automatically separated from the service under section 2 of this act prior to the date of enactment of this paragraph); (2) if he shall have returned to employment with such State at any time prior to the end of 1 year after the return to State operation of the employment offices in such State; (3) if such period of such service is used in computing a retirement or similar benefit payable in whole or in part out of funds provided by a State or political subdivision under a retirement system. The annuity of any person to whom this paragraph applies and who shall have been retired under the provisions of this act, shall be recomputed whenever such recomputation is necessary to give effect to the provisions of this paragraph. Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, any person who was appointed to a position in the Social Security Board under Executive Order 8990 of December 23, 1941, and who shall have returned to employment with the State at any time prior to the end of 1 year after the return to State operation of the employment offices in such State, shall, if he so elects, be paid a refund of the total amount of his deductions and deposits under this act, together with interest to the date of termination of his service with the Federal Government; and such person shall not receive any annuity benefits under this act based on the service covered by the refund unless he is subsequently reinstated, retransferred, or reappointed to a position coming within the purview of this act and redeposits all moneys, except voluntary contributions, so refunded to him, together with interest at 4 per centum compounded on December 31 of each year, except that interest shall not be required covering any period of separation from the service. As used in this paragraph, the term 'State employment security agency' means an agency to which the Federal Government has made grant for administrative expenses for the administration of State unemployment compensation laws or State employment services, under the act entitled 'An act to provide for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such system, and for other purposes', approved June 6, 1933, as amended (or under title III of the Social Security Act, as amended), and the term 'State' includes Alaska and Hawaii."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is all one committee amendment. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 7, to strike out title IV, as follows:

TITLE IV

SEC. 401. For the purpose of determining what officer or agency of the Government is to perform any of the functions of the Secretary of Labor under this act and the act of June 6, 1933, as amended and supplemented, after the termination of title I of the First War Powers Act, 1941, the vesting by this act and by the act of June 6, 1933, as amended and supplemented, of functions in the Secretary of Labor shall have the same effect as if constituting a transfer by the President under title I of the First War Powers Act, 1941, of functions of the Social Security Board to the Secretary of Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, on page 17, line 7, at the end thereof, I move to strike out the period and insert the following: "; or (3) has arranged to comply with (1) or (2) above to the extent permitted under the law of such State."

Mr. President, the basis of this amendment is my understanding that at least in one State—and it may well be in others—there are presently existing provisions of law which are contrary to a portion of the committee amendment thus far adopted. The particular illustration I have before me is in the State of Massachusetts. There is a statute in Massachusetts, namely, chapter 535, approved June 12, 1943, which contains this language:

All employees, except as otherwise provided in this section, in the division of employment security who had been appointed on a permanent basis, including employees who had not completed their probationary period, and whose employment in the service of the Commonwealth was terminated on December 31, 1941, by reason of Executive Order No. 8990, issued by the President of the United States on December 23, 1941, and who, for the purpose of service during the existing state of war, were inducted into the United States Employment Service, shall be reinstated in the division of employment security or its successor, providing the offices or positions formerly held by them are reestablished in the division of employment security or its successor.

Mr. President, as I understand the effect of subdivision (1) in section 301, it is that a person now a Federal employee may not be separated from the service except for one of the three grounds referred to a while ago in the course of the debate.

In the State of Massachusetts it would seem from what I have thus far read from chapter 535 of the laws of Massachusetts that the returning veteran would under the law of Massachusetts have an absolute right to reinstatement. Therefore, the amendment which I propose is, in effect, that the State must, in its plan, either make provision for the retention in the Statewide system, as provided in subsection (1), or request the detail of such employee, as provided in subsection (2), or arrange to comply with subsection (1) or subsection (2) to the extent permitted under the law of such State. That is the reason for offering this amendment, and I respectfully move its adoption.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator to read his amendment again.

Mr. DONNELL. On page 17, at the end of line 7, it is proposed to strike out the period, and insert a semicolon and the following language:

or (3) has arranged to comply with (1) or (2) above to the extent permitted under the law of such State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL].

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, the committee has had no opportunity to examine the amendment; but I am advised that the effect would be to nullify subsection (1) and (2).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] a question. Earlier in the day I was called from the Chamber for a conference. Apparently while I was absent action was taken on section 3, on page 5, line 18, with regard to maintenance of a farm placement service. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if that means that the powers of the Secretary of Agriculture over farm labor, as they have existed under the Wagner-Peyser Act, are now to be transferred to the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. BALL. That language is now in the Wagner-Peyser Act, and has been ever since 1933. What happened was that during the war the Appropriations Committee recommended special legislation placing the farm placement service in the Department of Agriculture. As I understand, that legislation in the appropriation expires on January 1, 1947. However, I believe that a joint resolution extending it through the next fiscal year is to be introduced in both Houses before we adjourn.

Early in the next session we hope to arrive at some kind of a permanent solution to the farm placement problem. As the Senator perhaps knows, in a number of States the Secretary of Agriculture is now contracting with the United States Employment Service to handle some or all of the farm placement functions. The situation is pretty much confused. We wanted to preserve in this act the basic authority to maintain a farm placement service until we dispose of the question by permanent legislation. Otherwise there will be no legislative authority.

Mr. MORSE. In order that there may be no misunderstanding I should like to ask the Senator one further question. Am I correct in understanding that if this bill passes, containing the language in lines 18 and 19 on page 5 with reference to the maintenance of a farm placement service, the present administrative function of the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to farm labor will be continued?

Mr. BALL. It will remain unchanged. That is my understanding and interpretation.

Mr. MORSE. I think it is important to have that understanding for legal interpretation of the bill. I am perfectly willing to accept that understanding for the present and not press for further changes in the law until, as the Senator from Minnesota has suggested, we can take up a permanent measure in regard to a placement service for farm workers. With that understanding, all I ask permission to do at the present time is to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter which I have received from the Oregon State Farmers' Association on this point, in which is set out clear evidence that the farmers of the Nation would consider it very disruptive to have the present powers of the Secretary of Agriculture transferred, as of now, to the Secretary of Labor. But with the assurance of the Senator from Minnesota that that would not be the result of the bill in its present form, I will not press the question further. I offer the letter, with the statement that I wish to be associated with the arguments set forth in the letter.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OREGON STATE FARMERS' ASSOCIATION,
Portland, Oreg., June 25, 1946.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Pursuant to my conversation with you today, I would like to submit the following information.

A national conference which has been in session during the past week is composed of about 50 men representing agricultural interests in 36 States. They have come together for the purpose of attempting to acquaint executive officials of the Department of Agriculture, Senators, and Congressmen with the desires of agriculture with respect to agricultural labor, both for the present emergency and for the long-range program to follow. These two problems are closely tied together and it is difficult to consider them as separate problems.

As you will recall, last fall when representatives from various groups of agriculture obtained reenactment of Public Law No. 229 for the continuation of the imported labor program for the year 1946, commitment was made to Congress that those groups represented at that time would attempt to get a wider representation and make known to Congress during the fall of 1946 their desires for a long-range program.

The desire by the Members of Congress to adjourn this present session in July disrupted plans of agriculture with regard to the presentation of a farm-labor program this fall. It then became the best judgment of this group that since they wish very much to hold the nucleus of the present program for consideration in the long-range program, and in view of the fact that liquidation of the present program by December 31, 1946, would require the Labor Branch of the Department of Agriculture to commence repatriation of foreign workers early in the fall and at the same time start liquidation of all property, housing and camps held by the Labor Branch. This would remove workers and housing facilities from most areas during the peak of harvest and in some areas before the harvest actually began.

In view of these facts, it was felt it would be necessary to ask Congress to extend the authority of the present Labor Branch of the Department of Agriculture to June 30, 1947. We requested Congressman FLANNAGAN'S committee to consider the request, and, as a result, Mr. FLANNAGAN introduced a continuing resolution (H. R. 6828). This bill is now on the calendar of the House. At the same time, Congressman CANNON'S committee requested the Department of Agriculture to submit a budget for this 6-month period (January 1 through June 30, 1947).

The conference has appointed a committee with representatives from all sections of the United States to request consideration of all States interested to submit proposals for such permanent domestic labor program, and this committee will meet on September 9, 1946, to combine the proposals from the various sections of the United States into a proposal to be laid before Congress for its consideration.

With regard to this permanent program, agriculture is unanimous that they do not wish to have agricultural labor transferred out of the Department of Agriculture, but are very desirous of maintaining an agricultural labor program in the Department of Agriculture because of the following reasons:

1. Previous to the war, under the various State employment service organizations, agriculture was relegated to a back-seat position. Industry was consistently and constantly given the best workers and no referrals to agriculture were made until industries' needs were met or successful placement could not be made, which resulted in agriculture receiving a very low-grade type of worker, if at all.

2. We feel that a domestic labor program properly coordinating the needs of the agricultural-producing areas of the United States to meet planting, cultivation, and harvesting can and will result in a better wage and higher earnings, with the resultant raising of annual incomes of agricultural workers which will assist materially in raising the type of worker attracted to agriculture.

3. The type of direction and the thought given by the Labor Department is slanted entirely toward the organized industrial worker, which is a very different concept of management and direction than that required in agriculture and which we believe is not the type that can in any way be imposed upon agricultural labor to any degree of success, either to the worker or the employer.

4. Likewise, it is proposed to transfer the authority of our agricultural labor camps to the supervision of the Federal Housing Administration. As you know, Senator, their authority is wide and is to furnish housing for all types of people and workers, and since many of our agricultural farm labor camps are not used by agricultural laborers a small portion of each year, we believe that under the authority of Federal Housing Administration they would fill these camps during the slack periods with industrial workers with the result that in very few years these camps would all be used only by urban populations,

For these reasons we seek your assistance in preventing the passage of House Joint Resolution 4437 with the clause beginning on page 5, line 18, continuing for four lines thereafter, which transfers all this activity to the Department of Labor, giving additional broad powers never possessed by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Secretary of Labor. We are very fearful of the consequences of the Secretary of Labor having any authority over agricultural labor, much less the broadened and increased powers in this amendment.

We appreciate your indulgence in considering our problem and respectfully seek your continued support of our efforts in seeking a satisfactory solution to the problems of agriculture.

If any further information is desired do not hesitate to call on me.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM H. TOLBERT,
Executive Secretary, Oregon State Farmers' Association.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated. Before offering it, I should like to perfect it by correcting a slight error. In line 7 of the amendment appears the figure "491." It should be "49", followed by a lower-case letter "l."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified accordingly. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, after line 3, it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 19 on page 14, being titles I and II, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

The Secretary of Labor shall provide for the return to State operation not later than December 31, 1946, or such earlier date as he may deem feasible, of public employment offices in an orderly and expeditious manner, which offices shall thereafter be operated under and in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 6, 1933, as amended, to January 1, 1942 (29 U. S. C. 49–491): Provided, That no State shall be required to make any appropriation as provided in section 5 (a) of said act of June 6, 1933, as amended, to January 1, 1942, prior to July 1, 1948.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the committee amendment, as it is now before the Senate, consists of three titles, titles I, II, and III. The amendment which I have proposed undertakes to strike out title I and title II, and to substitute the language set forth in the amendment, which has been read by the clerk.

It will be observed that this amendment directs the Secretary of Labor to "provide for the return to State operation not later than December 31, 1946, or such earlier date as he may deem feasible, of public employment offices in an orderly and expeditious manner, which offices shall thereafter be operated under and in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 6, 1933, as amended, to January 1, 1942 * * *: Provided, That no State shall be required to make any appropriation as provided in section 5 (a) of said act of June 6, 1933, as amended, to January 1, 1942, prior to July 1, 1948."

This amendment proceeds upon the fundamental proposition that the Federal Government should return to the States the employment-service facilities in the condition in which they were received, and subject to the law under which they were received, except only for such necessary incidental transitional provisions as may be required.

The act which is referred to in the amendment, the act of June 6, 1933, is the Wagner-Peyser Act. It will be observed that the amendment proposes that the services, after being returned to the States not later than December 31, 1946, shall be operated under and in accordance with the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act, as it was amended to January 1, 1942. January 1, 1942, was the date on which the various services were taken over by the Federal Government.

Yesterday I spoke at some length in regard to the theory upon which this amendment was predicated, and I shall endeavor to make my remarks as brief as possible.

The turning over of these facilities to the Federal Government occurred pursuant to a telegraphic message sent by the President of the United States on December 19, 1941, to the Governors of the respective States. That message was read yesterday to the Senate. As Senators may recall, it refers to the fact that the country was actually at war, "and it is more than ever necessary that we utilize to the fullest possible extent all the manpower and womanpower of this country to increase our production of war materials."

The message further referred to the fact that "this result can be accomplished by centralizing recruiting work into one agency." Pursuant to the request of the President, thus communicated to the Governors of the several States, each and every Governor complied with the request and turned over the State facilities to the United States Government through telegrams or such other messages as were deemed appropriate by the Governors.

I invite attention to the fact that the Governors of the several States have uniformly understood that the transaction by which these facilities were turned over to the Federal Government constituted not a gift, not an irrevocable transfer of title, but a loan. Yesterday I called attention to a number of telegrams from Governors of various States with respect to this transaction, and with respect to their views as to the conditions under which the facilities should be returned to the respective States.

I also called attention to the fact that the Federal Government itself considered the transaction to be a loan. It was pointed out yesterday that the Senate has passed upon this very proposition several times. On page 24 of Public Law No. 124, approved by the President on July 3, 1945, the following provision appears:

> That the Employment Service facilities, property, and personnel loaned by the States to the United States Employment Service, shall be returned to the States not later than 3 months after the termination of hostilities in the war with Japan as determined by Presidential proclamation or by concurrent resolution of Congress.

As pointed out yesterday, not only was that act passed by the Congress, but it was approved by the President. Thus, both the executive and the legislative departments of the Government recognized the fact that the transaction by which the facilities were turned over to the United States was a loan.

I also pointed out that in the general Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944 the Senate used the following language:

> The Employment Service facilities, property, and personnel loaned by the States to the United States Employment Service, shall be returned to the States not later than 90 days after the enactment of this act.

Then, Mr. President, in this connection I pointed out finally, on yesterday, that by the conference report which relates to House bill 4407, the so-called rescission bill, the managers appointed on the part of the House of Representatives used the following language:

> No. 21, relating to the United States Employment Service: Accepts the Senate provision for returning to the States the employment services which were loaned to the Federal Government at the beginning of 1942, pursuant to the request of the President, but provides for an outside return date of 100 days after the enactment of the bill, instead of 120 days, as the Senate amendment proposed.

So Mr. President, I take it that there can be no question that the transaction was a loan; and by reason of that fact, there follows without question the legal conclusion that the property should be returned to the owners, the States, in substantially the same situation and certainly under the same laws as were applicable at the time when it was taken over by the Federal Government.

I shall not undertake this afternoon to read again the numerous telegrams which were presented here yesterday from the governors of the various States of the United States. Those telegrams reflect these views. However, I should like to mention briefly the fact that the committee amendment to House bill 4437 does not constitute a return of these facilities to the States in the condition in which they were received or under the law under which those facilities were received by the United States Government. There are a number of very important differences between the conditions imposed by House bill 4437 and the conditions under which the facilities were received by the Federal Government. For instance, subsection (b) of section 9, on page 12 of the bill, authorizes the Secretary of Labor, in the event of failure on the part of the States to be eligible for funds, thereupon to step in and operate the system for the State during the period prescribed; and by the request of the governor of the State, as has been pointed out on the floor of the Senate, that may be an indefinite period. That provision is a very marked and very material difference from the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act as amended up to January 1, 1942. It will be remembered that in the latter measure, namely, the one which was in existence at the time when these facilities were taken over by the Federal Government, there was no provision whatsoever—except a temporary provision set forth therein, which has been referred to today—by which the Federal Government could take posession of the facilities and could operate them. Section 9 of the Wagner-Peyser Act provided, not for a taking over and possession, but for a revocation of existing certificates under which moneys were to be paid to the States by the Federal Government in the event of a violation of the plans which had been approved under the act. So, Mr. President, House bill 4437, in this very important respect, which has been debated at such length this afternoon in the Senate, differs very materially from the law as it existed at the time when these facilities were taken over on January 1, 1942.

Mr. President, I have referred to plans, and I used the word "plans." That word is taken from the Wagner-Peyser Act. Here again we find a highly important difference between the provisions of House bill 4437 and the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act. The Wagner-Peyser Act in section 8 provides that any State desiring to receive the benefits of the act shall, by the agency designated to cooperate with the United States Employment Service, submit to the Director detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of the act within such State. It further provides that if such plans are in conformity with the provisions of the act and are reasonably appropriate and adequate to carry out its purposes, they shall be approved by the Director, and due notice of the approval shall be given to the State agency. Then the language with reference to the power of the Director of the bureau in the Department of Labor to revoke existing certificates or to withhold further certificates by which money shall be paid provides that the power of revocation shall apply whenever he shall determine, as to any State, that the cooperating State agency "has not properly expended the money paid to it or the moneys herein required to be appropriated by said State, in accordance with plans approved under this act." I emphasize the latter provision.

Mr. President, it is true that House bill 4437, as a result of one of the committee amendments, does provide an option on the part of the agency in each State to submit to the Secretary detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act, and does provide that if such plans are in conformity with the provisions of this act and are reasonable appropriate and adequate to carry out its purposes they shall be approved by the Secretary and due notice of such approval shall be given to the State agency. But, Mr. President, when House bill 4437, as it is now before the Senate, and as reported by the committee, comes down to the subject of the sanctions to be imposed for violation by the State of some obligations on its part, all reference to the plans is eliminated.

In the Wagner-Peyser Act a variation from the plans which had been approved under the act was the decisive feature under which the director was authorized to revoke certificates or to refuse to give future certificates, but under House bill 4437, when we come to the sanctions provided under the bill, instead of a reference to plans, reference is made to the rules and regulations which shall have been prescribed by the Secretary of Labor. It is true that in the Wagner-Peyser Act there is a very clear reference, as I pointed out twice yesterday, to rules and regulations, and an obligation is vested in the director of the bureau to promulgate such rules and regulations. But when it comes to the important phase of the sanctions under the bill the Wagner-Peyser Act refers, as I have indicated, to the plans which have been submitted and approved by the State agency, whereas House bill 4437, as now before the Senate, does not refer to the plans, but refers to the rules and regulations which shall have been promulgated as provided in the bill.

So, Mr. President, not only in the case of subsection (b) of section 9, on page 12, but in regard to the matter of plans, as distinguished from rules and regulations which may be changed from day to day or from week to week, there is a very material difference between the law as it stood on January 1, 1942, and the law which would be created by House bill 4437 if the amendment which I have submitted is not adopted.

There are other provisions which constitute differences, but I shall not undertake to detail all of them. However, I should like to mention an important one. House bill 4437 undertakes to place in the Department of Labor—and would do so if the bill is enacted into law—the operation of the Federal facilities in connection with the employment office feature of the measure, whereas under the law as it existed on January 1, 1942, due to the fact that the Wagner-Peyser Act had been amended by the Reorganization Act of 1939, the power of administration of the facilities, insofar as the Federal Government was concerned, was vested in the Social Security Board. According to the very best advice I have been able to secure, in the event that House bill 4437 is enacted into law, it will place in the Department of Labor the management of these facilities and the control of the facilities, insofar as the Federal Government is concerned, as distinguished from the Social Security Board, under the jurisdiction of which it existed on January 1, 1942.

Mr. President, I also call attention to the fact that while, today, the work of this particular branch of our governmental agency is in the Department of Labor, nevertheless, it is solely by reason of the fact that there exist directives issued by the President under the War Powers Act that that is true; and so soon as the War Powers Act terminates, as I understand the situation, the further administration by the Federal Government relative to the Employment Service will automatically revert, not to the Department of Labor, but to the Social Security Board, under the legislation existing on January 1, 1942.

Mr. President, I invite attention to these illustrative and very important instances of variation between the law as it existed on January 1, 1942, and as it would be created by House bill 4437 as reported by the committee and as now pending before the Senate.

I return to the statement which I made at the outset, namely, that my amendment is based on the theory that the Federal Government should return to the respective States the facilities in the condition in which it received them, subject only to such necessary incidental provisions as may be required in order to bring about the transfer to the States of the particular facilities in question.

Title III of this bill is not affected by my amendment. It is, of course, obvious that some provision should be made for transferring to the States the Federal employees who are today working in these services. Title III, with the various amendments which have today been agreed to, takes care of that situation. I have no quarrel with title III, although I disagree with certain of its contents. The ultimate general effect of it is to take care of the incidental matters to which I have referred. However, I do most strenuously object to titles I and II, because they violate the principle that these facilities should be returned to the States in the same condition as they were in when they were received by the Federal Government, at the request of the President of the United States, on January 1, 1942.

In the amendment which I have offered, Mr. President, there is a proviso that no State shall be required to make any appropriation as provided in section 5 (a) of the Wagner-Peyser Act of June 6, 1933, as amended to January 1, 1942, prior to July 1, 1948. The purpose of the proviso is this: The various States have been hoping, and governors in their meetings at Hershey, Pa., and at Mackinac Island have been putting themselves on record as being in favor of returning the facilities to the States. However, they have been notified of no date on which the facilities are to be returned. Thus it is that the States cannot be expected as of this date to have made provision by way of appropriations for their respective portions of the funds which would be necessary in order to take care of these facilities.

Moreover, Mr. President, it has been pointed out on numerous occasions during the debate on this bill that, in fact, the Federal Government has been providing almost 100 percent of the money. Prior to January 1, 1942, the Federal Government was paying approximately from 90 to 95 percent of the expense of the operation of the employment services in the various States. I need not reiterate the explanation of that situation which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] has made so clearly upon the floor in the course of the debate. The fact is, as I have already indicated, that on January 1, 1942, the United States was paying approximately all the cost of administering the employment services.

Mr. President, the proposed exemption of the obligation of the States to make any appropriation as required in section 5 of the Wagner-Peyser Act is occasioned, therefore, first by reason of the fact that the States have had no notice of any kind with reference to when they are to receive back the facilities which the Government took over; and, in the second place, and as a matter of practical operation, the Federal Government had already been paying almost all the expenses until January 1, 1942.

So, Mr. President, under the transaction as it took place and induced, as it was, by the urgent request of the President of the United States, and accepted, as it was, by practically all the governors of the States of the Union, and accompanied, as it was, by a belief on the part of the governors that the transaction merely involved a loan recognized by the Federal Government as being a loan, I undertake to say that there is a moral obligation on the part of the Federal Government to turn back to the States these various services in accordance with the situation which existed on January 1, 1942, subject only to the exceptions set forth in title 3 of the bill.

Mr. President, I earnestly urge adoption of the amendment for the reasons which I have indicated. In my remarks yesterday I indicated much more fully than I have today an earnest advocacy of the principles, as I understand them, which have been asserted by the governors of our various States. They have been convinced that this country owes an obligation, based on moral integrity, to the States of the Union to return these services to the States at the earliest practicable date, and under the conditions under which they were surrendered on January 1, 1942. If we should pass House bill 4437 in the form in which it was reported to the Senate by the committee, and as it has been amended on the floor, we could not comply with the moral obligation, as I see it, which the States are entitled to have us comply with.

So, Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the amendment, and on the question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, we have devoted a great deal of time to the many questions which are involved in the pending bill. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri would wipe out all but four lines of the 14 pages comprising the bill. Many of the questions which have been raised have been determined. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri would entirely reverse the decision of the Senate on those matters.

I wish to invite attention to one thing in particular. The amendment would wipe out the present division of funds as between the various States. In Arizona it would reduce the amount of the funds by 43 percent. In California it would reduce the amount of the funds by 45 percent. In Colorado it would reduce the amount of the funds by 15 percent. In Connecticut it would reduce the amount of the funds by 4 percent. In Delaware it would reduce the amount of the funds by 12 percent. In the District of Columbia it would reduce the amount of the funds by 35 percent. In Florida it would reduce the amount of the funds by 11 percent. In Illinois it would reduce the amount of the funds by 6 percent. In Maryland it would reduce the amount of the funds by 13 percent. In Michigan it would reduce the amount of the funds by 30 percent. In Minnesota it would reduce the amount of the funds by 8 percent. In Nevada it would reduce the amount of the funds by 69 percent. In New Hampshire it would reduce the amount of the funds by 25 percent. In New York it would reduce the amount of the funds by 1 percent. In Ohio it would reduce the amount of the funds by 13 percent. In Oregon it would reduce the amount of the funds by 42 percent. In Rhode Island it would reduce the amount of the funds by 37 percent. In Utah it would reduce the amount of the funds by 35 percent. In Vermont it would reduce the amount of the funds by 19 percent. In the State of Washington it would reduce the amount of the funds by 36 percent. In Wyoming it would reduce the amount of the funds by 16 percent. I may say, incidentally, that in Missouri it would increase the amount of the funds. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, did the Senator read any figures with respect to Oregon?

Mr. TUNNELL. In Oregon the amount of the funds would be reduced by 42 percent.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator mean that, in view of the great increase which has taken place in our war population, Oregon would lose only 42 percent?

Mr. TUNNELL. According to one method or another, the increase in population should be greater.

I invite attention to the fact that this amendment has been offered without previous consideration of its effects on the various States, and it indicates the danger of agreeing to such haphazard amendments as those which are being offered without having been given previous consideration.

I invite further attention to the fact that the amendment would make no provision whatever for a continuation of the services of these various organizations at a time when the State refused or failed to comply with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor. Under those conditions the effect of the bill, in the form in which it was reported by the committee, would be destroyed. Practically all such provisions would be wiped out and we would embark on an uncharted sea where most of the damage would result to the unemployed.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator speaks of an uncharted sea. If the language reported to the Senate should not be agreed to, we would return to the Wagner-Peyser Act under which we operated for 10 years.

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes; but yesterday I understood the Senator to say that under the terms of the Wagner-Peyser Act there was afforded a great deal less authority than would be afforded under the bill, even though we have not been able to discover, either from the Senator himself or from anyone else, what the difference is.

Mr. President, under these conditions I hope the Senate will not wipe out all the subcommittee has done, all the committee has done, and all the Senate has done, and impose upon the States a reduction of the funds they are now receiving, which they have found necessary.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the issue is a very simple one. We took the employment offices away from the States without any authority of law. We provided that the Federal Government should take them over and operate them because the President so requested. The Governors turned them over to the Federal Government reluctantly, with the stipulation that they should be returned. Now, instead of returning them under the conditions under which they were operated when we took them from the States, we are changing the whole basis of the Wagner-Peyser Act.

The Senator asks, "What changes?" Why change it at all? Every change made is toward increasing the power of the Federal Government over these employment offices. So, I say that if we pass the bill we are not in good faith returning these offices to the States. We are setting up conditions which inevitably will lead to the federalization of the entire Employment Service.

Every change made looks toward that end. There is the change putting the emphasis on rules and regulations, and less on State plans agreed upon by the States. There is the provision that the Federal Government may take over the offices again, or at least may step in and operate them, if the Federal officials do not like the details of the way a State is operating them. Every provision which is inserted is intended to strengthen the Federal Government.

Mr. President, why those changes? No one complained about the operation of the Wagner-Peyser Act. There was no criticism of it when the States were operating their employment offices under the act. The effect of the amendment is simply to provide that when the offices are returned they shall be operated under the Wagner-Peyser Act, and not under all the increased Federal power which is proposed by the Committee on Education and Labor.

There can be no reason for the amendments the committee urges except to give the Federal Government more power, and make the return mean less, make it a comparatively small change from the present conditions.

So, Mr. President, I think anyone who really desires that the offices be returned to the States in good faith should vote for the pending amendment.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, very briefly, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri proposes one change, in the proviso in line 7, referring to State contributions to the expense of returning the services.

Mr. TAFT. Is not that only until 1948, so the State legislatures can meet to appropriate whatever money may be required?

Mr. BALL. That is the change.

With respect to the arguments made against the amendment by the Senator from Delaware, one of them was that requiring the grants to the States to be made on a straight population basis changes the amount going to every State in the Union, decreases it for about 21 or 22 of the States which have had a population shift during the war.

In addition to that, I think it is deficient in that since 1941 the administration of the United States Employment Service has been transferred by Executive order to the Social Security Board and the Department of Labor. That means that under the Donnell amendment there would be no provision for a commingling of funds for a single State budget for unemployment compensation and for the employment service. Each State would have to submit two different budgets, and would have to account for the funds in two different budgets.

Furthermore, under the Wagner-Peyser Act there is no provision for a merit system for State employees. That was taken care of by grants under title III of the Social Security Act, which would be eliminated by the amendment.

I think adoption of the amendment would not only undo the work we have done in the committee and here today, but it would be very greatly deficient as a practical proposition, and I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Delaware at the outset of his remarks took the view that if my amendment were to be adopted it would reverse the action of the Senate previously taken today. I respectfully disagree with the Senator upon that proposition. I think it was very clear that the Senate understood that the amendment which had been proposed by me could not be considered until after the committee amendments had been disposed of. I myself voted upon various provisions of the committee amendments. Yet that by no means waived my right nor made it inconsistent on my part to present at this time the amendment which is now before the Senate.

Every action taken by the Senate today with respect to the pending bill has been in the nature of perfecting the committee amendments, subject at all times to the fact that an amendment, namely, the one I filed, was on the desk and could not be called up until after the committee amendments had been disposed of.

Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware makes the point as to the change in amounts granted under the Wagner-Peyser Act to the various States. I have not checked the accuracy of his statement, I have no doubt that he sincerely thinks he has given us, and possibly he has given us, the exact facts in that regard; but I submit that the mere fact that there has been some change in the position of some States between 1942 and this time does not alter the moral proposition that the Federal Government should return to the States these facilities under the law as it took them over on January 1, 1942.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I have in my hand what I understand to be a copy of an opinion rendered on January 4, 1939, by the Attorney General, then the Hon. Frank Murphy, now a member of the Supreme Court, to the President of the United States. I shall present the entire opinion for the RECORD, but it reads in part as follows:

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to refer to your memorandum of December 27, 1938, in which you request my opinion upon a question of law presented by the Chairman of the Social Security Board in his letter to you of December 22, 1938.

The Chairman's statement of the problem is somewhat indefinite, but as I construe his letter it is: When the Social Security Board has approved an unemployment-compensation law of a State, what part of the total cost of the State's public employment offices provided for under and operated as an integral part of such law is the Social Security Board authorized to finance by grants certified under section 302 (a) of the Social Security Act?

The final paragraph of the letter, after some intermediate discussion, reads:

Accordingly it is my opinion that the Social Security Board is authorized to finance by grants under section 302 (a) of the Social Security Act only that part of the total cost of a State's public employment offices which is over and above the expense the State otherwise would have to incur to enable them to perform required duties not necessary for the proper administration of the State's unemployment-compensation law.

Mr. President, if my understanding be correct, it is true that the States have been receiving from the Social Security Board, after the issuance of this opinion, or at some time, at any rate, funds payable to the States, not as appropriations for employment services, but moneys issued to them from the Social Security Board. But, be that as it may, the mere fact that Missouri or Oregon or Kentucky or Delaware may not be in exactly the same position as it was in on January 1, 1942, relative to the other States of the Union as to population—which would manifestly be an impossible situation to contemplate—the mere fact that there may have been some changes in the populations of the various States does not alter the moral proposition that these facilities, having been received under the request of the President of the United States under given conditions, should be returned under those conditions.

Mr. DONNELL subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago, during the course of my remarks, I referred to an opinion which had been issued by the Attorney General of the United States under date of January 4, 1939. I stated that I would offer the opinion in its entirety for printing in the RECORD. I omitted doing so and I now ask that the opinion be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the opinion was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1939.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to refer to your memorandum of December 27, 1938, in which you request my opinion upon a question of law presented by the Chairman of the Social Security Board in his letter to you of December 22, 1938.

The Chairman's statement of the problem is somewhat indefinite, but as I construe his letter it is: When the Social Security Board has approved an unemployment compensation law of a State, what part of the total cost of the State's public employment offices provided for under and operated as an integral part of such law is the Social Security Board authorized to finance by grants certified under section 302 (a) of the Social Security Act?

I agree with the statement of the general counsel of the Social Security Board in his memorandum submitted with the Chairman's letter that this question "does not permit of a categorical answer," and that "Each case must be * * * determined upon the basis of the statutory and factual situation existing in the State in which it occurs * * *." The Social Security Act of August 14, 1935 (49 Stat. 620 et seq.), provides in part:

"SEC. 302. (a) The Board shall from time to time certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to each State which has an unemployment compensation law approved by the Board under title IX, such amounts as the Board determines to be necessary for the proper administration of such law during the fiscal year in which such payment is to be made. * * *"

"SEC. 303. (a) The Board shall make no certification for payment to any State unless it finds that the law of such State, approved by the Board under title IX, includes provisions for—

* * * * *

"(2) Payment of unemployment compensation solely through public employment offices in the State or such other agencies as the Board may approve * * *."

"SEC. 903. (a) The Social Security Board shall approve any State law submitted to it, within 30 days of such submission, which it finds provides that—

"(1) All compensation is to be paid through public employment offices in the State or such other agencies as the Board may approve * * *."

As will be noted, when a State has enacted an unemployment-compensation law which complies with the provisions of the Social Security Act, the Social Security Board is required to approve such law and to certify, under section 302 (a), to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to that State the amounts determined by the Board to be necessary for its proper administration. A provision of State law prerequisite to approval by the Board is that payment of unemployment compensation shall be made through public employment offices in the State or such other agencies as the Board may approve. Thus, while the act does not so require, it contemplates that public employment offices may be utilized in the administration of a State's unemployment-compensation law.

A State's public employment offices, however, are set up by it under its own laws and for its own purposes; and they may be, and generally are, charged with duties other than those necessary for the administration of the State's unemployment-compensation law—duties in no way connected with such administration. This may be true even though they are organized under provisions of an unemployment-compensation law. It must be presumed that maintenance of them for such other purposes is a proper function of the State. To finance, to any extent, their cost for such ends, however, is no duty of the Social Security Board. The Social Security Act authorizes grants for their support only to the extent necessary for the proper administration of the State's unemployment-compensation law.

Also it is to be noted that the Social Security Act was enacted after the act of June 6, 1933, 48 Statute 113, generally known as the Wagner-Peyser Act. The declared purpose of the latter statute is "to promote the establishment and maintenance of a national system of public employment offices." In order to carry out this purpose the act establishes the United States Employment Service, a Bureau in the Department of Labor, and provides that when "a State shall, through its legislature, accept the provisions of this act and designate or authorize the creation of a State agency vested with all powers necessary to cooperate with the United States Employment Service under this act," the Director of the United States Employment Service shall, from funds appropriated under the act, make grants to such State to aid in "establishing and maintaining systems of public employment offices * * * in accordance with the provisions of this act." The functions and duties of such systems of public employment offices are set out in the act, and many of them are such that they bear no relation to the administration of an unemployment-compensation law. Reading the Social Security Act with the Wagner-Peyser Act it seems plain that the former should not be construed to encourage the establishment by States of systems of public employment offices other than such as may be set up under and in accordance with the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act.

Accordingly, it is my opinion that the Social Security Board is authorized to finance by grants under section 302 (a) of the Social Security Act only that part of the total cost of a State's public employment offices which is over and above the expense the State otherwise would have to incur to enable them to perform required duties not necessary for the proper administration of the State's unemployment-compensation law.

Respectfully,

FRANK MURPHY,
Attorney General.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Am I not correct, however, in stating that under the bill, even if passed with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, all the money will now be appropriated by the Federal Government, whereas prior to 1942 it was matched by the States?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the answer to the distinguished Senator from Oregon is that the law will still be exactly the same as it is in the Wagner-Peyser Act, namely, the provision there requiring matching, but there had never been appropriated, as I understand, prior to January 1, 1942, more than $4,000,000 a year by the Federal Government for the purposes contemplated by the Wagner-Peyser Act. The result was, as the Senator from Ohio has indicated, that great sums of money have been used for the expenses of the employment office by the Federal Government outside the matching provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act, the aggregate amount being, as is indicated in a document which I have on my desk, as I recall, somewhere between 90 and 95 percent as being paid by the Federal Government before January 1, 1942, as compared with from 5 to 10 percent then being paid by the States.

Further answering the Senator from Oregon, I may say that the amendment which I have presented would restore the local condition precisely as it was, whatever it was, on January 1, 1942.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. In order to put the next question I want to make this statement of fact, and I am sure the Senator from Missouri is aware of the fact that in some of our States there has been a great increase in population since 1942 as the result of war plants which have been located in those States. One of the results of that shift in population has been to create a very serious potential unemployment problem in those States, and to meet that increased unemployment problem the States are vitally concerned about obtaining funds with which to meet it. Therefore any bill that would give to the States 100 percent of Federal money with which to administer their unemployment service is a matter of great concern to them. So my question is this: If the bill is passed as it came out of committee, does the Senator from Missouri agree with me that 100 percent of the funds for State employment services would be put up by the Federal Government?

Mr. DONNELL. I think that is correct. I think the Senator from Minnesota could give us an absolutely accurate answer on that, because he has undoubtedly studied the committee amendment very thoroughly.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say to the Senator from Minnesota that the question I have put to the Senator from Missouri is this. If the bill is passed as it came out of committee, 100 percent of the money that is to be used for the service will be Federal money, will it not?

Mr. BALL. That is correct.

Mr. MORSE. Now may I ask the Senator from Missouri if it is true that if the bill were passed with the Senator's amendment in it, then we would revert to the match money basis as it existed under the Wagner-Peyser Act?

Mr. DONNELL. I think that is correct, and with this understanding that, as it applies under the Wagner-Peyser Act up until January 1, 1942, the Federal Government was in fact actually paying from 90 to 95 percent of the expense of each State.

Mr. MORSE. Then would the Senator from Missouri agree that his amendment does raise this question for the Senate to decide: Whether or not the Senate wishes to have the money put up by the Federal Government to the extent of 100 percent, or whether the Senate wants to go back to the match money basis under the Wagner-Peyser Act?

Mr. DONNELL. I think, Mr. President, that question is of course present. I take it, however, that the fact is that under the amendment which I have proposed the Federal Government would until July 1, 1948, finance the proposition 100 percent, because, as was pointed out by the Senator from Minnesota there is a provision in my amendment "That no State shall be required to make any appropriation as provided in section 5 (a) of the act of June 6, 1933, as amended, to January 1, 1942, prior to July 1, 1948."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Of course I want to say that those of us who are very much concerned about the data that have been introduced here this afternoon showing the loss of funds that would be suffered by the States such as my State and Washington and California and the other States that were listed in the report presented by the Senator from Delaware are not expecting the crest of our unemployment problem to hit us until the possibility of the potential economic bust occurs in 1948–49 or 1950 or if and when it occurs. Thus we have to think ahead as to what I say, expressing a personal opinion, is going to be an inevitable economic bust period in this country unless certain steps are taken to meet the potential unemployment problem that is going to confront us. Thus when we as representatives of those States think ahead 2, 3, 4, or 5 years and we see data as they have been presented here this afternoon pointing out that our States will suffer a severe loss of funds if the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is adopted we naturally question the desirability of joining with the Senator. I do not think the Senator from Missouri would charge me with being motivated entirely by provincial interests when I say that I have to give attention to the financial effects on my State of the amendment presented by the Senator from Missouri. If I understand the situation correctly a vote by me for the Senator's amendment—and I do not intend to vote for it—would really be a vote for a 42 percent cut in the funds that otherwise would come to my State under the bill as reported by the committee. My State is one of those States greatly concerned about the potential unemployment problem with which we will be confronted when the boom and bust cycle runs its course.

Mr. DONNELL. For his frankness in this matter, Mr. President, I thank the Senator, who is always characterized by that quality in his utterances here and elsewhere.

I may say, Mr. President, that I am not advised, other than the statement made upon the floor this afternoon, as to the effect upon the State of Oregon. I was informed yesterday of the fact, according to one of the representatives of the Department of Labor, as I recall, that there would be a considerable readjustment as between States because of the population feature. But as I see it, Mr. President, if these services had been held by the States, by the State of Oregon, by the State of Missouri, by the State of Delaware, right on through from January 1, 1942, until this time, there would then exist precisely the same problem as exists now upon their return. It would seem to me that if some States may be injured, there may be others that will be benefited. I did not understand the remarks of the Senator from Delaware respecting Missouri. I heard the name of Missouri mentioned. But regardless of the effect upon any given State, I take it that when these services were taken over by the Federal Government, when they were delivered by the governors of the States on January 1, 1942, to the Federal Government, there must have been in contemplation the fact that the populations of the various States would not remain static during the period in which the services were held by the Federal Government.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I think it should be pointed out that while the Wagner-Peyser Act had a definite system of distribution between the States, what is proposed to be substituted for it is absolutely discretionary power in the Secretary of Labor to give any State any amount he may want to give it, and certainly when we are distributing Federal funds we ought, on every basis that I know of, to prescribe a formula. If some other formula is better than the one in the Wagner-Peyser Act, very well, but under the provisions of this bill the Secretary may give such amounts as he determines may be necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the State system.

His determination shall be based on, first, the population; second, an estimate of the cost of proper and efficient administration; third, such other factors as the Secretary finds relevant.

So if he does not like a State he can cut down its funds. If he wants to favor another State, he can give it funds. So, it seems to me that, regardless of the merits of the system which is in the Wagner-Peyser Act, to substitute a purely discretionary system by which money is handed out at the will of some Federal official is very much worse than the Wagner-Peyser Act provision.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator for his very valuable contribution.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. BALL. What the Senator from Ohio was reading was identical with language contained in the so-called Dirksen substitute, which passed the House of Representatives, and if I am not mistaken a very similar provision was included in the rescission bill which passed both Houses last fall.

Mr. DONNELL. May I say to the Senator from Minnesota that regardless of whether it was in the Dirksen substitute or not, the Dirksen substitute is not the bill now before the Senate. The Senate now has before it my amendment which proposes to return these facilities back to the States as they were on January 1, 1941.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I merely wish to complete what I had to say, that under the Federal hospital bill we worked out very carefully a proper formula for division of funds. Under the provisions of the aid-to-education bill, which we have had before us, we worked out such a division. Now that perhaps ought to be done. But certainly it seems to me that we ought not to substitute for the provision of the present law a purely discretionary provision, whether it was in the House bill or was not in the House bill.

Mr. DONNELL. I think so.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator from Missouri for yielding to me. He has been very kind to let me interrupt his remarks for comments of my own. I only wish to reply to him on two points. I think it is true that some States would benefit as the result of the Senator's amendment if the Senate should adopt the bill with the Senator's amendment in it. As I understand it, those States that would benefit would be those States that have not enjoyed a great increase in population since the 1940 census as compared with the States to which thousands of war workers migrated during the war. It seems to me quite unfair to set up a provision in this act which would accrue to the advantage of States that have not enjoyed a large increase in population since the 1940 census and to the disadvantage of those States that have had a big increase in population. It is my theory—and I want to make this position clear to the Senator from Missouri—it is my theory that those States that have had a large increase in war population are the ones that are going to need the funds when the unemployment wave hits us. Therefore I am back to the basic issue raised by the Senator's amendment. It is the question of whether or not we want to have the Federal Government put up the money 100 percent, or whether we want to come back to the match-money basis of the Wagner-Peyser Act. Now it seems to me that——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator is, I assume, fully in agreement with myself that in fact on January 1, 1942, the actual share as between States and the Federal Government was that the Federal Government was providing from 90 to 95 percent, and the State governments from 5 to 10 percent.

Mr. MORSE. I am in complete agreement, but that is not, of course, the formula of the Wagner-Peyser Act itself, if we go back to the Wagner-Peyser Act.

Mr. DONNELL. That was, however, true during the time that the Wagner-Peyser Act was in effect, as it was also during the time the social-security legislation has been in effect.

Mr. MORSE. That is true, but we have no guaranty that such a match-money arrangement would continue under the terms of the original act.

Mr. DONNELL. The combination of the two worked out this result by which the States were, in fact, notwithstanding the matching provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act, putting up only from 5 to 10 percent, and the Federal Government from 90 to 95 percent. Does the Senator concur in that statement?

Mr. MORSE. That certainly was the 1942 situation; but I am not of the opinion—and I am open to persuasion—that if the Senator's amendment were adopted the formula would be a 90–10 formula. If the Senator's amendment were adopted, as I understand it, we would go back to the original formula of the Wagner-Peyser Act itself and that was not a 90–10 formula.

Mr. DONNELL. We would go back to the Wagner-Peyser Act; and, as has just been pointed out, the other provisions of national legislation would be on the books just as they are at this moment.

Mr. MORSE. But mathematically the population statistics as of the 1940 census will have a great influence on the amount of money which would go to the individual States. It is because of that factor that I have endeavored to point out that approximately 20 or 21 States would suffer materially in funds as a result of the Senator's amendment if we adopt the principle which I think is inherent in his amendment, namely, the match-money principle rather than the principle of having the Federal Government put up all the money.

Mr. DONNELL. Let me say in response to the Senator from Oregon that in the first place the proviso which appears in my amendment relieves the States of the obligation to make any appropriation under section 5 (a), which is the matching provision of the Wagner-Peyser Act, until July 1, 1948.

In the second place, if an injustice creeps in by reason of changes in population between now and July 1, 1948, I take it that the Congress can be relied upon to make an equitable and proper redistribution.

I may say to the distinguished Senator from Oregon that it is my understanding that many students of this question—and I know of one or two who are very eminent—advocate the entire abolition of the matching provision. They point out the fact that the Federal Government has been paying, as it was on January 1, 1942, from 90 to 95 percent, as compared with 5 or 10 percent by the States.

So, Mr. President, I submit, first, that under the situation as it arose on January 1, 1942, the States are entitled to have these facilities back under the conditions which prevailed at that time. Second, no one would have anticipated that there would be a static condition of population between then and now. Third, if there be any injury to any State such as has been suggested, under the provisions of the amendment the States are relieved until January 1, 1948, of any obligation or requirement to make an appropriation under the terms of the matching provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act. Finally, certainly the sense of equity and justice on the part of the Congress of the United States can be relied upon to make appropriate provision for the States thereafter.

The point made by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] is exceedingly important, and I thank him very greatly for his contribution. As he has pointed out, the committee amendment provides as follows:

> (b) The Secretary shall from time to time certify for payment to each State which is in compliance with the provisions of section 4 of this act, and such rules, regulations, and standards of efficiency as may be prescribed under this act, such amounts as the Secretary determines to be necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the State system of public employment offices during the fiscal year for which payment is to be made.

That provision gives tremendous power to the Secretary of Labor to prescribe rules, regulations, and standards of efficiency. As the Senator from Ohio pointed out, the Secretary's determination "shall be based on (1) the population of the State," which is a mathematical basis, "and an estimate of the number of persons who will be served by the public-employment office system in the State; (2) an estimate of the cost of proper and efficient administration of the State system of public employment offices," which is semimathematical in nature; and "(3) such other factors as the Secretary finds relevant."

So I submit, with the Senator from Ohio, that from the standpoint of the best interests of the States it is better to go back to the Wagner-Peyser Act, realizing the fact that under it and under the law existing on January 1, 1942, the States were paying only 5 or 10 percent; realizing that under this amendment there is no obligation on the States to pay anything until July 1, 1948; and realizing that the Congress, because its Members come from the States of the Union, can be relied upon to make equitable readjustment. I submit that this amendment should be adopted, not from any standpoint of finances, not from any standpoint of whether one State may benefit or not, but because of the fundamental fact that these facilities were turned over to the United States Government as a loan, and should be returned to the respective States in substantially the condition in which they were received.

One further word and I am through. I have recognized in this amendment the fact that it is necessary, of course, to have some transitional provision with respect to personnel. For that reason my amendment is not directed to title III of the bill. My amendment is directed solely to title I and title II, and leave the transitional provisions which relate to personnel and property intact as they have been passed upon by the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. President, I believe the yeas and nays have been ordered on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOSSETT] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], are detained on public business.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL] is detained on official business at one of the Government departments.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] is absent on official business, having been appointed to the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

I also announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] has a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MITCHELL], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent on official business attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] is absent by leave of the Senate, being a member of a committee designated by the Senate to attend the atomic bombing at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] are absent on official business, being members of the Commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent on official business.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 37, as follows:

So Mr. DONNELL's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in connection with the language on page 5, in line 18, I should like to ask the proponents of the bill if they will accept an amendment to the committee amendment, as follows:

Insert at the appropriate place the following:

"SEC. —. For the purpose of assisting in providing an adequate supply of workers for the production and harvesting of agricultural commodities within the several States, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to maintain in cooperation with the State agricultural extension services a farm labor recruitment, transportation, and placement service."

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, we have discussed that matter both yesterday and today. I think that permanent legislation along that line should be considered early in the next session. But I do not like to enact permanent legislation establishing that kind of an employment service in the Department of Agriculture without having any committee consideration, hearings, or anything of the sort.

The language to which the Senator has referred on page 5 is now in the Wagner-Peyser Act. We did not change it. The Farm Placement Service which now is under the Department of Agriculture will remain there. It is my understanding that it is fixed there until January 1. In any event, it is my understanding that a joint resolution extending it through the next fiscal year will be passed, and then the Congress can do whatever it wishes to do at the next session.

But I do not think we should try to enact permanent legislation on such a matter at this time. I believe we should leave the basic authority for the Farm Placement Service in the law until we decide what we wish to do about it permanently.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. I hold in my hand a letter from the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture which bears on this question. I really have not had time to study it, but I should like to read it to the Senate. It reads as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
June 25, 1946.

Hon. J. M. TUNNELL,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR TUNNELL: The Secretary of Agriculture has asked that I communicate with you in regard to a question raised on the floor of the Senate on Monday, June 24, during the debate on H. R. 4437, a bill to provide for the return of public employment offices to State operation, to amend the Act of Congress approved June 6, 1933 (48 Stat. 113), and for other purposes. The apprehension was expressed that the provision of section 3 (a) of the bill relating to the authority of the United States Employment Service to maintain a "farm placement service" would create doubt as to the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to continue with the farm labor supply program administered by the Department of Agriculture.

The language in question is identical with language in the act of June 6, 1933, commonly referred to as the Wagner-Peyser Act. Prior to the enactment of Public Law 45 (78th Cong.) which authorized this Department to operate a farm labor supply program, all authority of the War Manpower Commission with respect to the recruitment and placement of farm labor was delegated (Directive XVII, 8 F. R. 1426) to the Department of Agriculture. As a consequence, the United States Employment Service did not thereafter exercise its authority to maintain a farm placement service under the Wagner-Peyser Act. Following the enactment of Public Law 45, the Department of Agriculture relied upon the authority contained in that act as extended and modified from time to time for the operation of its farm labor supply program and not upon the delegation from the War Manpower Commission. The United States Employment Service has not, either during the existence of the delegation from the War Manpower Commission or since its rescission in June 1945 (10 F. R. 8801), obtained an appropriation for farm placement service and has not engaged in that activity except under contract with State extension services, using funds appropriated in the farm labor supply appropriation acts. There has been, therefore, no duplication of activity in the field of farm labor supply despite the fact that both the United States Employment Service and the Department of Agriculture, acting through the State extension services, have authority to maintain a farm placement service.

In view of the foregoing, it is my opinion that the enactment of section 3 (a) of the bill in its present form would not prevent the Department of Agriculture from continuing to operate its farm labor supply program, nor would it change existing authorities with respect to the maintenance of farm placement services.

Sincerely yours,

W. CARROLL HUNTER,
Solicitor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Delaware answer this question for me, inasmuch as I could not hear all of the letter the Senator read because there was some confusion in the Chamber: Is it the Senator's interpretation of that letter that the passage of the bill as it now stands will not interfere in any way with the present program of the Department of Agriculture in respect to operating the farm placement service?

Mr. TUNNELL. Let me read again the concluding portion of the letter:

In view of the foregoing, it is my opinion that the enactment of section 3 (a) of the bill in its present form would not prevent the Department of Agriculture from continuing to operate its farm labor supply program, nor would it change existing authorities with respect to the maintenance of farm placement services.

Sincerely yours,

W. CARROLL HUNTER,
Solicitor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator if he has been informed by the Department of Agriculture that it will continue this program under the resolution by which it formerly has been authorized to handle it, so that the farm placement service will be continued by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. TUNNELL. I have not been informed as to that.

Mr. WHERRY. What assurance do we have that it will be continued?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I talked to the Director of the United States Employment Service, and he tells me that they have reached an agreement with the Department of Agriculture whereby they will try to get through the Congress a resolution extending the present authority, which expires on January 1. They will try to have it continued through the full fiscal year. We have been handling it on a calendar-year basis. Twenty-five million dollars is available for this year. It is up to us to provide funds for the remainder of the fiscal year. I can tell the Senator that there are no funds for the farm placement service in the United States Employment Service bill which now is in the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask another question: Is there assurance that the farm placement work will be continued?

Mr. BALL. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Is there assurance that it will be continued under the Department of Agriculture, regardless of the provisions of the pending measure, if it is passed?

Mr. BALL. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the proponents of the bill feel that they do not wish to amend it in the way I have suggested, I shall not insist upon doing so at this time. But if the Department of Agriculture is to operate the service when the proper time comes I think we should amend the basic law so as to place the service in the control of the Department of Agriculture and let the Department of Agriculture handle it. I expect to take steps to that end at the appropriate time when the proper legislation comes before the Senate.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that I do not think his remarks are at all out of place. I think his thought is excellent, but I do not think there is any such danger at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 4437) was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 7, 17, 53, 58, 78, 80, 90, 92, 98, 105, 114, 116, 159, 234, 238, 242, 256, 265, 274, 285, and 295 to the bill and concurred therein, and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, Nos. 2, 5, 6, 18, 19, 20, 85, 87, 115, 141, 166, 239, 272, 276, and 277 to the bill and concurred therein, severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS IN THE CLASSIFIED GRADES

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on H. R. 5244, to authorize the appointment of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5244) to authorize the appointment of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 to 20, inclusive, and 22, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21 and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 3 of the House bill strike out lines 16 and 17 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 6. The second paragraph of section 32 of the Act entitled 'An Act for the reorganization and improvement of the Foreign Service of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved May 24, 1924 (46 Stat. 1214), as amended, is amended to read as follows:" ; and in lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: "or representatives duly authorized by such Committees."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

WALTER F. GEORGE,
THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN,
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr.,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

SOL BLOOM,
LUTHER A. JOHNSON,
CHARLES A. EATON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the report.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire merely to say, before moving adoption of the report, that the House has agreed to all the amendments made by the Senate to the bill with one exception, and has concurred in that amendment with an amendment.

I therefore move the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Without objection, the report is agreed to.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES FOR CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS AND DISTRICT COURTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4230) to provide necessary officers and employees for circuit courts of appeals and district courts, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCARRAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. MURDOCK, and Mr. WILEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1153, Senate bill 1850.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1850) to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, to secure the national defense, to advance the national health and welfare, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, what was the motion of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1153, Senate bill 1850, a bill to establish a National Science Research Foundation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator intend that the Senate shall discuss the bill this evening?

Mr. MAGNUSON. No.

ADMISSION INTO UNITED STATES OF PERSONS OF RACES INDIGENOUS TO INDIA

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I present the conference report on House bill 3517, a bill to authorize the admission into the United States of persons of races indigenous to India. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The report was read as follows:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3517) to authorize the admission into the United States of persons of races indigenous to India, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:
>
> That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same.
> J. W. FULBRIGHT,
> HOMER FERGUSON,
> JOSEPH H. BALL,
> Managers on the Part of the Senate.
> JOHN LESINSKI,
> EDWARD H. REES,
> N. M. MASON,
> Managers on the Part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report submitted by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement in regard to this conference report. House bill 3517, as originally presented, amends our immigration laws by permitting the immigration of the races of people living in India, which is a British possession. It allows India a quota of immigrants and permits the nationalization of all Indians who came into our country before the restrictive immigration laws were passed in the 1920's.

A similar bill allowing a quota to natives of the Philippines was also passed by the House. The conference report seeks to merge these two bills into one, so as to allow a quota to both countries and to nationalize those of the two countries who are already living in the United States. I do not oppose the measure with reference to the Filipinos, because of the peculiar relations which have existed for many years between the Philippines and this country. For many years the Filipinos have enjoyed the status of nationals of the United States and have not been aliens. We have been closely associated not only during the late war but ever since the Spanish-American War, and every American citizen prays for the progress and happiness of the people of the new Philippine Republic which will be launched on July 4.

I regret that the two bills have been merged, because I am opposed to the adoption of the bill allowing a quota to India. I greatly fear that the action of the Congress in adopting this measure will set in motion a course of events which will result in striking down all of the provisions of our immigration laws relating to the admission of immigrants from Asia.

We have already passed a bill allowing a quota to China. This bill was offered during the stress of war, and before it was enacted by the Congress the then President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, urged its adoption as an exception to our restrictive immigration laws which could properly be made as a gesture of good will to our allies in the fight against aggression. It was strongly implied that it would not be considered as a precedent for other legislation.

However, we now find that the Congress has enacted the Indian bill. Bills have already been introduced to allow quotas of immigrants to Koreans and other Asiatics. We may soon expect measures of the same kind allowing the immigration of natives of Siam, French Indochina, Burma, Java, Sumatra, and of each of the other many racial groups of the Orient. If all of these bills are enacted into law, each and every one of those races will be allowed a quota of immigrants into the United States. I am afraid that we have started a process which will gradually whittle away all of the restrictions of our immigration laws.

I have nothing against the Indians, and there is much to commend favorable action in allowing them to immigrate to the United States and become American citizens, but I am opposed to any weakening of our immigration laws at this time. This is particularly true in view of the precedent which this bill will set, and it will encourage all of those who wish to strike down all of our immigration laws to renew their efforts.

There are well organized groups in every State of the Union who are urging legislation relaxing our immigration laws to the extent of practically eliminating quotas and other restrictions upon immigration into the United States. As chairman of the Committee on Immigration I have received hundreds of communications from such groups. If they were to present their views in one measure to repeal all of our immigration laws and allow the unlimited movement of aliens into our country, the Congress would become alarmed. However, they are too smart for that, and they are seeking to undermine our restrictive laws by the whittling process of introducing a bill here and a bill there, each of which is plausible, but the sum total of which will destroy our present policy of restriction. It is difficult to see how the Congress, after committing itself to a measure such as the Indian bill, can oppose other bills of similar import for each of the numerous races in Asia when they follow in its wake.

Those who are seeking to strike down our immigration laws make the argument that it is a good things for all of us to increase the inflow of immigrants from abroad into this country. They say that each immigrant is a consumer, thereby increasing the domestic market and providing employment to our people to produce the products that they will consume. Under their philosophy we can only achieve the ultimate in prosperity in this country by striking down every present legal barrier to alien immigration. Under their theory, if we bring into this country the teeming millions of Europe, Asia, and Africa who are anxious to come here, and in effect pack most of the people of the world into the United States, we will have so many consumers and producers that we will then achieve the greatest measure of prosperity we have ever known. I do not subscribe to this philosophy, and I believe that we are very unwise to embark upon a policy of weakening our restrictive immigration laws at this time. The laws have already been badly abused during the war, and should be tightened rather than relaxed.

I was absent from the Senate by its leave when the calendar was called and the Indian bill was enacted, or I would have made this statement at that time. The forces back of the bill were so great that it would have been enacted despite anything that I might have said. I do, however, wish to have the RECORD show that I intend to resist any and all bills which are brought forward which tend in any degree to weaken our restrictive immigration laws. I believe that it would contribute to the well-being of our country and the American citizens generally if we were to tighten rather than to relax our existing laws. For myself I shall seek to strengthen and not weaken our immigration laws, and I believe that the majority of the American people are in favor of that course as opposed to the present trend to increase the number of immigrants into the United States.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, did this bill come to the Senate from the Senate Committee on Immigration?

Mr. RUSSELL. It did, and over my opposition, I may say to the Senator from Maine. I regret that I was not present when it was called up on the calendar. I thought I had an understanding to the effect that the bill would not be called up during my absence. I would have opposed it if I had been present when it was called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report presented by the Senator from Arkansas.

The report was agreed to.

FEDERAL CITY CHARTER COMMISSION

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider Calendar No. 1418, Senate bill 1942, a bill to incorporate the Federal City Charter Commission.

I desire to state that this is a bill which addresses itself entirely to the District of Columbia. All that it would do would be to set up a commission which would study and work out a suitable charter for the District of Columbia. When the bill was reached on a previous call of the calendar, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] objected to its consideration. He has told me since that he has no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is there anything in the bill which commits Congress in any way to the action it may take in the future?

Mr. McCARRAN. There is absolutely nothing in the bill which commits Congress in any way. Before any charter can be considered or submitted to the people of the District it must first be submitted to the Congress and approved by the Congress. It may be amended by the Congress, anything might be done to it, it might be set aside, or might be adopted.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, this is really the first step, one step, in the direction of granting to the city of Washington and the District of Columbia self-government, free from regulation by the Congress, is it not?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; it would not be free from regulation by the Congress. It would permit the District of Columbia, or the city of Washington in the District of Columbia, to work out, by a group, a charter which they believe would give a measure of self-government to the people of the District. But it would not divorce the Congress from control over the District. That is specifically provided for.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I feel this is a very important bill, one to which a great deal of care should be given. There should be discussion of the bill, in addition to great study, and under these circumstances I object to immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

INCREASE IN PAY FOR PERSONNEL OF THE ARMY, NAVY, ETC.—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I call up the conference report on House bill 6084, to amend the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended.

(See conference report printed in full in the RECORD of June 21, 1946, pp. 7267–7268.)

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, Senators will recall that this matter was under consideration in the Senate 10 days ago, and there was a difference between the House and the Senate bill with respect to commissioned officers. The House provided for an increase in the compensation of commissioned officers of 10 percent, except in the two lower ranks. In the case of first lieutenants and second lieutenants the increase was 20 percent, in the case of captains 10 percent.

The net result of the conference report was to agree to the House provision, with the exception of captains, in which case the increase was from 10 percent to 15 percent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Colorado to say that the net effect of the conference report was to agree to the House provision with the exception of the provision as to captains.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Was the amendment which I joined with the Senator from Colorado in offering, relating to the first four categories, rejected?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; that was agreed to. As a matter of fact, that provision was common to both bills, the House bill and the Senate bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not want the Senator's statement to stand without comment, and leave any Senator under a misapprehension as to the first four categories, that they had been changed in the respect in which the bill passed the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; the provision is the same as when the bill passed the Senate. The provisions were exactly the same in both bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the conference report was considered and agreed to.

PROVISION FOR HEARINGS, ETC., BY STANDING AND SELECT COMMITTEES

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, an original resolution (S. Res. 293), and I also ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It merely continues the standing and select committees and gives them authority to employ clerical assistance, to hold hearings, and to conduct investigations during the Seventy-ninth Congress and up until January 31, 1947. This is the usual resolution, and is presented each time a Congress is about to expire.

I might say for the benefit of the Senate that the resolution does not include resolutions which are now pending on the calendar, such as Resolution 161, offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND]; Resolution 244, offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]; or Resolution 245, offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE.]

Some doubt has been raised as to whether or not this resolution includes the resolutions which are now pending upon the calendar and have not heretofore been disposed of by the Senate. My reply is in the negative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 293), as follows:

Resolved, That all resolutions heretofore agreed to, authorizing standing or select committees to employ clerical assistants, hold hearings, and conduct investigations during the Seventy-ninth Congress, hereby are continued in full force and effect until January 31, 1947.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Illinois—so that there may be no mistake about what we are doing—if this resolution is the usual resolution which is passed before the close of a session to extend over to January 31 of the next year the standing committees and the committees which are set up under resolutions, with the exception of the subcommittee called the Pepper Committee on Health and Education, which the Senator has identified as Resolution No. 244, Calendar No. 1108; the Kilgore committee, called the Subcommittee on War Mobilization, under Resolution 245, Calendar No. 1109; and the so-called McFarland resolution, No. 101, Calendar No. 1107. We are extending all committees except those. Am I correct in that?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. The others will come up when they are reached on the calendar for consideration?

Mr. LUCAS. This resolution applies only to standing committees and special committees which have heretofore been authorized by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, these committees would be extended anyway up to the end of this Congress, that is, the 3d day of January, without this resolution, would they not?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. What this resolution does is to extend the life of the committees and their jurisdiction for 1 month beyond the date on which they would expire anyway?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct. It would give the Senators opportunity, during the 30-day period, to reoffer resolutions for the purpose of asking for money to carry on the functions of the committees during the session which would then have convened.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are there any special committees which would expire prior to the 1st day of January which this resolution would operate to extend until the 31st of January?

Mr. LUCAS. That is probably true, but the committee thought that perhaps it was just as well to follow the usual custom, and provide that any special committee which would expire at the end of this Congress should not expire at that time, but opportunity would be given to reoffer resolutions if Senators so desired.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, as I understand, this is the same resolution to the consideration of which I objected, but it is modified as the Senator from Nebraska has indicated?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Maine is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS—INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a resolution (S. Res. 291), submitted by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] on June 24, 1946, asking for an additional $5,000 for the Committee on Appropriations. I ask for immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, authorized by Senate Resolution 9, agreed to January 6, 1945, and Senate Resolution 132, agreed to June 28, 1945, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate, for the same purposes, during the Seventy-ninth Congress, $5,000 in addition to the amount of $15,000 heretofore authorized.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, as Chairman of the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably Senate Resolution 281, submitted on June 7 by the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], which requests an additional $5,000 for the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, one of the standing committees of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, authorized by Senate Resolution 9, agreed to January 6, 1945, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate, for the same purposes, during the Seventy-ninth Congress, $5,000 in addition to the amount of $5,000 heretofore authorized.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE TRAINING AND SERVICE ACT OF 1940—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I call up the conference report on House bill 6064, to extend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended.

(See conference report printed in full in the RECORD of June 21, 1946, pp. 7266–7267.)

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, does the Senator from Colorado intend to go on with the report today?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; I hope there will not be much debate.

Mr. MAGNUSON. And finish it tonight?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I hope so.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I do not expect to take any great length of time in discussing the conference report. I only wish to reiterate the position I took when the question of the extension of the draft was before the Senate. My position then was taken on the basis of the figures and facts which were furnished to the Military Affairs Committee, largely from the Army and the staff of the Army and its representatives when they appeared before the committee.

I have taken the position, based upon those figures, that the army that is desired by this country can be obtained through voluntary enlistments. There are parts of this extension measure to which I heartily subscribe, and particularly the provision for not drafting fathers, and for releasing fathers, and for releasing men with 18 months of service. My colleagues on the Military Affairs Committee know my stand upon those subjects, and I have been in favor of such action.

However, there is now before the Senate the provision of the bill as passed by the House of Representatives that would induct men between 19 and 45 years of age. Since the beginning of the discussion of this whole subject, I have never differentiated in the ages, so that if any should be taken, then they should all be taken within the years covered. But it seems to me that in extending this inducting phase to men 45 years of age we are going quite high. A man in his forties, even a man in his thirties, is a little too old usually to make a good soldier. I make the statement to be consistent—and I feel it to be consistent with the position I held formerly—that further induction should not be provided for until the Congress itself sees a need for the calling up of more men. That is the reason that I myself, as a Member of the Senate, shall vote against the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1850) to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, to secure the national defense, to advance the national health and welfare, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in light of the fact that Senate bill 1850 is the unfinished business before the Senate, I wish to offer and send to the desk and have printed an amendment in the nature of a substitute for Senate bill 1850. In explanation of the amendment I wish to say that I did not join in with the views of the minority of the Military Affairs Committee, because I believe fully and completely in the objectives of Senate bill 1850. As is well known, for some years I have been connected with Princeton University. I have been in touch with a number of scientific people. I am deeply interested in this legislation. I am offering the amendment in behalf of myself and some of my colleagues, not to create difficulty in connection with this subject, but to try to present a slightly different approach to the matter, so that we may consider both the approach of the main bill and the approach of this amendment.

What I am interested in primarily is vesting in the proper kind of scientific groups the control of funds for scientific research. I shall not develop the subject further, but in advocacy of my amendment when the time comes to debate it I shall be glad to elaborate further on that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

BRITISH REGULATIONS RESPECTING TRAVEL BY AIR

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I do not intend to take much of the time of the Senate now, but at a later day I shall have something further to say on the matter of international air transport. I wish to say now, however, that it is one of the most important subjects facing this country at the present time. I was much concerned when an article which appeared in a number of newspapers was called to my attention. The article I have before me happens to be from the Wichita (Kans.) Beacon of Thursday, June 20, 1946. It is by John A. Thale, of the Chicago Daily News Foreign Service. The article comes out of San Juan, P. R. I shall ask that the article be printed in the body of the RECORD following my remarks.

Briefly, I wish to say to the Senate that the sense of the article—and there is every indication that the correspondent is accurate in his reporting—is that the passengers on American air lines are confronted with obstacles which do not apply to the passengers on the British West Indies air lines. In other words, an American passenger traveling on a British air line is given different treatment from that accorded an American passenger traveling on an American air line. The particular point to which the correspondent refers is that an American traveling on the American air lines in order to disembark at certain islands of the British West Indies airports must have a letter from the governor of the particular British possession; and, from the indications given in the article, it is difficult for an American traveling on an American air line to obtain such a letter. If he travels on a British plane he is not required to secure a letter from the governor of the British possession.

I today have addressed a communication to the Department of State asking them as to what steps they have taken to look into this matter, and inquiring also, if the facts are as reported, just what they have done to protect American interests in this matter of international aviation.

Mr. President, I have not the least doubt that under the American system we can compete with any type of system in the world today, be it the communism of Russia or the new socialism of Britain. But we cannot do it, Mr. President, if the American system and those who believe in it are to have their hands tied by their own Government, or if their own Government is to permit obstacles to be put in their way in competing on equal terms in the international field.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. The point the Senator is raising before the Senate is the very point which was raised by me at the time I voted against the British loan. Regardless of how much friendship any one may have for another people or another nation—and I have just as great a respect and friendship for the British people as has anyone else in the United States—I cannot understand how the representatives of the American people in the United States Congress could vote to hand $3,750,000,000 to the British Government without correcting some of the very conditions the Senator from California is now talking about.

Mr. President, it is just plain common sense that when there exists a number of conditions which are wrong, or when there is misunderstanding between two parties and one of them wants the other to do a certain thing which he needs to have done very much, the parties should sit down together and say, "Let us correct the existing inequities before we do this other thing."

I am glad the Senator from California has raised this issue, but it does not do any good to lock the barn door after the horse is gone. The horse is pretty nearly gone now, I am told. I merely want to emphasize that, irrespective of the love one may have in his heart for other peoples of the world—and I have a very deep feeling for other nations—my practical experience in life tells me that the time to adjust conditions which are not right, which are not just, which are not equitable, is when one of the parties very greatly desires something the other party has. The thing to do is right then and there to say, "Let us adjust the misunderstandings we have respecting naval bases; let us adjust all our differences respecting air bases; let us adjust the questions relating to international communications so that everything is on an equal, fair basis, and there is equity between your country and our country."

Mr. President, if we are going to be friends, there is no use in talking about being friends unless we can find the essence and the principles of equity in our relationships.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I will say to the distinguished Senator from New Jersey that in December and January of this year, as a member of the subcommittee of the Mead committee, together with my colleague the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL], I went on a 30,000-mile air trip around the world to investigate the disposal of Army and Navy surplus properties. On that trip we had called to our attention time after time, and we had the opportunity of seeing with our own eyes, airfields on which hundreds of millions of dollars of the money of the American taxpayers had been spent. This Government had not reserved rights to use commercial facilities on those fields which we had built. At that time it seemed to me that our Government had been very lax in not protecting what appeared to be a legitimate American interest.

Mr. HAWKES. Let me say one thing further to the Senator from California. I know what is going to happen in the United States 2 or 3 years after we have done all these things. It has been happening for years. People by the hundreds of thousands will say to us, as their representatives, "Why did you not protect the interests of America fairly at that time?"

That is all I am talking about. All I want is a square deal. During the past week I have talked with two or three distinguished British citizens. They agree with what I am saying in the Senate. They agree that it is in the interest of future friendship between the British people and the American people that we should adjust these things on a basis which is sound and fair at the present time.

I repeat what I said at the time of the British loan. God deliver me from an honest misunderstanding. An honest misunderstanding can be a thousand times more serious than a dishonest misunderstanding. I hope the American people will wake up not only with relation to Great Britain, but with relation to every other nation with which we deal. I hope we can see that the only way in which to build the magnificent peace about which we are talking today is by being sound in the deals we make, and sound in our relationships with the rest of the world. All the beautiful reaction which comes from the emotions of the heart will be dead when the pocketbook is empty.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article by Mr. Thale to which I referred in the beginning of my remarks may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAN JUAN, P. R., June 20.—Some American officials in the Caribbean area complain that the British are giving them a fast shuffle.

The point of dispute is commercial use of military airfields built by the United States on leased bases in British territory. These bases were acquired in 1940 when Winston Churchill, needing 50 destroyers, and Franklin D. Roosevelt, wanting some more bases in the Caribbean, sat down and swapped.

Pan American Airways officials assert that the British now are adopting regulations which give their own British West Indies Airways an advantage in carrying passengers into the territory involved.

Under the Bermuda air agreement adopted this spring, planes of both nations were granted the right to use the United States military bases in Bermuda, Antigua, St. Lucia, and British Guiana.

UNITED STATES SPENT MILLIONS

During the war, the United States spent millions of dollars in establishing airfields there. Bulldozers pushed back jungles and leveled coral wastes. Broad runways and miles of taxi strips were laid down. Administrative buildings were constructed. The fields were used for maintaining antisubmarine patrols and as way-points in the long aerial supply line to Europe and the east.

Now that the bases have been opened to British and American commercial planes, Pan American Airways officials assert that British regulations are bringing on what amounts, to say the least, to considerable confusion.

Passengers who wait to fly via Pan American to Coolidge Field on Antigua, Beane Field on St. Lucia, and Atkinson Field in British Guiana, are told that they must have a personal letter of permission from the governor of the territory before they will be permitted to disembark.

LETTERS NOT AVAILABLE

Pan American has no way of knowing officially, but confused passengers have complained to their officials that those letters from the governor are not, in practice, forthcoming.

At the same time, passengers report that if they attempt to book a trip into one of those places via British West Indies Airways, nothing is said about the letter from the governor.

Pan American officials have been pressing, through diplomatic and private sources, to get the rule changed, but so far without too much success. In Antigua, for example, the requirement was waived for a time, but then reimposed.

They also maintain that the personal letter rule (besides being unfair to P. A. A.) if it is also imposed on B. W. I. A., also needlessly complicates the business of international travel in the Caribbean.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the House has adopted the conference report on the extension of the Price Control and Stabilization Acts. I do not know whether we shall receive a message from the House before we take a recess or not, but I wish to advise the Senate that as soon as practicable tomorrow after the convening of the Senate the conference report will be taken up for consideration.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY—CONSTRUCTION OF WATAUGA AND SOUTH HOLSTON PROJECTS

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, a few days ago Mr. Lilienthal and his associates on the TVA came before the Appropriations Subcommittee of the Senate, of which the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is chairman, and asked for an appropriation of $10,666,000, requesting that the active construction of the Watauga project be started immediately and that the construction of the South Holston project be started late in the fiscal year 1948.

To this the senior Senator from Tennessee strongly objected and told these gentlemen that he would offer the following amendment:

And of which $17,666,000 shall be available for the immediate resumption of construction and continued prosecution of the work on the Watauga and South Holston Dams with a view to the completion of the work on both dams at the earliest possible date.

After some argument Mr. Lilienthal was asked by the chairman whether, if the Congress approved the larger amount, he would proceed with the work, and he said he would.

Early in the hearing the chairman addressed a number of questions to Mr. Lilienthal concerning charges which had been made against the chairman by newspapers and others. The following is taken from the record:

The CHAIRMAN. Did I ever recommend any human being to you or to your Authority so far as you know to hold any office in your organization or any position in your organization?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Senator, so far as I can recall, and I think I would recall, you have never urged the appointment of any individual.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you another question. Did I ever, in any way, try to interfere with your internal affairs at all except to have you pay your receipts into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Senator, if you mean by "personal interference," of course, no.

The CHAIRMAN. I saw in the newspapers a few days ago that you had paid $12,000,000 of your receipts into the Treasury. Was that correct or not?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is approximately the figure. To get it exactly, $12,597,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you intend, or expect, or have you made any arrangements to move your principal offices from Tennessee to Muscle Shoals?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. The answer to that is this, that we do expect and have, since the first recommendation made on that to the Bureau of the Budget in 1939, perhaps 1940, to move, and to build appropriate offices for the central administrative force, which is now in Knoxville, at Muscle Shoals. That would have to take place over a period of time. But that is and has been our intention.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, I want to go back to a little ancient history. Do you remember yours and Dr. Morgan's "yardstick" theory, that you build three or four dams, not exceeding four, to teach the private power companies what they should charge for power, and that you did not intend to go into competition with private power companies? That is a long, long time ago, but that was your theory then.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It is a long time ago, but my recollection on it is clear. I never had the notion that that was our function.

The CHAIRMAN. The "yardstick" theory, you did not subscribe to that?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Not in the way you describe it, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. You remember the occasion, I know, and I know you were not in favor of those dams at that time. (That is the number of dams like the Chickamauga, Guntersville, Watts Bar, Gilbertsville, Fort Loudoun, and other dams.)

Mr. LILIENTHAL. If that is your recollection, I am sure you must have examined the record. I do not have a clear recollection about it.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you this question, although I believe you have already answered it. I want to make it very specific: Do you recall that all of your dams were built by Senate amendments offered by me after the House had refused you appropriations except for the Douglas Dam?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. No, sir; I would not think that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Which one was not offered by me?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. My recollection is that every one of these dams, none of these dams, have been built except such as have been recommended by the TVA and recommended by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. They were approved after my amendments had been agreed to by the Senate, and they went to conference. I call your attention to Guntersville, Chickamauga, Hiwassee, Gilbertsville, Watauga, Fort Loudoun, Cherokee, and all the other dams.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Senator, I remember any number of instances in which, as you say, dams recommended by the TVA were not approved initially in the House, and it was only when they got to the Senate that they were approved, and then in conference were retained.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you this question, and I am led to it because the newspapers have so much to say about it lately, about my opposition to the TVA: Have I ever opposed an appropriation for the TVA? Do you know of any appropriation that I ever in my legislative history opposed for the TVA?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I certainly do not.

The CHAIRMAN. There is this about it, Mr. Lilienthal, that the papers down there that publish these things are undertaking to distort the truth, and I want you to name any appropriation that I ever refused to give to the TVA for any dam. Now, just name a single solitary one. It takes appropriations to build dams. You know that. Now, can you name any appropriation, or any increase of an appropriation, that you have ever asked for to build a dam, that I refused?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Senator, I think the record is already clear on that. I answered a direct question on that and I will be glad to repeat it, that all the appropriations—well, answering your question, the opposition to appropriations relating to dams relate in particular only to this particular item (the Douglas Dam), and in the end the appropriation was granted.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to know of any others.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. There are not any others.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Now, on the question of the broader word "opposition," that is a matter of construction. We have differed on a question of policy.

The CHAIRMAN. Only a question of policy.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. In relation to section 26; that is all. (Sec. 26, paying his receipts into the Treasury.)

The CHAIRMAN. In relation to putting your receipts into the Treasury of the United States. That is the only one, is it not?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I have no recollection of any other one.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, I want to ask you this, in view of statements that have been made in newspapers: Are you or the TVA or any of the subordinates taking part in the senatorial campaign in Tennessee?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you, as an individual, or as head of the TVA, contributed any money or other thing of value to anyone in the present senatorial or gubernatorial campaign?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. No, sir.

Mr. President, in the interest of saving time I ask that all the testimony on this subject be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the testimony was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HISTORY OF RECOMMENDATION FOR DOUGLAS DAM

The CHAIRMAN. Do you recall that you first recommended these dams and then you thought that it would be better to build the Douglas Dam instead of these dams?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe the House put the Douglas Dam in and we agreed to it, or did we agree to it first?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I do not recall the details but I think the first way you stated it is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Incidentally, that is the only dam that was started in the House, of all these dams; is that correct?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I do not recall, but I think that is so.

The CHAIRMAN. That is my recollection.

COMPLETION FAVORED OF WATAUGA AND SOUTH HOLSTON DAMS

Now, whatever the past is, you now want to complete those dams.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes. These dams are partly completed, and they are good projects. They are necessary projects. We believe now is the time to complete them.

The CHAIRMAN. I am glad to hear it.

NO TVA APPOINTMENTS RECOMMENDED BY SENATOR M'KELLAR

In 1945 you were present before the committee and I asked you a question and I want to ask that question again, now.

Did I ever recommend any human being to you or to your Authority, so far as you know, to hold any office in your organization or any position in your organization?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Senator, so far as I can recall, and I think I would recall, you have never urged the appointment of any individual.

The CHAIRMAN. I am sure that is correct, and I want to thank you for that statement.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. If there are any exceptions I believe they would be purely formal recommendations.

ITEMS ON WHICH VIEWPOINTS DIFFERED

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you another question. Did I ever, in any way, try to interfere with your internal affairs at all except to have you pay your receipts into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Senator, if you mean personnel interference, of course, no.

The CHAIRMAN. Any interference?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. If you mean a difference of viewpoint, of course, there have been some differences. They have been, however, related to the Douglas Dam, to section 26, or similar matters, so far as I know.

The CHAIRMAN. What is section 26?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It concerns TVA's financial, fiscal policy.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, paying your receipts into the Treasury of the United States.

HISTORY OF SUBSTITUTION OF DOUGLAS DAM

As to the Douglas Dam, you recall that while I favored the building of the Holston River Dam and the Watauga first, that I agreed and the committee agreed, and that was done, and that the next year I put in, without recommendation from you, these two dams that we are now talking about. Is not that right?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. My recollection is somewhat different on those dams. My recollection is that your position was that these two dams be substituted for the Douglas Dam when it was recommended.

The CHAIRMAN. That is right.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. And the Holston projects were approved by Congress ahead of Douglas Dam.

The CHAIRMAN. All of them were put in.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes, sir. The difference there was a matter of timing. We always agreed with you and you agreed with us that these upper Holston dams should be built. The question was when construction should be undertaken.

The CHAIRMAN. That is fine, and that is correct.

PAYMENT OF PROCEEDS INTO THE TREASURY

I saw in the newspapers a few days ago that you had paid $12,000,000 of your receipts into the Treasury. Was that correct or not?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is approximately the figure. To get it exactly, $12,597,000.

The CHAIRMAN. That is as I remember it. You say that is correct?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. If you are opposed to the principle of your organization paying its moneys into the Treasury, why did you pay that $12,597,000?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. The payment of $12,597,000 was in accordance with the provisions of section 26 of the act in which we believe, and which we have urged, should not be changed. That section provides that 6 months after the end of the fiscal year such funds as the Board finds are not required for the purposes specified in section 26 shall be paid into the Treasury.

DIFFERING VIEWS AS TO PAYING WHOLE GROSS RECEIPTS INTO THE TREASURY

Our difference, Senator, was that we believe in the system of payment to the Treasury as set out in section 26 and as I understood your position you believed that section 26 which permits the use of receipts for certain operations described in that section, should be replaced with a general provision that currently, from day to day, all TVA receipts should go into the Treasury and that operating expenses should depend on appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. That is right. Just like the Post Office Department and just like every other of the many departments of the Government. That is correct. That is the difference.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is the difference.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as I know that is the only difference. I do not recall any others.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It was a difference about management policy, and we did our best to persuade each other.

The CHAIRMAN. And under that section you paid in $12,597,000.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Under section 26; yes, sir.

TRANSFER OF OFFICES TO MUSCLE SHOALS

The CHAIRMAN. Do you intend, or expect, or have you made any arrangements to move your principal offices from Tennessee to Muscle Shoals?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We do expect and have, since the first recommendation was made to the Bureau of the Budget in 1939 or 1940, to move, and to build appropriate offices for the central administrative force, which is now in Knoxville, at Muscle Shoals. The move would have to take place over a period of time. That is and has been our intention.

The CHAIRMAN. Then that is what you intended to do, and that was the substance of a statement that you gave out to the papers not a great while ago. I do not recall just when it was. They might have taken it from your report, but wherever they got it, I saw it in the papers.

RECOLLECTIONS OF ADVOCATING "YARDSTICK" THEORY

Now, I want to go back to a little ancient history. Do you remember your and Dr. Arthur Morgan's yardstick theory, that you build three or four dams, not exceeding four, to teach the private power companies what they should charge for power, and that you did not intend to go into competition with private power companies? That is a long time ago, but that was your theory then.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It is a long time ago, but my recollection on it is clear. I never have had the notion that that was our function.

The CHAIRMAN. The yardstick theory, you did not subscribe to that?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Not in the way you describe it, Senator. So far as the number of dams to be constructed is concerned, that was set out in a report of our Board to the Congress in 1936. It was called the unified development of the Tennessee River system, and provided for the building of virtually all the dams that have now been built.

HISTORY OF SENATE AMENDMENTS FOR CONSTRUCTION DAMS

The CHAIRMAN. But before that you and Dr. Morgan had wanted to limit the dams. In order to refresh your memory I will ask you if you do not recall on one occasion prior to 1936 when the Guntersville and the Chickamauga Dams were up. You and Dr. Morgan came to me, at the time I had offered the amendments in the Senate, and urged me not to do it, that you advised not to go into competition with the private power companies, and that you did not want those dams built, and you urged me to withdraw my amendment. You remember that occasion, I am sure.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. No, Senator, that is a long time ago, but I am sure this is true. My recollection checks with yours to this extent: We undoubtedly did have a difference of opinion about the Chickamauga Dam but only as to time construction should begin.

The CHAIRMAN. But you did not want it that year.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. My recollection is that we thought the Hiwassee Dam should be built ahead of the Chickamauga Dam. I would have to check that. But that is simply a question of when the dam should be built.

Whether the dam should be built or not, I think we were always in agreement that this whole system should be built.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you the same question, and I am sure you will remember the question asked previously. You and Dr. Morgan came to my office at the time when I offered an amendment to build the Guntersville Dam, the Chickamauga Dam, the Hiwassee Dam, and the Gilbertsville Dam, all four, for authorization to have them built and to furnish an appropriation for it. I remember your coming to me and asking me to withdraw my amendment, certainly for that year. I was surprised that you did not remember.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Senator, I do not want to get into a controversy over that.

The CHAIRMAN. No; but I do want to get the facts.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I do want to say this, that if there were such differences, and it is quite possible that there were differences, they would relate to engineering matters. It is very much like this Watauga and South Holston business.

The fact that for engineering reasons we would recommend that one dam be built ahead of another does not mean we are against the second one. It is our responsibility to make recommendations based on engineering data. It simply means, from an engineering point of view, that that is the most efficient way of scheduling such construction.

The CHAIRMAN. You remember the occasion, I know, and I know you were not in favor of those dams at that time.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. If that is your recollection, I am sure you must have examined the record. I do not have any recollection about it.

The CHAIRMAN. We will leave that alone.

I want to ask you this question, although I believe you have already answered it; I want to make it very specific: Do you recall that all of your dams were built by Senate amendments offered by me after the House had refused you appropriations except for the Douglas Dam?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. No, sir; I do not think that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Which one was not offered by me?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. My recollection is that except for the projects under consideration now, construction on none of these dams has been started until they had been recommended by the TVA and approved by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. They were approved after my amendments had been agreed to by the Senate and they went to conference.

I call your attention to Guntersville, Chickamauga, Hiwassee, Gilbertsville, Watauga, Fort Loudoun, Cherokee, and all the other dams. They were just exactly like the situation here today. For some reason the House Members did not agree to these appropriations, and when they came to the Senate, just like I expect my committee to do today, I offered an amendment. I am going to offer an amendment to get them in and then do everything within my power to get the House conferees to agree, and I hope to heaven they will, because I regard this as the final steps taken in one of the greatest projects that I have ever had anything to do with. It is one of the crowning projects of my legislative life, and I am very anxious to get it through.

But I recall very distinctly, and the record here shows, with the exception of the Douglas Dam and the two first dams that were built—Cove Creek Dam and the Wheeler Dam, which were built by allotments that I got the President to make from the WPA and which were continued by allotments I got from the President from the successor of it, the PWA—we got an appropriation, you remember. And possibly the Pickwick.

The first dams that we ever appropriated the money for were the Wheeler and the Cove Creek, which was afterwards called the Norris Dam. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Senator, do I remember a number of instances in which, as you say, the construction of dams recommended by the TVA was not approved in the House initially, and it was only when they got to the Senate that they were approved, and then in conference were retained.

From 1940 on, I think, however, the dams TVA recommended were first approved in the House. However, the record will show that.

NO TVA APPROPRIATION OPPOSED BY SENATOR M'KELLAR

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you this question, and I am led to it because the newspapers have so much to say about it lately, about my opposition to the TVA: Have I ever opposed an appropriation for the TVA? Do you know of any appropriation that I ever in my legislative history opposed for the TVA?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Your people down there, your supporters and your newspapers, and you have some newspapers down there that seem to be under your control, have frequently said that I was opposed to the TVA. What possible phase of the TVA have I ever opposed? Can you think of one?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Senator, if you will permit me, I should like to ask you to take out of the question the reference to "controlling newspapers." I am sure you did not mean that.

The CHAIRMAN. I know there are certain newspapers down there that are talking about my opposition to the TVA all the time, and it is so untrue that I feel that it is my duty to myself, as well as to you, that the facts might be known.

You know I have never opposed any appropriation of the TVA. Is not that true?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We have had differences, and some of them have related to appropriations, as, for example, the Douglas Dam.

The CHAIRMAN. That is where I gave in and approved it, and the record here shows it, and we passed a law approving it, and it was done with my vote as well as other votes. That is true, is it not?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. As far as I am concerned I do not see any advantage in emphasizing what the differences were with respect to Douglas Dam.

The CHAIRMAN. There is this about it, Mr. Lilienthal, that the papers down there that publish these things are undertaking to distort the truth, and I want you to name any appropriation that I ever refused to give to the TVA for any dam. Now, just name a single solitary one. It takes appropriations to build dams. You know that. Now, can you name any appropriation, or any increase of an appropriation, that you have ever asked for to build a dam, that I refused?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Senator, I think the record is already clear. I have answered a direct question on that already. I will be glad to repeat in answer to your question that so far as I know, opposition on your part to appropriations for dam construction is limited to Douglas Dam, and in the end that appropriation was granted.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to know of any others.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. There are no other cases.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I wanted to know.

DIFFERING VIEWS AS TO PAYING WHOLE GROSS RECEIPTS INTO THE TREASURY

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Now, on the question of the broader word "opposition," that is a matter of interpretation. We have differed on a question of policy relating to the management of TVA.

The CHAIRMAN. Only a question of policy.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. As expressed in section 26 of the TVA Act.

The CHAIRMAN. In relation to putting your receipts into the Treasury of the United States. That is the only one, is it not?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. At the moment I have no recollection of any other one.

POLICY AND PRACTICE OF TVA AS TO EMPLOYEES PARTICIPATING IN POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS

The CHAIRMAN. Now, I want to ask you this, in view of statements that have been made in newspapers: Are you or the TVA or any of the subordinates taking part in the senatorial campaign in Tennessee?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you, as an individual, or as head of the TVA, contributed any money or other thing of value to anyone in the present senatorial or gubernatorial campaign?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. No, sir; and I would like to expand on that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Are any of your officers taking part in that campaign?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Now I will be very happy to have you expand on your statement.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I would just like to restate what I stated last year about the policy of our Board and the management of the TVA with respect to the question you have raised of participation by our officials or employees in any kind of political campaigns.

At the very beginning of the TVA, before there was a Hatch Act, before there was a national policy on the question——

The CHAIRMAN. And you have a prohibition in your own act, too.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. In part because of certain provisions of the TVA Act we formulated a policy which goes beyond what later became the Hatch Act with respect to the participation of officers or employees in political matters, and political campaigns, even including local campaigns. Our policy went pretty far in the sense that it kept a lot of good citizens out of local affairs when for the community it perhaps might be better if they participated, but we thought it wise to make the rule very broad.

The penalties for violation were to be drastic, and fortunately I think there have only been two or three cases in all these years when discipline was required.

Now, bringing it down to the senatorial campaign, there is no reason to believe that that policy will not be observed in both the letter and the spirit in any future campaign.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1654) to provide for the registration and protection of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance:

Sundry candidates for appointment and promotion in the Regular Corps of the United States Public Health Service.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

Sundry officers for promotion in the Regular Army of the United States; and Sundry officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the President be immediately notified of all nominations confirmed this day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 26, 1946, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 25 (legislative day of March 5), 1946:

INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

John S. Hooker, of Maryland, to be United States Alternate Executive Director of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development for a term of 2 years and until his successor has been appointed.

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

Granville Mellen, of Mississippi, to be a member of the United States Maritime Commission for the unexpired term of 6 years from September 26, 1944.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 25, 1946

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of love and mercy, how unsearchable are Thy riches! O let the heart unveil the vision splendid, for the human soul is big with the sense of the future. As intellect seems so often sightless and wandering, we pray that the soul may lead us along the upward path. Over the broad earth Thy children are crying for help and bread. Needy millions, blinded by ignorance, are before us as a great opportunity for all loving hearts. O God, let us taste the comfort that comes to the soul when clothed with sacrificial action. Reenforce our minds with sympathy and justice for others; let us do our utmost, loyally and cheerfully, without anxiety or regret, for our times are in Thy hands. Be with us in our assigned place, direct us in our paths, and let our deeds sing the song of hope and praise. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5876 An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to extend and renew to Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co. for the term of 10 years a lease to Henry A. Scandrett, Walter J. Cummings, and George I. Haight, trustees of Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co., of a tract of land in the United States Department of Agriculture Range Livestock Experiment Station, in the State of Montana, and for a right-of-way to said tract, for the removal of gravel and ballast material, executed under the authority of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1936.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2341. An act to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2122. An act to facilitate the admission into the United States of the alien fiancées or fiancés of members of the armed forces of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 5716) entitled "An act to amend the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. HUFFMAN, and Mr. FERGUSON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Frank Waldrop.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by his colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin, Hon. JOHN W. BYRNES.

Mr. MAY and Mr. BUFFETT asked and were given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short newspaper article.

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial entitled "Tragedy of Britain."

Mr. SABATH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances, to include an editorial from the Chicago Sun, an editorial from the Chicago Times, and also an article.

COLLECTION AND PUBLICATION OF STATISTICAL INFORMATION

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the question on the motion to recommit the bill H. R. 5857.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 167, nays 161, not voting 104, as follows:

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5452) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. LUDLOW, O'NEAL, D'ALESANDRO, KOPPLEMANN, CANNON of Missouri, TABER, KEEFE, and CANFIELD.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES FOR CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEAL AND DISTRICT COURTS

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4230) to provide necessary officers and employees for circuit courts of appeals and district courts, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CRAVENS]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. BYRNE of New York, Mr. CRAVENS, and Mr. REED of Illinois.

PAY INCREASES FOR PERSONNEL OF THE ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, COAST GUARD, COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY, AND THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6084) to amend the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement on the part of the managers of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6084) to amend the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, so as to provide an increase in pay for personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That (a) the first paragraph of section 9 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The monthly base pay of enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard shall be as follows: Enlisted men of the first grade, $165; enlisted men of the second grade, $135; enlisted men of the third grade, $115; enlisted men of the fourth grade, $100; enlisted men of the fifth grade, $90; enlisted men of the sixth grade, $80; and enlisted men of the seventh grade, $75. Chief petty officers under acting appointment shall be included in the first grade at a monthly base pay of $150."

"(b) The third paragraph of section 9 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Every enlisted man paid under the provisions of this section shall receive an increase of 5 per centum of the base pay of his grade for each three years of service up to thirty years. Such service shall be active Federal service in any of the services mentioned in the title of this Act or reserve components thereof; service in the active National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia; and service in the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army, the Officers' Reserve Corps of the Army, the Naval Reserve, the Marine Corps Reserve, and the Coast Guard Reserve: Provided, That retired enlisted men heretofore or hereafter retired with credit for thirty years' service in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps and who served beyond the continental limits of the United States between 1898 and 1912, such service having been computed under previous laws as double time toward retirement, shall be entitled to receive the maximum retired pay now provided for the grade in which retired.

"(c) Section 11 of the act of March 4, 1925 (43 Stat. 1274; 34 U. S. C. 701), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 11. That the band of the United States Marine Corps shall consist of one leader whose pay and allowances shall be those of a captain in the Marine Corps; one second leader whose pay shall be $230 per month and who shall have the allowances of a sergeant major; ten principal musicians whose pay shall be $180 per month; twenty-five first-class musicians whose pay shall be $150 per month; twenty second-class musicians whose pay shall be $120 per month; and ten third-class musicians whose pay shall be $102 per month; such musicians of the band to have the allowances of a sergeant: Provided, That the second leader and musicians of the band shall receive the same increases for length of service and the same enlistment allowance or gratuity for reenlisting as is now or may hereafter be provided for other enlisted men of the Marine Corps: Provided further, That in the event of promotion of the second leader, or a musician of the band, to leader of the band, all service as such second leader, or as such musician of the band, or both, shall be counted in computing longevity increase in pay: And provided further, That hereafter during concert tours approved by the President, members of the Marine Band shall suffer no loss of allowances."

"(d) Retired members of the band of the United States Marine Corps and former members of the band of the United States Marine Corps heretofore transferred to the Fleet Marine Corps Reserve shall have their retired pay and retainer pay computed as now authorized by law on the basis of the pay provided in section 11 of the Act of March 4, 1925, as amended by subsection (c) of this Act, which pay shall include increases for all active duty performed since retirement or transfer to the Fleet Marine Corps Reserve in the computation of their longevity pay: Provided, That nothing contained in this Act shall operate to reduce the present pay of any former member of the band of the United States Marine Corps now on the retired list or drawing retainer pay.

"SEC. 2. (a) The second and third paragraphs of section 8 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'First mates and assistant engineers of the Army Mine Planter Service shall receive base pay at the rate of $2,340 per annum and shall be entitled to the money allowances for subsistence and for rental of quarters as established by sections 5 and 6 of this Act for officer receiving the pay of the first period.

"'Chief warrant officers of the Army except masters and chief engineers in the Army Mine Planter Service, and commissioned warrant officers with less than ten years of commissioned service, of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, shall receive base pay at the rate of $2,520 per annum and shall be entitled to the money allowances for subsistence and for rental of quarters as established by sections 5 and 6 of this Act for officers receiving the pay for the second period: Provided, That a commissioned warrant officer or chief warrant officer promoted from the grade of warrant officer or warrant officer (junior grade) shall suffer no reduction of pay by reason of such promotion: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held to affect the authority of the Secretary of War to designate permanent or temporary chief warrant officers of the Army to receive the base pay and allowances of the third and fourth pay periods as provided in section 3 of the Act approved August 21, 1941 (Public Law 230, Seventy-seventh Congress).'

"(b) The seventh paragraph of section 8 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'When the total pay and allowances authorized by this section for any person shall exceed the rate of $550 per month, the amount of the allowances to which such person is entitled shall be reduced by the amount above $550.'

"SEC. 3. The first paragraph of section 7 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'The annual base pay of a brigadier general of the Army or the Marine Corps, rear admiral (lower half) of the Navy, the Coast Guard, or the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Assistant Commandant of the Coast Guard, the Engineer in Chief of the Coast Guard, commodore of the Navy, an Assistant Director of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and an assistant to the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, shall be $6,600; and the annual base pay of a major general of the Army or the Marine Corps and of a rear admiral (upper half) of the Navy, the Coast Guard, or the Coast and Geodetic Survey, or the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall be $8,800. Every such officer shall be entitled to the money allowances for subsistence and for rental of quarters authorized in sections 5 and 6 of this Act for officers receiving the pay of the sixth period.'

"SEC. 4. The second paragraph of section 1 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

" 'The first period, $2,160; the second period, $2,400; the third period, $2,760; the fourth period, $3,300; the fifth period, $3,850; and the sixth period, $4,400.'

"SEC. 5. The increases in pay resulting from the amendments made by this Act to the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable to the active duty, retired, retirement, or retainer pay of all persons whose pay is governed by, or by reference to, those sections of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, which are amended by this Act.

"SEC. 6. Hereafter the retired or retirement pay of any person whose name is borne on the emergency officers' retired list of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States and who is entitled to receive retired or retirement pay shall, in lieu of being computed upon the basis of the pay to which he was entitled at the time of his discharge from his commissioned service, be computed upon the basis of the rate provided in the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended by this Act, for an officer of corresponding grade who is credited with the same number of years of service for longevity purposes as the number with which such person is credited.

"SEC. 7. The increases in pay provided by this Act shall become effective on the first day of the first calendar month following its enactment, and no increase in pay for any period prior thereto shall accrue by reason of the enactment of this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6084) to amend the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, so as to provide an increase in pay for personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the bill strikes out all after the enacting clause. The committee of conference recommend that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, with an amendment which is a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment, and that the Senate agree to the same.

Except for the differences noted in the following statement, the conference substitute is the same as the House bill.

INCREASE IN PAY RATES FOR MEMBERS OF MARINE BAND

The House bill contained no provisions affecting the pay rates of members of the Marine Band. Their rates of pay are not regulated by the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, but are fixed by section 11 of the act of March 4, 1925 (43 Stat. 1274). The Senate amendment contained a provision amending section 11 of the act of March 4, 1925, in such a manner as to give to the members of the band of the Marine Corps increases corresponding to those given to personnel of comparable grades paid under the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended. The conference agreement adopts those provisions of the Senate amendment relating to the pay of the Marine Band with two minor technical changes relating to the pay of the second leader of the band and to the pay of retired members of the band.

PAY INCREASES FOR COMMISSIONED OFFICERS ENTITLED TO PAY OF THE THIRD PERIOD

The House bill provided for increasing the pay of officers entitled to the pay of the third period from $2,400 to $2,640 a year. Generally speaking, officers entitled to the pay of the third period are captains in the Army and lieutenants in the Navy. The monetary increase provided by the House bill for these officers was less than that provided for any other class of officers. The conference agreement provides for increasing the pay of officers entitled to the pay of the third period from $2,400 to $2,760, which is a 15-percent increase as contrasted with the 10-percent increase provided in the House bill.

RETIRED OR RETIREMENT PAY OF EMERGENCY OFFICERS

The House bill contained no provisions affecting the retired or retirement pay of officers whose names are borne on the emergency officers' retired list of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States. The persons whose names are borne on this list are emergency officers of World War I who were disabled and were granted retired or retirement pay under special legislation. That legislation fixed their retired or retirement pay at 75 percent of the rate of pay which they were receiving at the time their commissions were terminated. The Senate amendment contained a provision providing, in effect, that hereafter the retired or retirement pay of this group of former officers should be based upon the higher rates provided in the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, for officers of corresponding grades. The conference agreement adopts this provision of the Senate amendment.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF PAY INCREASES

The House bill provided that the increases in pay should take effect on the first day of the second calendar month following the enactment of the bill. The Senate amendment contained a provision providing that the increases in pay should become effective on the first day of the first calendar month following the date of enactment. The conference agreement adopt that provision of the Senate bill.

ANDREW J. MAY,
R. E. THOMASON,
OVERTON BROOKS,
JOHN J. SPARKMAN,
WALTER G. ANDREWS,
DEWEY SHORT,
LESLIE C. ARENDS,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a very brief statement with respect to this matter.

This conference report returns to the House of Representatives the pay readjustment bill almost identically as it passed the House. The only change in the substance of the bill in any particular provision as it passed the House is one which increases the pay of the grade of captain 5 percent. The House bill had provided for a 10-percent raise, and by agreement of the conferees that was fixed at 15 percent.

The only other change was to include the Marine Corps Band, with increases in the same proportion as the other grades and ranks in the bill for other personnel of the armed forces.

The bill having been passed practically unanimously and having heretofore been debated, I have no requests for time at this time.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I simply wish to inform the Members of the House that this conference report was unanimously adopted, and once more I want to take advantage of this opportunity to compliment the subcommittee of our Committee on Military Affairs who worked so long and so hard to bring about the best pay bill, I think, since 1922. Particular credit goes to the chairman of that subcommittee, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of this committee exactly what happened to the amendment with reference to the scientists.

Mr. SHORT. That is not in this bill. That is in the draft bill.

Mr. MAY. That is in the draft bill.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I want every Member of this House, when we bring up this conference report on the draft, to bear in mind that we are passing this increased pay bill, which is a separate measure, and do not mess it up with the other issue.

Mr. MAY. That is correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I did not understand the change that was made in the pay bill which the gentleman stated.

Mr. MAY. The only change is to increase the captain's pay 5 percent and to include the Marine Corps Band on the same schedule as other personnel.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. This, then, retains the 50-percent increase for the lower grades in the personnel of the Army and Navy and auxiliary services.

Mr. MAY. It retains the 50-percent increase for the seven grades of enlisted personnel. I voted for the bill as it passed the House and trust this conference report will be adopted without a dissenting vote.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on this provision of this conference report.

The SPEAKER Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE TRAINING AND SERVICE ACT

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6064) to extend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the conference report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6064) to extend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That all of the provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, are hereby expressly reenacted, except those provisions which are hereinafter amended or repealed.

"SEC. 2. (a) So much of the first sentence of section 3 (a) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, as precedes the first proviso is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this act, every male citizen of the United States, and every other male person residing in the United States, who is between the ages of nineteen and forty-five, at the time fixed for his registration, or who attains the age of nineteen after having been required to register pursuant to section 2 of this Act, shall be liable for training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States:'.

"(b) The fourth proviso of the second sentence of section 3 (a) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'Provided further, That on July 1, 1946, the number of men in active training or service in the Army shall not exceed one million five hundred and fifty thousand, and that this number shall be reduced consistently month by month so that the Army's strength shall not exceed one million and seventy thousand on July 1, 1947: And provided further, That on July 1, 1947, the number of men in active training or service in the Navy shall not exceed five hundred and fifty-eight thousand and in the Marine Corps one hundred and eight thousand: And provided further, That the monthly requisitions on the President under this Act by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall not exceed the number of men required after consideration of the actual number of voluntary enlistments during the three months preceding that month in which the requisition is made. For the purposes of the fourth and fifth proviso of the preceding sentence, no man shall be deemed to be in active training or service or to be part of the strength of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, if—

"'(1) he is on terminal leave;

"'(2) he is a member of the detachment of patients who are to be discharged or relieved from active duty without being returned to an active duty status; or

"'(3) he is being processed, following completion of his period of service, for discharge or relief from active duty.'

"SEC. 3. Section 3 (b) of such Act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(b) Each man inducted on and after October 1, 1946, under the provisions of subsection (a) shall serve for a period of training and service of eighteen consecutive months (excluding time served while pursuing a course of instruction in a university, college, or other similar institution of learning), unless sooner discharged. Each man inducted prior to October 1, 1946, under the provisions of subsection (a) who shall have completed a period of training and service under this Act of eighteen months or more (excluding time served while pursuing a course of instruction in a university, college, or other similar institution of learning) shall, upon his request, on and after such date, be relieved from his period of training and service under this Act. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, whenever, after January 1, 1946, the Congress declares that the national interest is imperiled, such periods of training and service may be extended by the President to such time as may be necessary in the interest of national defense.'

"SEC. 4. Section 3 (e) of such Act, as amended, is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 5. (a) Section 5 (e) (1) of such Act, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof the following new sentence: 'No person shall be deferred for employment in industry except upon the basis of his then status in an industry essential to the national health, safety, or interest.'

"(b) Section 5 (e) (3) of such Act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(3) After May 14, 1946, no individual who has a child or children dependent upon him for support, or with whom he maintains a bona fide family relationship in their home, shall be inducted without his consent for training and service under this Act. As used in this paragraph, the term "child" includes a child legally adopted, a stepchild, a foster child, and a person who is supported in good faith by the individual in a relationship similar to that of a parent and child but such term does not include any person eighteen years of age or over unless such person is physically or mentally handicapped.'

"(c) Section 5 (e) of such Act, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"'(4) Any man inducted under the provisions of section 3 (a) of this Act who has a child or children, as hereinabove defined, dependent upon him for support, or with whom he maintains a bona fide family relationship in their home, shall, upon his request after August 1, 1946, be relieved from his period of training and service under this Act.'

"'(5) No individual shall be inducted without his consent for training and service under this Act, if he has served on active duty in the land or naval forces of the United States outside the continental limits of the United States or in Alaska; or if he has served on active duty in the land or naval forces of the United States for a period of at least six months after September 16, 1940 (excluding the time that any such individual so served while pursuing a course of instruction in a university, college, or other similar institution of learning). The provisions of this paragraph shall cease to be effective during any period after January 1, 1946, when the Congress or the President shall declare that the national interest is imperiled.'

"SEC. 6. Section 5 (m) of such Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(m) No individuals shall be called for induction, ordered to report to induction stations, or be inducted because of their occupations, or by occupational groups, or by groups in any plant or institutions, except pursuant to a requisition by the land or naval forces for persons in needed medical professional and specialists categories.'

"SEC. 7. Section 16 (b) of such Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) The provisions of the third sentence of section 3 (a) of this Act shall become inoperative and cease to apply at twelve o'clock post meridian on July 1, 1947. All of the other provisions of this Act, except the provisions of sections 3 (b), 3 (c), 3 (d), 8, and 16 (b), and the fourth and fifth provisos of the second sentence of section 3 (a), shall become inoperative and cease to apply at twelve o'clock post meridian on March 31, 1947, or on such earlier date as may be specified in a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress for that purpose, except as to offenses committed prior to such date. One day prior to the date of the termination of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, as herein or hereafter specified, all remaining functions and responsibilities of the Personnel Division established under the authority of section 8 (g) of such Act, and all records and balances of appropriations which have been utilized or are available for use in the administration of such functions of the Personnel Division of the Selective Service System, shall be transferred to such agency of the Federal Government as the Congress may designate, or, if none is so designated, to such agency of the Federal Government as the President may designate.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6064) to extend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House bill made persons between the ages of 20 and 30 liable for training and service under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended. The bill prohibited the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy from making requisitions for men on selective service during the period May 15, to October 15, 1946, and provided that requisitions might be made thereafter only with the approval of the President. The Senate amendment made men between the ages of 18 and 45 liable for training and service under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, and would have reestablished the age limits as they existed prior to the enactment of the joint resolution of May 14, 1946 (Public Law 379, 79th Cong.). The conference agreement makes men between the ages of 19 and 45 liable for such training and service and contains no provisions comparable to the House moratorium provisions.

The House bill provided that on July 1, 1947, the number of men in active training or service should not exceed 1,070,000 in the Army, 558,000 in the Navy, and 108,000 in the Marine Corps. The bill provided that monthly requisitions on selective service by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy should not exceed, after consideration of the actual number of volunteer enlistments during the previous month, the number of men required in view of the limitations established. The Senate bill contained similar provisions with respect to the strength of the services on July 1, 1947, and also established 1,550,000 as the limit of the strength of the Army on July 1, 1946. The Senate bill provided that the monthly requisitions for men made on the President by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy should not exceed the number of men required after considering the actual number of volunteer enlistments during the 3-month period preceding the month of making the requisition. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate bill in this respect, together with an amendment eliminating the necessity for the services to count, for the purposes of the strength limitations, certain classes of men who, although technically still military or naval personnel, are not in fact part of the effective strength of the services. The first of these classes is composed of officers on terminal leave. The second is composed of members of the detachment of patients who are to be discharged from the service or relieved from active duty as soon as their physical condition will permit them to be separated or as they can be transferred to Veterans' Administration facilities for further medical care and treatment. The third class is composed of men who are in, or en route to, separation centers.

The House bill provided that men heretofore or hereafter inducted should serve for a training and service period of 18 months unless sooner discharged. The Senate bill provided that men inducted after October 1, 1946, should serve for a period of 18 consecutive months, unless sooner discharged. The Senate bill also provided that men inducted prior to October 1, 1946, should, upon completion of a period of training and service of 18 months or more, on or after such date, be relieved from active service upon their own request. The Senate bill provided that whenever after January 1, 1946, the Congress should declare that the national interest is imperiled, the periods of training and service might be extended by the President to such time as would be necessary in the interest of national defense. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate bill in this respect, together with amendments which provide that service performed while pursuing a course of instruction in a university, college, or other similar institution of learning shall not be counted in computing the required period of 18 months' service.

The Senate amendment contained a provision repealing section 3 (e) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended. This section is the one which provides that persons inducted into the land forces of the United States shall not be employed beyond the Western Hemisphere except in the Territories and possessions of the United States, including the Philippine Islands. The section was suspended for the period of the war and 6 months by the joint resolution of December 13, 1941 (55 Stat. 799). The House bill contained no provision affecting section 3 (e). The conference agreement adopts the provision of the Senate bill repealing section 3 (e).

The House bill provided that after May 15, 1946, no individual having a child should be inducted without his consent for training and service. The Senate bill also provided for exemption from training and service of individuals having a child or children, but limited the application of the provision to those individuals having a child or children dependent upon them for support or with whom they maintained bona fide family relationships in their homes. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment with respect to this matter.

The Senate bill added a provision to the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, requiring that inducted men who have one or more children dependent upon them for support or with whom they maintain bona fide family relationships within their homes be relieved from training and service upon their request made after August 1, 1946. The House bill did not contain any similar provision relating to men who had actually been inducted. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision with respect to this matter.

The Senate amendment contained a provision prohibiting the induction of persons who have served for any period of time on active duty in the land or naval forces of the United States outside the continental limits of the United States or in Alaska, and prohibiting the induction of men who have served on active duty in the land or naval forces of the United States in any place for a period of at least 6 months after September 16, 1940 (excluding time served while pursuing a course of instruction in a university, college, or a similar institution of learning). These prohibitions on inductions were not to be effective at any time after January 1, 1946, if the Congress or the President should declare the national interest to be imperiled. The conference agreement adopts these provisions of the Senate amendment.

The House bill added to section 5 (k) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended (relating to agricultural deferments), a new sentence to the effect that in administering such section local selective service boards in classifying registrants should base their findings solely and exclusively on whether the registrants were necessary to and regularly engaged in agricultural occupations or endeavors. The conference agreement contains no provisions modifying existing law with respect to deferments of persons engaged in agricultural occupations or endeavors. The conference agreement does, however, insert in the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, a provision to the effect that no person shall be deferred for employment in industry except upon the basis of his then status in an industry essential to the national health, safety, or interest.

The Senate amendment contained a provision rewriting section 5 (m) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, to eliminate so much of that section as provided for the induction of pre-Pearl Harbor fathers after the induction of other registrants. The elimination of such provisions was based upon the fact that other provisions of the Senate amendment had prohibited the induction of any fathers having children dependent upon them or with whom they maintained bona fide family relationships and had further provided for the discharge of fathers previously inducted. The House bill contained no provisions amending section 5 (m). The conference agreement adopts the amendment to section 5 (m) proposed by the Senate amendment.

The House bill extended the period of effectiveness of all provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, to February 15, 1947, or such earlier date as might be specified in a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress. The House bill also provided that the entire section 8 of such act (relating to reemployment rights of veterans) should be permanent law. Under existing law only so much of such section as provides for the establishment of a Personnel Division in the Selective Service System is permanent law. The House bill provided that on February 15, 1947, or on such earlier date as might be specified in a concurrent resolution terminating the provisions of the act which are not specifically continued, all of the functions, responsibilities, records, and property of the Personnel Division of the Selective Service System should be transferred to such agency of the Federal Government as the Congress might designate, or, if none should be so designated, to such agency as the President might describe. The Senate amendment provided for an extension of the period of effectiveness of the act generally to May 15, 1947, or such earlier date as might be specified in a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress. The Senate amendment also made the entire section 8 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, permanent law. The Senate amendment further provided that the provisions of the bill relating to the limitations on the strength of the armed forces should not become inoperative on the date when the act generally would expire. The Senate amendment provided that 1 day prior to the general expiration of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, the functions, responsibilities, records, and balances of appropriations of the Personnel Division of the Selective Service System should be transferred to the Veterans Employment Service of the United States Employment Service. The conference agreement adopts the date of March 31, 1947, as the date on which the Selective Training and Service Act generally will expire. The conference agreement makes the entire section 8 of such act permanent law and also makes section 3 (b) of the act (establishing the 18 months period of service) permanent law. The conference agreement also provides that those provisions imposing strength limitations on the armed forces on certain dates in the future and establishing a rule with respect to the computation of strength shall not cease to be effective on the date on which the act generally expires. The conference agreement provides for the transfer, 1 day prior to the termination of the Selective Training and Service Act, of the remaining functions and responsibilities of the Personnel Division of the Selective Service System to such agency of the Federal Government as the Congress may designate, or, if none is so designated, to such agency of the Federal Government as the President may designate.

The Senate amendment included a provision providing for the deferment from training and service of certain students in scientific and engineering schools and of certain other persons engaged in scientific and engineering activities. As the conferees were of the opinion that existing law contains adequate authority for whatever deferments of scientific and engineering students and other scientific and engineering personnel that may be necessary, the conference agreement does not include any of the provisions of the Senate amendment relating to this matter.

The Senate amendment contained several provisions affecting the pay of military and naval personnel and persons on the emergency officers' retired lists. The House bill contained no provisions relating to the pay of such personnel. As the entire matter of pay or personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Public Health Service, and Coast and Geodetic Survey is dealt with in H. R. 6084, upon which the conferees have currently reached a complete agreement, this conference agreement contains no provisions relating to pay.

Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of this report and the fact that so many requests for time have been made, I wonder if we might have an additional hour to discuss this matter.

Mr. MAY. No.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we have an additional 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MAY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleague will not insist upon that request, because there are two or three other conference reports coming up today.

Mr. SHORT. I know that there are many important conference reports to be acted on today, but we met at 10 o'clock and it is now only 11. We can sit here until midnight or 2 o'clock in the morning. We have done it before.

Mr. MAY. Let me say to my genial friend and colleague that it is only 6 days now until this act expires. The same applies to the OPA. I am leary of the fact that we may run into some difficulty in connection with some of these matters and have to reenact the old legislation.

Mr. SHORT. Could we not have an additional 30 minutes?

Mr. MAY. I am going to yield to the gentleman what time I can.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my request that the time be extended 30 minutes.

Mr. WALTER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I am going to take just a very few minutes for the purpose of calling attention to some of the high spots in this report.

Everyone remembers that the House bill as passed and sent to the Senate contained a provision fixing the minimum age for the drafting of men for military service at 20 years and the maximum age at 30 years. The Senate in the consideration of the measure sent to it from the House, struck out everything after the enacting clause and wrote a new bill, which constituted one amendment to the House bill. At the conference, which was attended for several days and on numerous occasions, there was detailed discussion of every provision of both bills.

May I add here in answer to a lot of newspaper columnists' criticism of the conferees and the proceedings in the conference that it was a gentlemanly procedure, well behaved, with everybody in a good humor, the reports to the contrary notwithstanding. It was, however, a matter of strong contention on both sides. I think everybody in this Chamber knows that every conference report is the result of give and take. You cannot always have your own way. If any one side of a conference could just write its own bill there would be no necessity for a conference. It is because there are contentions and disputes on differences in judgment that these measures go to conference.

Everyone knows I have fought courageously and bravely here to keep the teen-agers out of the military service in peacetime, but when the conferees came to that question I had to yield a part of the way, not all of the way. We compromised that by fixing the minimum age at 19 and the maximum age at 44. All men who are physically qualified between those ages are subject to induction, with certain exceptions.

There is one other thing I think you ought to know, and I think it is helpful in this matter, that during the actual conduct of the war there were about 4,500,000 men deferred from military duty on the ground of essentiality in war industries, some of them in the class known as IV-F. Many thousands of others were classified for deferment during the actual combat period of the war and for numerous reasons were also deferred from military service. We have removed these from the group who may be deferred, for reason that they are no longer engaged in war-production industries.

We provide in the conference report that these men cannot be any longer deferred for military reasons because of the fact they are no longer engaged in the production of munitions for war or war equipment. We also fixed the size of the armed forces as of two dates. As of July 1, 1946, the size of the Army is fixed at 1,550,000. On July 1, 1947, that is required to be brought down to 1,070,000. In the consideration of that matter we arrived at the conclusion that in determining the size of the Army at those particular times there ought not to be included three groups of men:

First. Those on terminal leave.

Second. Those who are in a detachment of patients who are to be discharged or relieved from active duty without being returned to their active-duty status.

Third. Those being processed and now in or going to reception or discharge centers.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA. The gentleman mentioned that the draft age had been raised to 19 years. I notice in section 3 the language reads "between the ages of 18 and 45." Is that the customary limitation being provided by putting it that way? Is it the intention of the conferees that the boy does not become subject to the draft until he is 19 years old?

Mr. MAY. The act in another section, the number of which I do not recall at the moment, specifically provides that when they reach their nineteenth birthday they are eligible for induction and not until then. Therefore, that exempts the 18-year-olds from induction under the draft. That was and is the purpose and intent of the bill to be sure no one who has not reached 19 years of age will be drafted.

Mr. KUNKEL. With reference to the figures that you quoted as to the size of the Army on July 1, 1946 and 1947, respectively, are those figures acceptable to the Army?

Mr. MAY. That is the recommendation of the Army, as I recall it, in the hearings before our committee.

There were a lot of questions propounded to me during the time of the conference meetings on the subject of whether or not scientists and other experts were to be deferred for that reason. We eliminated that provision and they are not to be deferred except under the provisions of the law as it originally existed subject to the requirements of the Secretary of War and regulations of the Selective Service System.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot urge too strongly the very real necessity for prompt adoption of the pending conference report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, one of the world's greatest characters once said:

> To act contrary to conscience is neither safe nor upright.

Again he said:

> Here I stand, I can do no other, God help me.

One of our wisest American philosophers once stated:

> To be great is to be alone.

History is replete with men and incidents which corroborate this immortal truth.

One of our greatest Presidents once said:

> Let us have faith that right makes might.

And again he said:

> Never let us be slandered from our duty by false accusations against us, nor frightened from it by menaces of destruction to the Government, nor of dungeons to ourselves.

Mr. Speaker, these quotations were not uttered by Judas Iscariot, Aaron Burr, or Benedict Arnold; they were uttered by honest, intelligent, and patriotic men, who loved God, their country, and all mankind.

These criteria they uttered, we should follow in voting on this conference report.

No person in or out of this Chamber has higher admiration or deeper gratitude for the leaders of our armed forces who did such a marvelous job in winning the two wars from which we have triumphantly emerged than I. This goes for the Secretaries of War and Navy and their assistants.

It is needless for me to remind you that on different occasions I have defended and praised the generals and admirals, but I know they are human, not at all infallible, and do not hesitate to differ with them. I want to maintain their respect as they have mine. They fight wars; we determine policy.

Sir, because of unsettled conditions and conflicting interests in this uncertain and troubled war-torn world, we all agree that America must remain strong.

As George Washington once said:

If we wish to avoid insult we must be prepared to repel it.

And Theodore Roosevelt was realistic when he said:

Speak softly but carry a big stick.

I might also quote an old adage, "Trust God, but keep your powder dry."

There are brigands still loose in this world who can understand only the language of force. Last autumn I declared that we were demobilizing too many too fast. It was not popular then.

At all times we must be able to defend ourselves and contribute our part to the establishment of a just and lasting peace. Who wants it otherwise?

Mr. Speaker, all of us believe in adequate national defense and want to live peaceably with all men. But we differ only as to the method whereby these worthy objectives can be achieved.

No wonder the public is confused because Members of Congress are bewildered by the many conflicting reports and sets of figures given out by the leaders of our armed forces and selective service.

Well do we remember the dire predictions made during the war. We were told by those in high command that unless nurses were drafted we would lose the war. A determined effort was also made to pass a work-or-fight bill which would have enslaved our free workers. But history has proved and experience has shown that free men and women can always out-work, out-produce, and outfight slaves. We do not want to maintain military controls in this country or perpetuate wartime methods and procedures during peace. Let us keep America a republic where democratic processes still rule.

Following VJ-day last fall we were told by the military that we could possibly raise 300,000 volunteers by May of this year. The fact is we have now raised more than 800,000.

At long last the Senate has agreed with a minor amendment to accept the House bill we passed some time ago appreciably increasing the pay of all men and women in our armed services. Now that we have passed the conference report on the increased pay bill we will have no difficulty in getting a sufficient number of volunteers. Everyone admits his belief in this, but still some half-heartedly entertain doubt.

Even the military admits that a volunteer Army is the best Army and the Senate conferees, as well as those of the House, expressed the belief that the volunteer system would get all the men necessary to reach our goal. They likewise admitted that increased pay would stimulate and encourage men to volunteer but for some strange reason stubbornly refused to vote the increase in pay until we had passed the draft bill. It is also queer that the War Department—if it wants volunteers—raises the standards for volunteers and lowers the standards for draftees.

The House, I believe, won a victory in prohibiting the draft of 18-year-old boys. Personally I would like to see the draft automatically end and the volunteer system be given a fair trial. A southern gentleman of the other body hit the nail on the head when he pointed out that as long as we have a mixture of the volunteer and compulsory systems we can never have a fair trial of the volunteer system.

Mr. Speaker, a prominent magazine refers to me as "Missouri's mulish DEWEY SHORT" but I want to assure all of you that I do not want to be obstinate because of sheer obstinacy. I am glad, however, that I can be stubborn at times, particularly on basic principles and on a fundamental issue.

It is claimed that the drafting of 18- and 19-year-old youths is necessary to carry out our foreign commitments. Pray tell me—what are our foreign commitments? No peace treaty has yet been signed and too many secret conferences have been held behind closed doors. The American people and even Members of Congress have been kept in the dark. No definite decisions have been reached upon the handling of the atomic bomb, and no one yet knows what our contribution is to be to the international police force under the United Nations.

To be sure teen-age boys are bold and daring in combat but even in battle their casualties are terrific and certainly they are not well fitted for occupational purposes. I am glad in conference we eliminated 18-year-old boys—but even 19-year-old boys do not make good policemen and are not capable of self-control under the conditions they must cope with in foreign countries. They are susceptible to every temptation in a foreign land when removed from the influences of home, church, and school in their native land. It is bad enough when older men with mature judgment are segregated and removed from the refining influences in a normal society.

The amount of venereal diseases among our troops abroad is appalling and one naturally wonders what the future generation in our country will be.

Any one of us who has visited foreign countries and who has talked to our friends, recently returned, read the letters from our men abroad, and the articles of editors recently returned, knows that today our army of occupation, especially in Europe, is a near joke.

It is composed of three classes:

First. Eighteen- and nineteen-year-old boys—young, untrained, undisciplined, and inexperienced.

Second. Rascals and riffraff, who have reenlisted to rape, plunder, and loot.

Third. Brass hats who want to retain their rank and pay and who are living the life of Riley on the misery of conquered peoples.

This is rather plain and unpleasant speech, but is too true. I will qualify the statement by the fact that there are some fine, clean, patriotic boys and officers abroad—and it is through them that I receive much of my information. May I suggest you read the article in the Saturday Evening Post of June 22, 1946. Remember that each one of our soldiers abroad is not only a representative of our Army but also an ambassador of our country. Naturally, the people in Europe have only contempt for these young, and too many irresponsible lads, who do not possess the mature judgment to take care of themselves or represent us abroad. We need older and more professionally trained men at decent salaries to do a good job.

Mr. Speaker, a boy not old enough to exercise the full rights of citizenship ought not to be compelled to carry the full responsibility of citizenship. Conscription in peacetime of anyone is repugnant to reason and distasteful to free men. It is dishonorable to draft legal minors unless the very life of our Nation is at stake.

Do not forget, sir, that our enemies had conscription and today are thoroughly beaten. We do not want to adopt the system they had which utterly failed, or to worship their false gods and put our trust wholly in military might.

"Not by might nor by power but by my spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

It is generally agreed that the next war will be as different from the one just ended as this war was from the one fought a quarter of a century ago. The next war will largely be fought in laboratories and test tubes—perhaps by pushing buttons, touching off pilotless planes and jet-propelled rockets carrying atomic energy, which would render obsolete any large standing army within a few years or even months after its training. While trained men are still necessary, future wars will not be won by mass armies.

In this atomic age our country will be much safer if the youths of today are highly trained and well educated in our technical and scientific schools in the newest and most effective methods and weapons of warfare. We need doctors, dentists, engineers, technicians, technologists—scientists in every field.

It will be remembered that the War Department told the Members of Congress in our Congressional Library that a force of 400,000 men was needed to occupy Japan, but the next day General MacArthur informed us that he could do the job with 200,000. It is also interesting to note that General McNarney last Friday said that a plan was in existence to reduce American occupation forces in Germany to 150,000 men. This is less than one-half the number we have there now. He is right.

Mr. Speaker, it is generally admitted by both military and civilian officials who are competent to speak that a volunteer army is the best army. It is more efficient, it is possible, and certainly it is preferable. We can secure it, as proved, by the figures of the War Department itself—by increasing pay, improving living and working conditions, providing for promotion within the ranks, by eliminating unnecessary caste distinctions, and by putting an end to a mixture of the compulsory system with the volunteer system.

As American cannot remain half slave and half free, so the morale of an army cannot be maintained when half volunteer and half conscripted. The conference report should be voted down.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to use the eloquent speech such as my good friend and associate, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] has presented to this House. I merely want to talk to you today as I talked at that conference committee and give you the ideas which came to my mind as they came to the conference committee and the reasons which actuated me finally in signing the conference report.

I entered the conference as everybody else entered it knowing that we do have world responsibilities, knowing that we do have commitments of some kind or character. Anybody who has read the newspapers, listened to the radios, and talked to anyone else in this age knows that we have responsibilities, commitments, and obligations that require the use of armed forces in many parts of the world. I sat there in that conference committee and thought of the some 350,000 men who gave their lives in this war that has just come to a conclusion, and I felt an abiding sense of obligation resulting from the sacrifices of those men who made the supreme sacrifice for their country, those men who gave up their time, their service, and their bodies, if necessary, to bring peace back to the world. This is a troublesome peace, though, and it does require force and it does require commitments and activity all over the world.

Mr. Speaker, we were told by the Army that we need an Army of 1,070,000 men as of July 1947. I do not think there was any dispute about that among any of the conferees. The question is how to gain and maintain that size Army and meet the needs which we are told exist.

I went into the conference representing this side of the Capitol which had already voted to set the minimum age at 20. We met over there another group at the other end of the Capitol that had voted just as strongly as we had voted for the age of 18. When our first vote was taken there in conference, it was agreed that we would raise the age limit set in the House bill from 30 to 45 and, as far as I know, there was no objection to that. The objection and the fight came, as you will know from reading the press and listening to the radio, over the question of teen-agers.

When this bill first came before the House I voted with the majority in the House to eliminate teen-age draftees, so anxious was I not to draft our young men. I served in the First World War, if you will pardon a personal reference, as a teen-age man. I volunteered at the age of 18 and served overseas in the army of occupation in Germany below the age of 20. I know something about the duties of occupation troops in a foreign land in a time of peace after the fighting is over. But I also knew that the Nation and its sons had made a tremendous sacrifice, and I sat there in conference and tried to work out some arrangement which would give the Army and the Navy what they needed in manpower, and at the same time not hurt the country.

I first suggested, reluctantly, Mr. Speaker, that we go down using the age of 19 as a base, and then in certain emergencies, as foreseen by the Secretaries of War and the Navy, it was my thought that we might permit the President, upon the showing of an unusual emergency, to dip down, if necessary, into the 18-age group to a limited extent and take the men necessary to fill the ranks of the Army if they were depleted by lack of volunteers. You and I know that the conferees did not agree upon that. They came to use the age of 19 as a base, and I personally now believe that it will do the job.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this, that we find there are 100,000 men deferred for school purposes, and 60,000 who have attained the age of 19 since the suspension of the draft of teen-agers. By working into that group of deferred men upon reaching the age of 19, by utilizing the 9,000 men who may be obtained from the group of 20 and above, together with the volunteers that we feel assuredly must come, I think that this bill will meet the needs of the armed forces and will give the Army a force that it can rely upon. I am most anxious, Mr. Speaker, that this Nation return to a volunteer system as soon as possible. I want to stop this draft. But this Nation must not lose the fruits of victory for which it has paid a fabulous sacrifice in men and blood by lassitude and inaction on our part.

In addition to this, this bill provides for the return after 18 months of service of all enlisted men presently inducted in service. It provides for the immediate release of all fathers and prohibits the further induction of men with children. Overseas today are hundreds of thousands of men who have served many months, some far in excess of 18 months, who are entitled to come home. Overseas are thousands of fathers who have never seen their babies; and who have done their full part. We must not forget the men who have served.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS].

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, as the membership so well recalls, the House has on two different occasions expressed itself in favor of exempting teen-agers from any further draft. Since the Senate had gone on record favoring the drafting of 18- and 19-year-old boys, this problem was the most troublesome item in dispute between the Senate and the House.

As is so often the case, this conference report is a matter of compromise in order to bring about an agreement. I have publicly gone on record opposed to drafting teen-aged boys. In this report, I agreed to the drafting of 19-year-old boys but stood firm in my opposition to drafting any 18-year-old boy.

First. The report now before us extends the Draft Act to March 31, 1947.

Second. Under the provisions of this act, every male citizen in the United States between the ages of 19 and 45 stands liable for training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States.

Third. Anyone heretofore or hereafter inducted must serve for a period of 18 months.

Fourth. All fathers are to be released upon their own request by August 1, 1946.

Fifth. There are no occupational deferments in the bill, such matter being a problem of Selective Service.

Sixth. No individual who has served overseas or for a period of longer than 6 months in this country, is to be reinducted.

Seventh. No credit is given the individual who served while pursuing a course of instruction in a university or college.

Mr. Speaker, there is a great question as to whether or not it becomes necessary during peacetime for this Nation to draft teen-aged boys as well as any other individuals of any age, in order to meet the manpower requirements of our armed forces. I think the vast majority of the Congress agree that a volunteer Army and Navy would be of greater service to this country if sufficient volunteers could be had. In an effort to make the service more attractive and draw such volunteers the Congress has today passed a new Pay Act which increases the pay of the buck private or apprentice seaman by 50 percent or otherwise brings his base pay to $75 a month. Increased pay on a percentage basis follows all along the line, up to and including the highest ranking general. It is my honest opinion that with the approximately 9,000 men who are each month available within the age bracket of 20 to 30 there will be sufficient volunteers under the new Pay Act which will no longer make it necessary for the Army and Navy to any longer draft teen-aged boys. In fact, the Navy by September of this year will have released all drafted men and be on a strictly volunteer basis. That same program, I hope, can be found to exist shortly within the Army.

It is interesting to note the rate of volunteering during the last 10 months. One item of particular interest is the fact that the Army during the last half of May got more volunteers than they did during the first half, at which time the drafting of teen-agers was inoperative. In addition, it is interesting to learn that for the first week in June there were more volunteers than for any single week during May.

The Army monthly requirements between now and next April 1 will be approximately 30,000 men. Taking out the 9,000 mentioned above this leaves 21,000 per month to be enlisted. At the rate of enlistments to date it seems to me that such volunteers will be forthcoming. There were 48,000 volunteers in May. Already we have approximately 800,000 volunteers in the Army, and, let me repeat, I am convinced that if the War Department will apply itself to the best of its ability volunteer enlistments may well fill our Army requirements.

The War Department at one stage testified that they felt 300,000 would be the greatest number of volunteers they might expect to be able to obtain over the year. Already they have missed their guess by 500,000.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that we are in any way handicapping or crippling the Army by a limitation in age for those liable to service. I feel certain and convinced that we can, and will, get a volunteer Army sufficient in force to carry out the world assignments and commitments to which we are obligated. Nothing will please me more when such time arrives that we have an Army and Navy made up completely of volunteers.

I feel this conference report should be adopted.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. May I ask the gentleman if it is his understanding that we require in this legislation that the Army first consider all volunteers before they draft anybody?

Mr. ARENDS. That is right; they must first take all volunteers into consideration before drafting any individual.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I think the gentleman stated that fathers would not be released until August 1947. Did not the gentleman mean 1946?

Mr. ARENDS. Yes; upon their own request by August 1, 1946.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman also stated that the draft was extended only until March of 1947?

Mr. ARENDS. Yes; March 31, 1947.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is it a fact that the Army has raised the physical requirements as to the men now enlisting?

Mr. ARENDS. That is the report.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. As this act is written, does it not provide for compulsory military training in peacetime and for the retaining of 19-year-olds for foreign service just as long as the President wants them?

Mr. ARENDS. That is not quite correct. There is an 18-month limitation on length of service for the inductee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHERIDAN].

Mr. SHERIDAN. Mr. Speaker, we heard the report of the conferees that we have to meet our war responsibilities. We can meet them in every way. Only today as I came down from Philadelphia I read that the voluntary enlistments are 122 percent of the necessary quota, and I understand that the voluntary enlistments on last Friday were 132 percent of the daily quota. I suppose the reason for the exceptional voluntary enlistments is the anticipation of the increased pay. None of those boys were subject to the provisions of the draft as it is now constituted.

Let me call attention to this further report, which I do not believe has as yet been filed but which will be filed with our committee. A survey was ordered of the Bremen area by the commanding general of that area. This is what I want you to pay particular attention to. This report shows that the moral looseness was especially injurious to the 18- and 19-year-olds in the occupation forces, and he was speaking specifically of the Bremen area. The report was that not only is this condition physically dangerous to the soldier but it is found to result in poor soldiering. That comes from the Army itself.

We might also recall that just a few days ago we passed the Navy appropriation bill. The conferees report here that the Navy has 558,000 men provided for. This statement is not correct. The Navy appropriation provides for 435,000 men, and the Navy is receiving its entire complement by voluntary enlistments.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the extension of selective service on four grounds. In the first place, it is not needed. In the second place, it interferes seriously with the educational program of the country. In the third place, it does not make any provision for exempting farm workers who are so badly needed in this present emergency to raise food. In the fourth place, the extension of the draft will defeat the best brand of preparedness for our Nation.

Why is the draft not needed? Mr. Patterson told us last March when he came before the committee, and you will find his remarks on page 18 of the hearings, that we could raise 800,000 men by volunteer enlistments. I have made a computation of the present make-up of the Army. I find we are going to reach 800,000 enlisted men, that is, by volunteers, by July 1. Mr. Patterson also said on that occasion that the estimated enlistment of 30,000 a month for the last half of this year and 20,000 per month all through 1947 would maintain an army of 800,000 enlisted volunteers. I find in my computation of the average attrition in the Army and the expiration of enlistment periods of those who have already enlisted that that will be the case. Let us examine what the needs are. The needs are estimated at 1,070,000 a year from this July 1. Take from that 100,000 officers and 50,000 Filipino scouts, 20,000 Wacs, and some 50,000 drafted men who will still be in service even though the draft is not extended beyond July 1, and you will find you have with that make-up of the Army 1,020,000—only 50,000 short of the goal. Remember further that that estimate of enlistments is made without any consideration for a pay increase which just passed the House.

Now, we cannot go off the deep end and sacrifice American principles in order to raise only 50,000 soldiers by the draft method. What group are they looking to? There are two principle groups you will find from the hearings. One group is the educational group that has been deferred because of school. On May 13 I gave you the data on that. You can look it up in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We have a pool of boys deferred to go to school. That is the first group that is going to be taken in under this draft. Those who are over 19 years of age in this group will be the first to be taken. What are other countries doing? While we have discharged and returned home a number of veterans equivalent to 5 years of potential students, the total enrollment in science and engineering on May 1 was equal to only one-half of 1 year's normal enrollment. At the same time foreign students in our schools of science and engineering have run 200 percent above prewar enrollment and there are 50,000 more applicants from foreign countries to enter our schools of science and engineering. If all these foreign applicants were admitted to our schools the number would be eight times the number of normal enrollments of foreign students in our schools of science and engineering in 1941. We will be taking our own boys from that pool of students and bringing in foreign students.

The other point is the matter of farm deferments. We have the Flannagan and the Tydings amendment which is in the law, but during our discussion Mr. ARENDS, of Illinois, and I worked very hard to include a further exemption of farm workers, a little more liberal than is provided in the Flannagan bill. We got it in there but if you read the conference report you will find they struck that out. So there is your other pool. They are reaching for the farm workers while we are trying to feed the world. Is that logical to reach for your two prime sources—the students whom we can ill afford to spare for the development of science and engineering and the farm workers when we are trying to feed the world.

The other point of my opposition to extension of the draft is that the adoption of compulsory military service in peacetime weakens our national defense. We will have an Army of 1,070,000 men; a Navy of 558,000 men; Marine Corps, 108,000; National Guard 550,000; and 600,000 Reserve Army and Navy officers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. We will have an armed force of 2,500,000 to 3,000,000 men. Then, we should add to that the recent dischargees who have training recently enough to be worth something, from 500,000 to 1,000,000 men. That gives a total of 3,500,000 men trained for combat. In World War II we had need for 12,000,000 in active military and naval service. In event another world war should come, where are we going to get the other 9,000,000 men with any training at all unless we adopt a universal training program? The Army and Navy officials say they cannot run conscription for service and the universal military training contemporaneously. They are asking us for an easy way to raise 50,000 soldiers. If the War Department and the Army officials succeed in extending the draft, 9,000,000 children of today will be sentenced to go into combat without any training at all if a world war strikes us during their young manhood. This is far too high a price for them and for our Nation to pay for a peacetime draft that not only is in complete violation of our American principles but is not even needed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to make inquiry of the chairman of the committee concerning the language on page 3 of the conference report, under paragraph 5, which has to do with the deferment of those already having served on active duty. At the conclusion of the war it was acknowledged that those who had served in the merchant marine for 30 months would be exempted from further service. Likewise, there is another classification — technicians — who have served with the armed forces abroad during this war, both in the European theater and the Asiatic theater, for as many months, right along with our troops. I wonder if the gentleman expects to induct into the armed forces of the United States those who have already served a period in the merchant marine and those who have served a period as technicians with the armed forces in the theaters of war. These men were not inducted purposely, because the War Department wanted their services to be as employees of aircraft companies and other suppliers of war materials.

Mr. MAY. The bill as passed does not exempt them from induction, but they have the same rights to deferment that they would have had otherwise under the original act.

Mr. HINSHAW. Which is nothing at all, except at the pleasure of the Director of Selective Service and his military advisers.

Mr. MAY. They can make claim for deferment and then it is up to the local boards to determine. The reason why we did that was there are two other groups, one in the Navy and one in the Army, that is in that particular situation and we thought it was right to treat them all equally.

Mr. HINSHAW. In other words, it is entirely up to the regulations that may be issued by the selective service as to whether or not acknowledgment will be given for the service of those men in the theaters of operation and the theaters of war. Is that correct?

Mr. MAY. That is my understanding of the legislation.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I shall favor the adoption of this conference report as I am convinced that we need to remain strong militarily for some time to come. No one can foretell the future course of international relations. They may take a strong turn for the worse. In that event we can only rely upon our own strength for survival.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. First I desire to ask my distinguished colleague from Kentucky a brief question. Under this conference bill can the President keep these men in more than 18 months without a declaration of emergency by the Congress?

Mr. MAY. He cannot.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The Selective Service Act of 1940 gave the impression that persons drafted or who volunteered under that act would be discharged after the end of 1 year. Some of us at the time raised the point that they could be held as long as the President might desire to keep them. This, at the time, was denied, but it turned out that we were right.

At the present time, the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps can keep the boys who entered the service under the Selective Service Act or who volunteered for an indefinite period of time.

We passed a bill in the House early in April by an overwhelming majority, the main provisions were—First, eliminating the 18- and 19-year-olds; second, it fixed the term of service of those who had or should enter the service under the Draft Act or volunteered at 18 months; third, fathers without their consent could not be drafted, and fourth, it gave preference to persons actually engaged in agriculture. This measure went to the Senate but no action was taken on it in the Senate until recently.

The Senate passed a bill that included in the draft the 18- and 19-year-olds. It did make provision for the elimination of the fathers from the draft, together with other provisions. The two bills then were referred to the conference committee, made up of members of the Military Affairs Committees of the House and Senate. These two committees, after long consideration, agreed on a bill, and submitted this agreed bill in a conference report to the House and Senate and, of course, that is the bill before us now for consideration, and it is up to the House to accept or reject it.

During all the period of our history and until September 1940, the American people had rejected military conscription in peacetime and perhaps a substantial majority of the Members of Congress are now opposed to military conscription in peacetime. Some Members favor the training of young men as has been advocated by the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and some other veterans' organizations. However, we do have a situation at this time that provides some argument for the extension of the Selective Service. One is, while the fighting has ceased, yet no peace treaty has been concluded between the Allied Nations and countries with which we were at war.

We have about 300,000 men in the service in foreign countries, and nearly all of them have had 2 years or more of service, and among these are many fathers. Those in charge of our armed services insist that they cannot bring these men home unless they are assured of ample replacements, and they also insist that we must keep up the strength of the Army by reason of the unsettled conditions in the world, and the fact that no treaties of peace have yet been concluded. These are very cogent reasons. It is not clear, however, that we could not get all the men we need by the volunteer method, the policy that this country has followed throughout its history.

The Navy and Marine Corps insist that they do not want the draft, and that they can and will secure all the men they need by the volunteer system, and, therefore, the Army is the only branch of our service that is insisting on the draft. The Army states they will need on July 1, 1946, 1,550,000 men. We still have more than 2,000,000 men in the Army, and since October 1945 we have averaged approximately 100,000 volunteers a month, and we secured these volunteers without increase in pay.

Some months ago the House passed a bill which provided for an increase of pay of enlisted personnel of approximately 50 percent, and also some increase of pay for the officer personnel. The administration, through its leaders, permitted that bill to lie in the Senate until very recently, when it substantially approved the House bill, and those two bills were referred to a conference of the House and Senate, and recently the conferees made a unanimous report to their respective Houses, and on today the House unanimously accepted this conference report, and no doubt it will be accepted in the Senate today or tomorrow, and when approved by the President this bill, with its increase in pay and other attractive features, will, in my opinion, bring more volunteers than the Army can use. If the Senate had acted 2 months ago, we would have secured many thousand more volunteers.

During the past 8 months, when the Army was securing 800,000 volunteers, at very little expense to the Government, they secured less than 260,000 by the draft. The draft procedure costs the Government many millions more than the volunteer plan. If the Army would discharge all the men they think ought to be discharged of the more than 2,000,000 men they now have, they would still have more than 1,550,000 men, and with assurances will get volunteers of more than 100,000 a month. The Army states they will need not more than 1,070,000 on July 1, 1947. I have never doubted, with the increased pay, we could secure many more men than the Army says they need, through the volunteer plan, by July 1, 1947.

Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson sent a letter today to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON], ranking Democrat of the Military Affairs Committee, and which was read to the House today by him. Secretary Patterson most definitely and positively states that the Army prefers an army made up of volunteers, and he also said that no man will be drafted if the Army can secure volunteers to meet the quota of 1,070,000 by July 1, 1947. As we now have more than 2,000,000 men in the Army, and with the increased pay that will certainly insure at least 100,000 volunteers per month, how can anyone insist that the Army requirement of 1,070,000 cannot be met by July 1, 1947, and allowing for the discharges as provided in the bill before us.

General Eisenhower, the Chief of Staff, states that he favors a volunteer army. The Navy and Marine Corps insist that they do not desire and it will not be necessary to draft men for those branches of the service. Secretary of War Patterson also states that they will not call for any men under the draft for the months of July and August 1946. With these facts and these assurances it appears as if there is very little reason to vote against this bill.

BRING THE 300,000 HOME

When we had up for consideration in the House the draft bill in April 1946, the 18- and 19-year-olds were excluded. I spoke and voted for that bill as I was opposed to drafting the teen-agers. The compromise bill before us provides for the drafting of those between the ages of 19 and 45. It expressly excludes the 18-year-olds, and, in effect, it really excludes the 19-year-olds because the boys who are now 19 years of age have already been drafted as most of them were drafted when they were 18; therefore, this bill has very little to do with the teen agers.

This act, by its provisions, will expire in 9 months, March 31, 1947, and before the present 18-year-olds will become 19. While the bill states they may draft those between the ages of 19 and 45, the fact is the Army does not want men who are over 30 years of age and they are not now and have not been for some time drafting men over 30 years of age, and do not intend to do so except in a very limited way.

This bill appeals to me because:

First. It excludes the 18-year-olds.

Second. It fixes a definite period of service at 18 months for those who are already in the service and for those who may later enter the service. Of course, volunteers can enlist for a longer period and when they do they will be required to remain in the Army until their enlistments expire, and those already in the service who volunteered to enlist for a longer period in the Regular Army do not come under the 18-month provision of this bill, but those are cases where they volunteered for service for a longer period than 18 months. This bill does very definitely fix the limit of service at 18 months for those who were drafted or who volunteered for the emergency. The longer period only applies to those who volunteered for a longer and certain number of years.

Third. If this bill is passed it will take away from the War Department and the Army the excuse for keeping the nearly 300,000 men in the service who have had as much as 18 months of service or who are fathers. Many of these men saw combat duty and helped to win this great war. They certainly are entitled to come home to their families and to set about to rebuild their lives, and to take advantage of the educational provisions of the GI bill of rights and other privileges and rights under the GI bill of rights.

Fourth. Under this bill fathers cannot be drafted, and fathers now in the service may be released if they wish.

Fifth. Those who have served in our armed forces for as much as 6 months and now have been discharged or are undergoing the process of being discharged, or those who are in hospitals, when they recover, they cannot be drafted, under this act.

Sixth. I should like to see us return to the American plan of raising an army—the volunteer system. In view of the fact that on an average more than 100,000 have volunteered per month, and that by July 1 more than 800,000 will have volunteered since last October under the lesser pay. Now with the increase of pay and inducements, and the assurance of the War Department and General Eisenhower that no effort would be spared to get a volunteer army, I firmly believe that we shall have many more volunteers offering their services than the Army can use, and at the most very few persons will be drafted of any age during the existence of this act, which expires March 31, 1947.

This bill will completely meet the requirements of the Army and at the same time will expedite the speedy return to their homes and families the 300,000 men who have served overseas for 18 months or more. The Navy that requires approximately 600,000 men and officers and the Marine Corps that requires approximately 100,000 men and officers, strongly insist on securing their requirements from volunteers. They do not want the draft, and it is most gratifying to know that the Secretary of War, Patterson, and General Eisenhower now entertain the same view as to the Army. It is pointed out that the Army should not be made up of part conscript and part volunteers. Congress has provided the pay and inducements. They can get the Army if they build up the morale for the Army that we now have in the Navy and Marine Corps. They will have a hard time getting Congress to extend further the draft law in peacetime.

It is for these reasons and under these circumstances that I am voting to extend the draft for a period of 9 months.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a very practical situation. We must view it from that angle. There are Members of the House who believe that young men under 20 should not be inducted. They acted in good faith. There were those who acted in good faith who believed that the situation confronting our country and the national interest of our country called for a continuance of the Selective Service Act. One branch acted one way on that question and the other branch acted another way. Then the bill went to conference and the conferees have agreed. I believe practically every one of us agrees that some kind of extension of the present Selective Training and Service Act is necessary for the national interests of our country. Personally, as I voted, I felt that we should continue the present law. I thought of the young men who are still in the service wearing the uniform. I am thinking of those young men who were drafted at 18 and sent all over the world. Much is being said about the young man today who is coming 18 years of age and who is inducted into the service, who would serve when our country was not at war, and I saw very little consideration given to those who are still in uniform and who are all over the world. Apparently they have not voting power. I am thinking of them and their claim for equitable consideration.

We are faced with a very practical situation. The law has got to be extended. As far as I am concerned, reluctantly, very reluctantly, I shall vote for the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report is a compromise, one of those things that has to occur many times in the process of legislation. The continuance of the act is absolutely necessary. The continuance is before us. In its present form we cannot offer any amendments. If I were to offer an amendment I would want to exempt those over 30 years of age. I do not think men over 30 should be drafted. I do not think he plays a very important part in modern armed forces. However dissatisfied as I am with that, dissatisfied as I am with the fact that we are starting at 19, but respecting the viewpoint of those who feel we should start at 20 that they are honest and sincere, and this being before us without opportunity to amend, the necessity existing that the law be extended, I am going to vote for the conference report; and I am going to urge for practical reasons only that the House adopt the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to preface my remarks by reading a letter that I received only a few minutes ago from the Secretary of War, Hon. Robert P. Patterson. It comes in response to a request of mine asking for an official statement as to how he proposed to administer this act in the event the conference report is adopted. It reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 24, 1946.

Hon. R. EWING THOMASON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. THOMASON: This is in reply to your recent inquiry concerning the requisitions of men which the Army anticipates making on the Selective Service System during the next few months when the Selective Training and Service Act is extended beyond July 1, 1946.

As you know, it is the earnest hope of General Eisenhower and myself that the manpower requirements of the Army will, in the not-too-distant future, be filled solely through voluntary enlistments. Both of us want an all-volunteer army. The War Department, I assure you, is not endeavoring to get conscription established as a part of the permanent military policy of the Nation. As I have previously stated, the War Department does not desire to have a single man drafted into the military force unless he is actually needed to fill an existing or anticipated shortage. In fact, the bill to continue the Selective Training and Service Act, as recommended by the conference committee, specifically precludes the Army from requisitioning men from selective service unless they are required to meet such a shortage. That prohibition is in accord with the War Department's views on this matter. General Eisenhower and I have urged the continuance of the Selective Service System only for the purpose of insuring that the Army will be able from month to month to carry out its occupational commitments in enemy lands and to maintain the strength necessary for our national security. There should not be any doubt or uncertainty as to our ability to perform these duties.

The War Department is conducting an intensified recruiting drive this summer. If aided by substantial increases in pay, such as those contained in H. R. 6084, this drive may produce sufficient volunteers to meet the Army's requirements for replacements for the next few months. I have, therefore, directed that no requisitions be made on the Selective Service System for the months of July and August.

Inasmuch as 1-year enlistments begin to expire at a substantial rate in October, and under the terms of H. R. 6064 we must discharge men with 18 months' service beginning at that time, there is serious risk that a shortage will then develop. As it is necessary to give men a minimum of 8 weeks' military training before they are effective replacements, it is not possible to project at this time whether or not we will be able to meet our requirements without requisitions on selective service after September 1. However, I can assure you again that the War Department will limit these requisitions to the numbers actually needed to meet the manpower requirements as set forth in H. R. 6064.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. Speaker, the situation as I see it is to be realistic and not resort to any hysteria or personalities. It is a time to be constructive and place the welfare of our country above every other consideration. We are living in a sick and chaotic world. Communism is on the march all over Europe and in most of Asia. Our delegates, from Secretary Byrnes on down, are this minute sitting around the peace table in Paris, and we might just as well be frank about it, they are not making much progress. We all long and pray for lasting peace, but we must at all times be prepared for any eventuality.

The absolute truth is, and the record will show it, that Russia today has an army of 6,000,000 men. During the past year she has drafted 1,500,000 men, including teen-agers. She has compulsory universal military service, not just training. Great Britain has likewise extended her selective service act, depending almost entirely on 18-year-olds to replace the veterans. France, as well as Yugoslavia and a number of other European countries, continue to raise and maintain armies by conscription. Only a few minutes ago we passed unanimously a pay raise bill that I feel sure will attract enough volunteers to do the job. We cannot gamble. We can take no chances. Not one peace treaty has yet been agreed upon.

It is my conviction that not a single man after September 1 will be drafted under selective service. Of course, I could be mistaken about that, but nevertheless it must not be forgotten that although there has been a serious dropping off in enlistments from 68,867 in April to 48,136 in May, yet in the very first week of this month of June 11,745 men have volunteered. If this rate continues I hope and believe, because I have given much study to this problem, that not a single man will be drafter after that time. I do not guarantee it but I think that is a reasonable hope. But there is something bigger than that in all this. I have the same solicitude for and interest in the teen-age youngsters and their fathers and mothers as the balance of you have. However, I want to tell you, too, that I have a very keen solicitude for the 290,000 men, and I speak from the record, who will have been in the service 18 months or longer on the 1st day of October. Thousands of these men are fathers, thousands of them have never seen their babies that have been born since they went overseas, and many thousands of them have been in combat. If you defeat this bill there is no predicting when these men will get home. Then you tell me they are not entitled to some consideration when these same 19-year-old boys have not served their country a single day.

Mr. Speaker, bona fide and essential farm workers are deferred.

No 18-year-old boy is drafted under any conditions if this report is adopted. All fathers will be out on request on August 1. All men with 18 months' service will be out on October 1. No man who has served a single day overseas will be recalled. No man now out of service and who has served 6 months in this country will be recalled. No father or man over 29 years of age will be drafted. Volunteers will be called first under the machinery of this bill before any men between 19 and 20 are to be drafted. What could be fairer than that?

If we should fail to get them by the volunteer method, I would like to know what you are going to do to meet our obligations. My good friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] always talks about commitments. To say that there have been any secret commitments on these matters is pure bunk. But it is true that our representatives, including the representatives of the other Allied Nations, all agreed at Potsdam that we would do our part in providing the necessary occupation forces both in Germany and the Pacific.

So it was up to General Eisenhower, and later General McNarney and General MacArthur to set those figures, and those figures for this immediate time are 397,000 for the Pacific, 338,000 for the European theater, and 815,000 for the Western Hemisphere.

Now, then, I just want to raise this question: If we are going to meet our obligations to our allies in countries that are running rampant with communism, where famine literally stalks the land, and where you can have revolution any day, I refuse to believe that the Members of this House will be parties to throwing away the victory that we won at such great cost in blood and treasure.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] referred with considerable ridicule and sarcasm to the so-called brass hats, which seems to be a very popular pastime in these preelection days, but 2 years ago, when those of us sitting in this Chamber did not know for sure whether this Capitol would be standing at this time or not, and when General Eisenhower had landed in Normandy, and he with Generals Patton, Bradley, Simpson, and Patch, and others of our great military leaders took that old flag back of the Speaker's stand and started on their march to Berlin, we all said then that they were the greatest men of all time. General MacArthur kept his pledge and returned to Manila. He was then the greatest military genius since Napoleon. Today, in the eyes of some, he is a brass hat. I am sometimes accused of using a trite expression that you have to trust somebody. If you are not going to trust a man like General Eisenhower when he comes here and says we have got to have so many men in the armed services if we are to have security as well as the hope of lasting peace, then I do not know where we will look for leadership.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Would the defeat of this conference report not be a staggering blow to our foreign policy and the maintenance of peace?

Mr. THOMASON. We might just as well be frank about it. There are some nations in the world today that the only thing they respect is strength. They are not agreeing to anything at the Paris Conference. I am for the United Nations organization. It must succeed or civilization is doomed. To succeed it must be implemented by military strength until a permanent peace treaty is agreed upon. There will be no time for lengthy preparedness if war ever comes again. Our men must already be trained. To fail to pass this conference report would be heralded all over the world as a sign of weakness. Our foreign policy would be a joke. We are a strong and patriotic people. It is a question of country and duty. We must assume our place in world affairs.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that I agree with much that the gentleman has said, but I want to correct the gentleman from Texas in a statement he made. In the beginning of his remarks he said that the Secretary of War administers this act. The Secretary of War has nothing to do with the administration of this act.

Mr. THOMASON. Well, that might be technically true, but the Secretary of War, together with General Eisenhower, makes the requisition on selective service for the necessary men. I have the greatest confidence in both of them. I invite the gentleman to carefully read the Secretary of War's letter which I presented a few minutes ago. Let me say this, that if this volunteer enlistment campaign keeps up as successfully as it has in the last few days, it is likely, I repeat, that not a single man will be drafted.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. That is very true; but the gentleman did not say that.

Mr. THOMASON. Let us assume that there is a call for 50,000 men and 45,000 of them are obtained by volunteer enlistment. Then the only thing that selective service does is to call for the remaining 5,000, and you go back to your own draft boards who know these people and these boys better than anybody else.

Let me say that since shortly after VJ-day there has not been a single man over 29 years of age drafted, and there has not been a single father drafted. Under this conference report no man who on October 1 will have had 18 months' service and no man who on August 1 is a father will be subject to the terms of this extension.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman says that farmers, who are so badly needed now, are exempted in this report.

Mr. THOMASON. Sure. The old act is still in effect, that if a man is engaged in essential agriculture he is deferred. We are not going to have any storm cellar about this thing, I hope, but if a man is actively engaged in essential agriculture he is deferred.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman speaks of the brass hats. Is it not true that they pay with their lives and their bodies for our mistakes, that if we are not prepared they die for our mistakes?

Mr. THOMASON. I thank the lady for that wise observation. I hold no brief for the brass hats, but I am proud of every one of those who led us to the great victory they won on battlefields all over the world.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. May I ask the gentleman if he does not feel that inasmuch as the local draft boards were liberal during the war with deferments for agricultural workers, now, since the actual fighting is over and we are in a famine and production of food is most vital, they likely will be more liberal than they were before?

Mr. THOMASON. Local draft boards have done a grand job. They are fine citizens who know the boys in their communities. They can be depended upon to administer this act fairly. They usually do justice, in spite of what some of them might think at the time.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman said that this bill provides that a person who has served 18 months will be eligible for discharge.

Mr. THOMASON. Let us get this straight now, because I beg of you not to vote against this conference report under a misapprehension. I got the figures on this just this morning. As to these 290,000 men who will have been in service 18 months on October 1 next, if you want them back home do not vote this conference report down, because the man who has served 18 months by October 1, I do not care where, he is to be released immediately. I speak with authority on this matter because I sat there in this committee of conference for many days. I did not get all I wanted but I do undertake to say that this is a fair report. It leaves the 18-year-olds completely out of it. It will let out every father on August 1. It will let out every man with 18 months' service on October 1. I do not believe you want to go back home to some boys who are running around town and say, "No; you won't render 1 day's service," and then defeat this conference report and let those men now in service remain in uniform indefinitely. This bill is fair. It is just. It is necessary for our national security and to maintain our high position in world affairs. If you vote down this report, you ought to go out and cable Jimmy Byrnes to come on home.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the conference report on H. R. 6064, which provides for extension of selective training and service, and the bill itself, show that under it there will be established compulsory military training in peacetime.

It provides for the drafting of 19-year-old men for service abroad in peacetime. Under its provisions, men so drafted, can, if the Congress once declares that the national interest is imperiled, be retained in training and service so long as the President of the United States deems such training or service to be necessary in the interest of national defense.

Under the leadership of the internationalists, becoming a member of the United Nations, this administration has agreed to furnish an Army, a Navy, and Air Corps, and whatever other agencies of war may, in the judgment of an International Security Council and an International Military Staff, controlled by individuals and officers who owe allegiance to other countries, who owe no allegiance to the United States, be deemed necessary for the preservation of world peace, as that term may be defined by them; for participation in any aggressive action which the Security Council and the International Military Staff may deem to be necessary or expedient.

It is contrary to the American policy to force compulsory military training under Army and Navy rule upon the youth of our land in peacetime.

It is contrary to American policy and I deem it to be contrary to the best interest of our national welfare, to conscript the youth of our land to fight abroad in wars in which we have no vital interest, under the command of officers of other lands.

It is contrary to American policy, contrary to our traditions, to, after the Congress has once declared "the national interest is imperiled," permit a President to retain drafted men in the armed service indefinitely and long after the peril to the national interest has ended.

All of the forgoing power this bill as enacted would incorporate into the law of the land. I cannot, I will not, support the conference report.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Missouri opposed to the bill?

Mr. SHORT. Most assuredly, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHORT moves to recommit the conference report with instructions that the House insist on eliminating the drafting of 19-year-old men.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHORT) there were—ayes 74, noes 182.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 259, nays 110, not voting 63, as follows:

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the conference report just agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement in connection with the vote on the conference report on the so-called Draft Act. At the time that vote was taken, through the courtesy of the Speaker, I was in his private office engaged on official business and did not know, because of my unfamiliarity with those sacred precincts, that the bells did not ring there. I was there waiting for the vote.

Had I been present I would have voted in favor of adoption of the conference report, and I would have arranged a live pair for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOYKIN] who requested me to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that these remarks may appear in the RECORD at the conclusion of the proceedings on the conference report on the so-called Draft Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE CEREMONIES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from a commission:

JUNE 21, 1946.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I am very grateful to you for having appointed me last Monday as a member of the committee to attend the Philippine celebration to be held in Manila on July 4, 1946. Unfortunately, because of certain pressing matters, I am unable to accept this appointment and must respectfully decline it.

Again thanking you for your consideration in appointing me and with every good wish, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JAMES DOMENGEAUX.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 414, Seventy-ninth Congress, the Chair appoints as a member of the commission to represent the United States at the ceremonies to be held at Manila on July 4, 1946, in celebration of the independence of the Philippines, to fill the existing vacancy thereon, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WORLEY].

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1947

Mr. GARY submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5990) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

CONFERENCE REPORT—INTERIOR DEPARTMENT BILL, 1947

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, submit the following report in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

No. 1: Appropriates $1,298,337 for salaries, Office of the Secretary, instead of $1,243,063, as proposed by the House, and $1,368,000, as proposed by the Senate. The reduction of $69,663 in the Senate figure is due to the denial of $18,000 for an additional Assistant Secretary and staff, $5,120 for the suggestions award system, $37,703 for the Division of Power, and $8,840 for the Division of Information.

No. 3: Appropriates $263,885 for personal services, Office of the Solicitor, instead of $251,278, as proposed by the House, and $267,000, as proposed by the Senate, the reduction of $3,115 in the Senate figure being due to the denial of that amount for the Legislative Division.

No. 4: Appropriates $156,526 for personal services, Division of Territories and Island Possessions, instead of $141,711, as proposed by the House, and $167,200, as proposed by the Senate, the increase in the House figure being due to the allowance of one chief of branch, CAF-14 at $7,175, a secretary and clerk, CAF-5, $4,640, and $3,000 for the restoration of positions to a full-time basis.

Nos. 8 and 9: Appropriates $250,760 for contingent expenses, Department of the Interior, instead of $224,460, as proposed by the House, and $263,500, as proposed by the Senate, the reduction of $12,740 in the Senate figure being due to the denial of $1,800 for the Division of Power, $940 for the suggestions award system, and $10,000 for travel expenses; and authorizes the transfer of $4,000 for stationery supplies for the Grazing Service, instead of $6,000, as proposed by the House.

No. 10: Appropriates $10,000 for expenses of the Commission of Fine Arts, instead of $7,926, as proposed by the House, and $11,900, as proposed by the Senate.

Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, relating to the Bonneville Power Administration: Inserts language, as proposed by the Senate, which removes any doubt as to the authority of the Administration to acquire transmission lines, and limits, as proposed by the Senate, the application of this authorization to the following items: (1) 230,000-volt river crossing and substation, Troutdale, Oregon, owned by RFC, (2) Albany-Camp Adair line and facilities owned by the War Department, (3) Brewster-Okanogan-Washington line and related facilities, and (4) Eugene-Drain-Oregon line and related facilities, all of the foregoing projects being publicly owned; authorizes the purchase of 34 automobiles, instead of 29, as proposed by the House, and 39, as proposed by the Senate; authorizes the purchase of two aircraft, as proposed by the Senate, instead of one, as proposed by the House; appropriates a total of $12,470,000 for construction, operation, and maintenance, instead of $9,000,000, as proposed by the House, and $19,086,250, as proposed by the Senate; and provides $4,000,000 for operation and maintenance, instead of $3,695,400, as proposed by the House, and $4,290,000, as proposed by the Senate, $154,600 of the reduction in the Senate figure for operation and maintenance being specifically applied to the following items:

Administrative offices	$39,167
Office of general counsel	5,196
Branch fiscal and administrative management	78,947
Branch of Power Management	31,290
Total reduction	154,600

Of the total increase allowed for the Bonneville Power Administration, the following increases were allowed over the bill as passed by the House:

(1) Operation and maintenance, $304,600.
(2) Feeder lines, $1,500,000.
(3) Olympia-Cosmopolis Line, $790,000.
(4) Advance surveys, $50,000.
(5) Tools and equipment, $100,000.
(6) Ellensburg Columbia Line, $590,000.

Nos. 21 and 22: Authorizes the use of funds appropriated to the Grazing Service for "fire fighting," as proposed by the Senate.

JED JOHNSON,
MICHAEL J. KIRWAN,
W. F. NORRELL (except as to amendments 29, 80, 112, 129, 130, 132, 135, 136, 137, 138, and 139),
ROBERT F. JONES (except as to construction items, Bureau of Reclamation),
BEN F. JENSEN (except as to construction items, Bureau of Reclamation),
HENRY C. DWORSHAK (except as to construction items, Bureau of Reclamation),
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 11 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the part of the House, after extended meetings and deliberations with the conferees of the Senate, have finally reached an agreement. This conference report is by no means what all Members of the House want. Several of the items as finally agreed upon are more than some of us thought they should be. Some of the cuts are deeper than the Senate conferees thought could be justified. I am glad to tell the House, however, we have reached what we believe is a fair and reasonable agreement. Our conferees recognized the fact that we could not have our way in every instance, but the following figures speak for themselves.

The Interior bill as passed by the Senate provided for $341,890,768. The conferees agreed on a total of $247,167,036 so the Senate receded on a total of $94,723,732.

This conference report as it is presented now provides appropriations totaling $247,167,036. The House bill provided $179,426,847. The House receded on $67,740,189. The total budget estimates were for $350,357,230, so the bill is under the budget estimates by $103,190,194.

The fact is this is the best record for economy of any annual supply bill that I have had anything to do with during my years as a member of this committee. The reduction of $103,190,194 below budget estimates on the annual supply bill is still a record breaker for economy.

I might point out the fact that there were some budget estimates that went to the other body after the bill passed the House. For example, at Sitka Island in Alaska there are some Navy installations in which the taxpayers have invested more than $50,000,000. It was found that those installations could be taken over for a fine Indian hospital and school, but it will require more than $2,000,000 to do the job properly. Budget estimates were also sent to the Senate for two additional schools in the Navaho country, where there are more than 14,000 Navaho children who are not now in school. So that called for considerable additional funds for construction items.

Between the time the bill passed the House and the time it passed the Senate, the House committee held hearings on the Navaho situation and also on the Sitka Island Indian school and hospital project.

We were convinced that it would be good business and would be good economy to provide money for these purposes in the bill, and therefore the House conferees agreed to those construction items which run the Indian item up considerably but which, of course, will not recur in next year's bill.

As I say, this is a compromise bill. For instance, some Members have asked me about the Grazing Service, over which there was considerable controversy. The Grazing Service has been increased over the House figure by nearly $400,000, but it has been reduced from a Budget estimate of $1,784,000 and from a current-year appropriation of $1,293,000 to $802,500 for the next fiscal year.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma direct our attention for a moment to the appropriations for the Bureau of Mines, especially relating to the amount which has been covered in the conference report for the further development of the synthetic liquid fuels program?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; I shall be glad to. If the gentleman will turn to page 68 of the bill, he will find, as I am sure he recalls, that the bill as it passed the House carried a total of $3,500,000 for synthetic liquid fuels. As passed by the Senate it was increased to $7,000,000. The conferees, after considerable deliberation and with additional evidence, some of which I am glad to say was furnished by the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia, who is the coauthor of the synthetic-fuels legislation and has been tremendously interested in this great program, agreed on the sum of $5,250,000. The conferees feel that this is a very fair and reasonable compromise.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman for his statement. It is gratifying to know of the action taken. This money is being well spent, and the results will more than justify the funds to be used. I express our thanks to the House conferees for agreeing to this increased sum. Its use carries forward the purposes of the original authorization bill and also the actual expenditures vitally necessary for the synthetic liquid-fuels program. The work being conducted in several States, including West Virginia, is progressing most satisfactorily.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia even though he may ask me about funds under the Pitman-Robertson bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. The gentleman is suffering from a guilty conscience, because that is what I am going to ask him about.

We have over $14,000,000 to the credit of that fund. The Budget recommended that we be given $3,000,000, and the distinguished subcommittee in reporting a $2,000,000 item to the House did not give us any explanation of why they cut it $1,000,000 below the Budget estimate—a trust fund amounting to over $14,000,000.

I should like to know what is in the conference report, and if it is not $3,000,000, why is it less?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Virginia, who has been very diligent and interested in this particular item, that if he waits for the gentleman from Oklahoma to become conscience-stricken for having lopped off a million dollars in appropriation, that he will be a lot older than Methuselah, who lived a thousand years. Seriously, I will say that because of the shortage of materials, particularly lumber, the House committee did reduce that item as it did nearly every other item in the bill. As it passed the House it carried $2,000,000 and as it passed the Senate $3,000,000. So after much deliberation and on the part of the conferees, keeping in mind the deep interest of the gentleman from Virginia and several of his interested friends in his State and mine, the House conferees finally agreed to raise that item by $500,000 providing a total of $2,500,000, which we thought was a very fair compromise.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, will the able gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia who I suspect is going to ask something about mine inspectors or some related item that he is tremendously interested in with reference to his people in West Virginia whom he represents so well.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the eminent gentleman for his gracious observation. He will recall that the House adopted two important amendments to the bill as it was reported from the Committee on Appropriations. One of these was offered by the statesman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. Its purpose was to increase the number of mine inspectors. The other was proposed by me. Its object was to assure the operation of an adequate number of mine rescue cars, thorough investigation of explosives such as are used in mining, and widespread diffusion among miners of information designed to promote their safety. Will the gentleman please inform us whether these items, as approved by the House are still in the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct, and if the gentleman will turn to page 65 of the bill he will find that both items are included in the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. NEELY. I am very much obliged to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. For which the gentleman is largely responsible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished minority member of the conference committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES], who has rendered a very valuable and patriotic service to this committee in helping reduce the expenditures of government.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the overall result of this conference report is very good. As a matter of fact, I think it is still the best conference report, and the best appropriation bill if it becomes law, that has ever passed the House in many years as compared with the Budget estimates.

As the bill passed the House it contained appropriations of $179,426,847. The bill as it passed the Senate contained appropriations of $341,891,768. You can readily see there was a considerable difference between the House and Senate bill, and I make the statement in complete honesty that the chairman of our subcommittee, the chairman of the conference committee on behalf of the House, worked as hard and as diligently as any Member I have seen any place to keep down expenditures. There was no division along party lines and there was no disagreement as far as objectives were concerned to try to save the taxpayers' money. If a Republican had sat as chairman of the House conferees I do not know that any better result would have been attained, because the chairman of our committee did earnestly and conscientiously try to resist the pressure constantly exerted by the conferees from the other body to spend more and more money.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the work of the conferees. The conferees have reported a bill which contains appropriations totaling $247,000,000 instead of $341,000,000 as passed by the Senate and instead of $179,000,000 as passed by the House. The Budget estimates, you will remember, with which we were dealing, were $350,357,230. This conference report is a reduction of $103,190,194 below the Budget estimates.

The conferees have reported a bill that is 30 percent above the House figures, yet we are still 29.4 percent below the Budget figures. We cut 60 percent of the Senate increases.

The only point of disagreement is in the reclamation construction amendments. You will remember that when we had the bill before the House we had taken great pride as a committee—we were all of one accord—cutting horizontally every item and treating every Member alike. The Senate adopted a different theory and a different plan. The Senate conferees conceived the idea, in the name of the veteran, that some projects were more worthy and deserved more funds for the fiscal year 1947 because they were subject to earlier completion. I do not take much stock in voting huge increases to some project on the theory that it will assist the veteran and leave other projects go unaccelerated with the House's lower, economical figure. For that matter, I do not subscribe to the theory of letting every agency of the Government set up a program for veterans. I think all veterans' legislation should be championed by the Veterans' Administration, and what we choose to do for the veteran should be done by the Veterans' Administration. We make a big mistake when we let other agencies of the Government chisel in on a veterans' program. Every agency of Government wants to use or exploit the veteran to increase public expenditures for its agency. They always use the popular individual or organization at the moment to increase their appropriations. I think that has been unsatisfactory Governmental wise. It is not an honest way to help and serve the veterans of World War I and World War II. Whatever I am going to do for the veteran, I want to do through the Veterans' Administration and let someone in that agency of the Government be responsible.

The projects proposed by the Senate conferees which could be completed, you will find on page 47 and continuing to page 55 of the bill. These projects did not stay within the limitation of the Budget estimate. They went over the Budget estimate, while some projects that I considered just as worthy remained at the economical House figure, which is part of the $179,000,000.

Mr. HOLMES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HOLMES of Washington. I was listening very intently to the fine presentation that the gentleman from Ohio was making. Could the gentleman give me the reasons in the minds of the conferees for the amount of the cut that was made in the Columbia River Basin from $27,400,000, as stated by the Senate, down to an agreement of $18,000,000. The House permitted $13,007,140. While this raises the appropriation $5,000,000, I feel it is not enough.

Mr. JONES. That is one of the projects that I had in mind criticizing, because it is a long-range project and cannot possibly be completed in the near future. In other words, it is inconsistent with the theory used by the Senate conferees; this is: projects possible of completion with funds in this bill should be given millions ahead of schedule in 1947. Columbia Basin project cannot be put into operation in the next fiscal year, and should have remained at the $13,000,000 House figure.

Mr. HOLMES of Washington. Is it not necessary that the schedule for the project be maintained? Its magnitude demands that the schedule be maintained in order to reach the objective of completion of the project.

Mr. JONES. I recognize the point made by the gentleman. In other words, the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, has stepped up the schedule of reclamation construction projects, but by the rule that was supposed to have been adopted by the conferees, only those projects that could be completed within the year should have received increases by the conferees. My complaint is: In addition to those projects possible of completion in 1947, we added the Columbia River Basin project. It was increased $5,000,000, and it should not have been. Had we stuck to the Interior Department schedule and made percentagewise increases, the Columbia River Basin project would have been no worse or better off than all the others. This conference report dropped the schedule plan and accelerated some projects and deferred others that were to be completed in 1952. Under this conference plan the Columbia River Basin should have received no more than $13,000,000.

Another item of two projects that should have gotten nothing, in my opinion, is the water conservation and utilization project described in amendment No. 159, appropriating $3,340,000. There is evidence to show that of two projects involved one is 16 percent complete and the other is 28 percent complete. I do not believe these should have remained in the bill under the rule that was adopted by the conferees. My point is that the conference report is not consistent with our avowed purpose.

I do not want you to have the wrong impression. I think the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KIRWAN], and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NORRELL], on the conference committee did a splendid and a wonderful job. The Congress should be very much indebted to the chairman especially for his sterling endeavor, and the constant, persistent urge on the part of the House conferees headed by him to try to cut down the amount of appropriations.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN], and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] have been most diligent in trying to arrive at a proper solution of this supply bill. Their help and their patriotism, and their insistence for the good of the Treasury and on cutting down Federal expenditures have been of the highest and greatest value. You see the result in the fact that the bill is now $103,000,000 below the Budget estimate. This is the best, figurewise, that could be accomplished. In trying to arrive at a satisfactory end result, however, I think some of these particular items were treated more favorably than others.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HORAN. I realize that the gentleman and the other members of the subcommittee have worked very diligently on this matter. I know of no other subcommittee in the House that works harder than the gentleman from Ohio and his colleagues on Interior appropriations. I am wondering if, in the study of the schedules under which projects—such as the Columbia Basin project—will be built it is the gentlemans' feeling that sufficient amounts have been allowed to avoid a deficiency during the fiscal year 1947.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I think that the representatives of the Department of the Interior who came up and testified, perhaps in response to pressure, are the ones who broke up the routine, broke up their own schedules. Now they should abide by their amended point of view. They should stop the insidious practice of asking deficiencies in appropriation bills after the regular annual supply bills have been presented and voted upon. Congress should train the departments not to do that sort of thing.

Incidentally, in connection with the Bonneville Power Administration, the House yielded so that the amount is now $3,470,000 above the House figure. Again I say I think we have been most liberal and we should not have any deficiency because they have 500,000 kilowatts going down the river with no sale for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Un-American Activities has had printed and distributed to the Members of the House copies of three proposed contempt resolutions. For the information of the Members of the House, may I say that I expect to ask for the consideration of those resolutions tomorrow morning.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER].

Mr. HAVENNER. Can the chairman of the committee inform the House what the recommendation on the Central Valley project in California includes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; I will be glad to do so. If the gentleman will turn to page 28 of the conference report in the statement of the managers on the part of the House, he will find the following:

Appropriates $12,685,622 for the Central Valley project, California, instead of $19,840,120, as proposed by the House, and $25,000,000, as proposed by the Senate; and provides for the construction of transmission lines and substations, including $1,000,000 for completion of the Oroville-Sacramento line, which will ultimately be extended to Tracy to provide power for pumping water in the Delta area, instead of the proposals of the Senate.

Mr. HAVENNER. I want to congratulate the committee on behalf of the members of the California delegation for recommending this additional appropriation for the Oroville-Sacramento line. I hope the committee in the future will see fit to make provision for the west side line.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman. It is a pleasure to receive a compliment from a member of the great California delegation. We realize we have not been able to give them all that they want, for California wants and gets a lot, but I think you will find the committee has been very fair and reasonable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished and able gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] who has given noble service to the people of Iowa and to the Nation in fighting for rigid economy in government. We are proud of the fine work he has done and I am glad to commend him for his fine service.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the nice things our very able chairman has said about this humble Member. I assure him the feeling is entirely mutual. The conferees, as you will note, were substantially in agreement on this bill. We had quite a tussle to bring it down to something near the amount the House Members felt was the right figure. You will observe from the report, the minority members of the committee signed the report with certain reservations. That was simply because of discrimination in the treatment of these projects. If you will remember when the bill was before the House originally, there was considerable argument about some reductions that had been made by the House committee on a number of reclamation projects. You will also recall we stated at that time the true facts of the case, which were that the revised figures had been brought to the committee by the Reclamation Bureau on many of these reclamation items. The bill passed the House and went to the Senate and was considered by the Senate committee. The Senate committee raised our figures approximately $200,000,000. They not only put back in the bill virtually everything the House Subcommittee on Interior Department Appropriations had taken out but added an additional $25,000,000 in round figures.

The thing which disturbed the minority members of the committee was that after the bill had left the House and gone to the Senate committee, the Reclamation Bureau appeared before that committee and said in effect that there were a number of these reclamation projects that could be finished in the fiscal year 1947.

As a consequence of that statement by the Reclamation Bureau the committee of the Senate not only put back the amount the House had reduced the items at the Reclamation Bureau's request but also added to the original budget request for a number of reclamation projects, as you will note by the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. JENSEN. It was difficult for me and some of the other members of the committee to understand the feasibility of such procedure. We had always leaned over backward, as have the rest of the members of the House committee, to treat every project fairly and properly. The committee of the Senate, however, took the position that these specific projects should be rushed to completion primarily in order to make irrigated farms available for returning veterans. There is not, of course, a Member of Congress who is not doing everything possible for the veterans, but we must remember there is hardly a single reclamation project in this bill that does not, and that will not, eventually benefit our returning veteran. So to set a number of projects off to one side and treat them so much better than the rest of the reclamation projects was difficult for us to approve.

Without a doubt this conference report will go through as is, but I think, as did the rest of the members of the minority, that it is always well for a member or members who take a different attitude than the majority on any issue to express openly and freely their opposition on the floor of the House or in a minority report. Because of the fact that we were substantially in agreement, we felt it best in this case to simply voice our objections and hence give the American people and the Members of Congress the benefit of our expressed objections.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I wish to say that it is always a pleasure to work with the members of this committee. It is always a pleasure to work with our good chairman who fights fair and hard to keep every appropriation bill down to where it belongs. I would be the last one to criticize him, but the first to praise him for the fine job the gentleman always does; and that goes for every member of the committee. I am sorry, however, that the committee did not treat all of these projects more equitably. I trust it will not happen again.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the very fine statement that has just been made by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa. I share his view in expressing regret that all of the reclamation projects could not be treated alike. It was our suggestion that all those projects be treated exactly alike right across the board, but this is what we were up against: The committee at the other end of the Capitol called in the Reclamation Service and asked them to submit a list of projects that could be finished this year, and at the same time put several thousand veterans on such irrigated lands. They submitted such a list. Whether that list was accurate, I do not know—some say it was not. But the fact remains that such a list of projects was submitted, and consequently those projects have received larger appropriations, proportionately, than many other worthy projects which cannot be completed to provide land for veterans for 2 years or longer.

We are assured that all those projects for which additional funds have been provided can be finished and that they will actually put many thousands of veterans on the land. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, the committee did permit appropriations for about 10 or 11 reclamation projects to be given more than some members thought could be justified at this time. With the additional appropriations they will be able to complete the projects and we were assured they will not be back requesting additional appropriations next year.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. How much did the other body increase this appropriation over what it was when it left the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As the bill passed the Senate it contained appropriations totaling $341,819,768 and as it passed the House it provided $179,426,827. A total of $16,463,921 was added by the Senate as it passed that body.

Mr. RICH. Then the Senate is running true to form on these appropriation bills. After the bill leaves the House it has almost doubled the appropriations in this bill for the next fiscal year over what it was when it left the House? Is not it a real shame? I will say it is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Well, the gentleman has answered his own question. And I might add that the gentleman's point is well taken, but call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the bill is now nearly $104,000,000 below the Budget estimates and that the Senate receded on $94,723,732 of the funds it had added to the bill.

Mr. RICH. They have increased the bill, according to what the gentleman said, $162,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No. They only attempted to do so. Although the distinguished gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol did increase the bill to the tune of $162,000,000, it is also true the same gentlemen marched back down the Hill by receding on $94,000,000, which is an unprecedented record for the gentlemen of the other body to recede on.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman did a good job as well as the other conferees, and I congratulate him. If we can hold the other body down, some day there is a possibility we might balance the Budget, but you are never going to do that as long as the United States Senate continues to appropriate money like they do. We are coming to the day in our national life when we are going to be compelled to repudiate our debt or else we are going into bankruptcy. That is not the fault of the House of Representatives nearly as much as it is the fault of the other body and maybe the Budget Bureau. For 15 years we have not had a balanced budget. Where are you going to get the money?

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman agree that, if every subcommittee on appropriations battled like the Interior Subcommittee on Appropriations, we would have considerable savings?

Mr. RICH. I congratulate the gentleman on the work he did. I think you are trying to do the best you can even when you realize that there is somebody else trying to lift up the appropriations and spend and spend and spend. I want to hear somebody say some day, "I promise you again and again and again that we will cut down these expenses until we can balance the Budget and keep this country from going bankrupt." You must remember also that we are going to get the British loan in here next week. You do not want to vote for that. That may be the straw that breaks the camel's back.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have longed to live to see the time when the gentleman from Pennsylvania would compliment the gentleman from Oklahoma. I appreciate it more than he knows. Both of us have at least one thing in common. We are both interested in economy and in balancing the Federal Budget. I might add that both of us understand full well that there is one sure way of doing that job, and that is by really slashing appropriations.

Mr. RICH. I want to say that the gentleman from Oklahoma is doing a pretty good job nowadays and so are all of these other conferees, like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES] and other members of the subcommittee. I know they are working to cut it down. I am not condemning you gentlemen. I am condemning the other body. They are always spending and spending and spending and they are responsible more than anybody else for the unbalanced Budget. Of course, the New Deal program started us on our way down, and it is still at it. We must get rid of it or bust.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, if I remember correctly, the Speaker the other day said something to the effect that he was not going to permit the other body to be criticized. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is criticizing the other body.

Mr. RICH. I am going to criticize anybody who spends needlessly. It is imperative and absolutely essential and necessary. It is life or death to our Government.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at the conclusion of the debate on the preceding conference report, prior to the vote, and also to extend my remarks on the conference report that will be brought up on OPA.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I wonder where the gentleman from Pennsylvania was when we passed the $7,000,000,000 peacetime bill for the Army. Where was he when the House was voting to spend money in that case? Surely such extravagance should have been given his attention.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman can answer for himself.

Mr. WHITE. Where was he then?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished, capable, and fighting member of this committee from the great State of Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK].

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, I did sign the report with the reservation as to the construction items under the Bureau of Reclamation. I am reluctant to criticise the action that was taken in the conference report on these construction items. Although I believe there was rank discrimination and a lack of fairness so far as all of the construction items currently in progress under the Bureau are concerned. Frequently use is made of the term "veteran," and in the conference there were certain members of the committee not representing this body, who contended that the Bureau of Reclamation had made recommendations that, on those particular projects wherein public domain was involved and where the acceleration of the work might result in the early filing by veterans on the farm units available, far in excess of the Budget estimates should be provided.

I want to point out that practically every reclamation construction project involves public domain or supplemental water for existing farm units. The House figures were far below the Budget recommendations, and it is unfortunate that in some specific cases these reductions were restored and other amounts which were in excess of the Budget figures, while in other cases the reduced House figures were retained in the bill.

I have several projects in my own State which can qualify as making available public domain for filing by veterans, but the Bureau of Reclamation did not include those in its recommendations for that particular category. For instance, Anderson Ranch project currently is employing about 800 men, where construction work will probably be suspended late in August or early in September. The project is more than 75 percent completed, and work will be suspended because of the lack of funds in this bill. I do not know what will necessarily have to be done, or whether supplemental budget estimates will be necessary to continue the work. I am not referring to those projects where construction has not actually started; but I want to state very definitely my disapproval of the discriminatory tactics which were used in arriving at the specific figures for the construction items under the Bureau of Reclamation.

You will recall that when this bill was originally before the House I made an effort to restore the funds for the Grazing Service to an estimated $850,000, which were the receipts expected in the fiscal year 1947. That motion was defeated by a small margin—26, I believe. The Grazing Service now has 275 persons employed. The Senate figure recommended funds for approximately 100 personnel, and the conference report includes amounts which will cut the current force of 275 to about 80.

Mr. Speaker, when the Bureau of the Budget submitted its Interior Department report for 1947, it was shown that, if all of these requested funds had been approved by the House and Senate, it would have involved an increase of approximately 11,000 personnel during the year 1947. I do not know how much increased personnel is provided for by the funds in this conference report, but I personally believe that Secretary Krug, with his reputation as an executive and administrator, will be able to streamline the various agencies in the Department of the Interior and make the best possible use of the funds which are provided in this appropriation bill.

If he does that, I am confident there will be no serious interruption of those projects which are of vital importance to the West, particularly, because there has been a westward trend in population and there are many thousands of World War II veterans who are seeking to establish homes in the western part of our country.

I am not in complete accord with the conference report, but I do believe that a sincere effort was made on an over-all basis to demand efficiency and economy in the operation of the Interior Department. I am sure that Secretary Krug and his associates will do everything possible in cooperating with the Congress to see that these funds are used to the best possible advantage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished and able gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to compliment the committee in several respects, too many respects to enumerate them in the short time allotted me, but particularly with respect to the added school facilities on the Navajo Indian Reservation. As the distinguished chairman of the conferees has said, there are at least 14,000 children on the Navajo Indian Reservation formerly without schooling. This added appropriation will go a long way toward relieving that situation.

With regard to the discrimination which several gentlemen have mentioned in respect to the irrigation projects, it is said here that some projects were favored over others, all in the name of veterans. That may be. I cannot deny it or confirm it, or comment on it except to say that there are certain projects in this country on which we have recently passed legislation giving veterans preference on land that is to be irrigated.

I, as chairman, have brought in here legislation that would give veterans preference on all irrigated land watered by the Bureau of Reclamation in the 17 Western States. Unfortunately, that legislation has not been completely enacted, it is not on the statute books. Being apparently unable to get that measure on the statute books, I recently attempted to get certain specific reclamation projects thus favored. On the 6th of March the President signed a bill which gives veterans preference on an irrigation project in my own State. That is good, but I do wish we could get overall legislation that would give the same preference in all the 17 Western States. In that case, I think there would be no proper charge of discrimination.

The gentleman preceding me did not specify what irrigation projects they thought were favored in behalf of veterans and which they thought to be discriminated against by receiving relatively less appropriation. It is barely possible that among others they may have had in mind projects in my part of the Southwest receiving water from the lower Colorado River in southern California or in Arizona. Now, it was the Gila project in Arizona and the lands in southern California watered through the All-American Canal which were covered by the legislation signed by the President on March 6 last, giving preference to veterans on such newly irrigated lands.

I think that in the name of helping veterans such projects ought now to receive favorable consideration and appropriation. If that is discrimination, it is discrimination in favor of veterans. I certainly feel a lot better about appropriating money to irrigate new lands which the law specifies is going to veterans than I do to appropriate money to irrigate lands which may go to nonveterans, being open to first comers.

As chairman of the House Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation I worked hard to get that legislation favorable to veterans which the President signed on the 6th of last March. However, that legislation applies only to a limited area in Arizona and California, lying on both sides of and near the lower portion of the Colorado River. Believe me, I also worked very hard, as chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to get enacted my bill, H. R. 520, which was designed to give veterans preference to newly irrigated lands reclaimed by the Bureau of Reclamation in any of the 17 Western States. This bill is through the House only, and much impaired.

Let no one claim to be a friend of veterans who has been indifferent, or obstructive, or hostile to this wholesome legislative move to furnish qualified veterans their desire for homes on the land. There is much lip service given veterans these days, but here is the possibility of real service which many Members of Congress seem to have been slow to take advantage of. Well, they may know a better way to help. I, myself, have been scoffed at because of an effort to get good farm homes for some of the qualified veterans. Let him who has done more in a better way to satisfy the land hunger of veterans scoff at these efforts, but I know that such a one will not be inclined to scoff.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California with the unusually good name of Johnson.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the committee for permitting the raising of the appropriation for the Central Valley project about $2,000,000. I also want to express my gratitude for the very generous way in which they have always treated us when we have appeared before them in the committee hearings, and also for the generosity they always show when they give us time to speak on this bill.

I notice in the report that all the money to provide for transmission lines on the west side of the Sacramento Valley has been cut out. May I ask the chairman if that is correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Does this mean that the committee in the future will not allow any money for transmission lines to run down the west side of the Sacramento Valley, and will all of that juice be carried over the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. wires?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The committee of conference, of course, could not and would not attempt to commit any future conferees, but the committee was of the opinion that the lines are not absolutely essential at this time. We will cross the bridge with reference to those lines in the future when we come to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I thank the chairman for that statement, especially the words "at this time."

In my humble opinion, to get the maximum value out of the Shasta Dam in the development of the electricity there, we must develop an integrated system. If we are going to funnel our electricity over the wires of the private utilities we will not get the maximum financial benefits out of the development of this great water project. A good example of that is the Turlock irrigation district, 40 miles south where I live. They generated power at the dam where they store their irrigation water and instead of selling it as they had a good chance to do, to the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., they distributed that juice themselves to their own consumers. The Central Valley, in my opinion, will get the greatest financial benefit out of this great project and it will bring the greatest benefits to the irrigation users by generating the power and carrying it over their own wires, then selling it to utility districts, reclamation districts, and irrigation districts. I want to leave that thought in the minds of the members of the committee especially, that in order to carry out the original State plan we must develop an integrated system where we control our transmission lines and our generating plants and all other parts of the system. If we do not do that, then the irrigators will not get the financial benefit that was anticipated when the State plan was adopted.

All of you know that the present Federal plan is nothing more than the State plan, approved by the people of the State of California in 1933. Therefore, I want to recommend as strongly as I can that this Subcommittee on Appropriations have in mind in the future that adequate money should be given for the development of transmission lines and all of the necessary paraphernalia to make an integrated system out of the Central Valley water project.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute in order that the gentleman from Washington, who is standing, may ask me a question.

Mr. SAVAGE. Is the amount for the Olympia-Cosmopolis line under the Bonneville Administration included in the conference report?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; it is included as is shown on page 24 of the report.

Mr. SAVAGE. What is the amount?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The amount is $790,000, the full amount which was requested.

Mr. SAVAGE. I thank the gentleman. I know they gave much consideration to this project. I am sure it will return to the Government several times the cost of its construction.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am sure that is true, and may I say also that the gentleman from Washington appeared before our committee and made a very convincing statement relative to the project in question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 2: Page 2, line 6, insert:

"WAR AGENCY LIQUIDATION

"War Agency Liquidation: For all expenses necessary for liquidating the War Relocation Authority program provided for in Executive Order 9102 and in the President's message of June 12, 1944 to Congress (House Doc. 656, 78th Congress), including personal services in the District of Columbia; travel expenses; printing and binding, $173,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of said amendment strike out "$173,000" and insert "$150,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 5: On page 2, line 20, strike out lines 20 through 25 inclusive and on page 3 strike out lines 1 to 5 inclusive and insert the following:

"OIL AND GAS DIVISION

"Oil and Gas Division: For all expenses necessary for coordinating and unifying policies and administration of Federal activities relative to oil, gas, and synthetic fuels, including cooperation with the petroleum industry and State auhorities in the production, processing, and utilization of petroleum and petroleum products, natural gas, and synthetic fuels and the compilation of technical reports thereon, for administering and enforcing the provisions of the act of February 22, 1935, as amended (15 U. S. C., ch. 15A); and for the liquidation of the Petroleum Administration for War; including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; not to exceed $10,000 for employment of a director without regard to the civil service and classification laws; travel expenses; contract stenographic reporting services, printing and binding; and the purchase (not to exceed five), maintenance, operation, and repair of passenger automobiles; $449,516."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 18 of said amendment strike out "$449,516" and insert "$400,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 5: Page 3, line 24, insert the following:

"DIVISION OF GEOGRAPHY

"Salaries and expenses: For all necessary expenses of the Division of Geography, in performing the duties imposed under the Secretary by Executive Order 6680, dated April 17, 1934, relating to uniform usage in regard to geographic nomenclature and orthography throughout the Federal Government, including personal services in the District of Columbia, stationery and office supplies, and printing and binding, $50,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 9 of said amendment strike out "$50,000" and insert "$12,956."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 7: On page 5, line 16, insert after the semicolon where it appears first "hire of aircraft."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 17: On page 8, line 14, strike out "fighting fires, fire prevention."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 18: On page 8, line 21, after the comma, strike out "$212,500" and insert "$689,000; for payment of a salary of $6 per diem while actually employed and for the payment of necessary travel expenses, exclusive of subsistence, of members of advisory committees of local stockmen, $40,000; in all, $729,000: Provided."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "$514,500, for payment of a salary of $5 per diem while actually employed and for the payment of necessary travel expenses, exclusive of subsistence, of members of advisory committees of local stockmen, $35,500; in all, $550,000."

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield the gentleman from Colorado 2 minutes.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I think it is very unfortunate to cut this Grazing Service personnel any further than the Senate did. I thoroughly approve of the division of the money, such as the $40,000 for advisory boards, but I want to say there are 56 grazing districts in the 10 Western States, and the amount of money that is available allots 100 permanent employees for the Grazing Service, which is one and one-half men for each grazing district, to make out reports, supervision of 140,000,000 acres of land, fire fighting, and everything else. It seems to me this is too low even as the Senate reported it. I understand this amendment would make it still lower. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman from Colorado that under the provisions of the Senate amendment there would have been little or no reduction of the personnel of the Grazing Service. The Senate added to the personnel of the Grazing Service.

Last year the Grazing Service had $1,293,000. The appropriations have been skyrocketing for the past few years, and the more Congress gave them the more they demanded. Imagine the surprise of the committee this year when, instead of getting back to prewar appropriations, the Grazing Service asked for $1,784,000, although the committee had made it plain a year ago that they must take a reduction this year.

The amount agreed upon, although less than one-half of the huge sum requested, is nearly twice as much as was allowed by the House. It will not hinder or hamstring that agency, but I do not hesitate to predict that it will function more efficiently. At least I hope so. The fact is that unless the Grazing Service gets its house in order, and by that I mean that unless it increases the grazing fees on sheep and cattle and actually makes an effort to function within its revenues, there is more trouble ahead of it. For example, the charge of 1 penny a month as a grazing fee for sheep, and 5 pennies a month for cattle, a small fraction of the amount charged by the Department of Agriculture, is absurd. It does not make sense, and for fear your friends in the Grazing Service do not read the RECORD I would thank the gentleman from Colorado to so advise them of the situation.

Mr. ROCKWELL. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the amount paid in by stockmen in fees for grazing is considerably more than the total amount allowed for administration. The fact that 50 percent of the amount they pay in is returned to the States is not to be blamed upon the men who pay the fees; that is a law passed by Congress. In my opinion, Congress is to blame, if there is any blame, for the fact that all of it does not go into the Federal Treasury; but to me to blame the men who pay these fees for the fact that the Treasury does not receive them all is not fair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman wants to defend the policy of the Grazing Service in charging fees of 1 cent a month for sheep and 5 cents for cattle, that is his responsibility, but the gentleman no doubt is familiar with the history of this legislation. I am sure the gentleman knows that this committee and the Congress were assured by the author of the act creating the Grazing Service—the late Edward T. Taylor, respected and admired by all who knew him—assured the Congress that this act would be self-supporting. It will also be recalled that his main witness in support of his bill, a former "extinguished" Secretary of the Interior, not only assured the Congress that the grazing setup would pay all of its way but he also assured us that the entire cost of the administration of the Grazing Service would not be more than $150,000 per year. Go read the RECORD. I placed the testimony in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Congress accepted it as an ironclad agreement. I repeat that a definite assurance given this Congress and the committee again and again and again that the Grazing Service would operate within its revenues, with the understanding that only one-half of the revenues went for the administration of the agency.

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself another minute.

Mr. Speaker, they have not kept faith with the Congress. Their slogan seems to be to spend and spend and spend. We have been extremely liberal with this agency under the circumstances, and unless and until they get their house in order, they are strictly on "probation" so far as our committee is concerned.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I still say that the stockmen of the West are paying approximately $775,000 in fees to the Grazing Service. It is not their fault if the Congress does pass a law returning 50 percent of that money to the State. In other words, they are allotted under this amendment a little over $500,000 where they are paying in fees $775,000. The fact that the Congress passes a law or bill returning 50 percent of the fees to the States or giving it to Britain for a loan or something else is not the fault of the men who are paying. I think they are carrying out their agreement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am not blaming, and the committee is not blaming, the gentleman's constituents, the fine stockmen of the West. They are good substantial citizens, some of whom, however, do not relish an increase in grazing fees. I hope they are all friends of the gentleman from Colorado and I am sure they should be. He is a very splendid gentleman aside from being their friend. We are blaming the Grazing Service for its mismanagement and inefficiency. The Grazing Service, in the beginning, was given a yardstick, but they have stretched that yardstick to the limit. They evidently saw other Government agencies, like the Division of Geography, mushroom from a modest beginning of 3 or 4 employees to one with 69. So, they evidently thought that they could do the same. And I regret to say they have done so. And now because your conferees insist on this mushroomed agency coming down to earth and operating in a businesslike way, we are told that this slight reduction under what it had last year is very unfortunate. In my book it is fortunate to get anything.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 19: Page 9, line 12, insert ": Provided further, That $100,000 of this appropriation shall be available only for the payment to employees for accumulated or accrued annual leave due upon their separation from Government service."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1, of said amendment, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$125,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 20: Page 9, line 16, insert "Fire fighting: For fighting fires on or threatening lands under Grazing Service administration, $50,000, which amount shall also be available for meeting obligations of the preceding fiscal year."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment strike out "$50,000" and insert "$40,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 53: On page 21, line 5, insert ": Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent in writing of the tribal council representing the Indians of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservation, is hereby authorized and directed to sell to the city of Lawton, Oklahoma, for public uses, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, such portions of the school and agency lands as are no longer needed for administrative purposes, located in section 30, of township 2 north, range 11 west, of the Indian meridian, and which formed a part of the original Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservation: And provided further, That out of the proceeds of any such sale, the sum of $1.25 per acre shall be credited to the general fund of the United States Treasury and the balance shall be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the tribal fund of the Indians of the said Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservation."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 58: Page 23, line 14, insert:

"The unexpended balance of the appropriation contained in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1946, for settlement of claims to water rights in the Gila River, Ariz., is hereby continued available for the same purposes until June 30, 1947."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 78: On page 25, line 10, insert "private architectural and engineering services."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 80: on page 25, line 22, insert:

"Fort Apache, Ariz.: For the purpose of cooperating with McNary school district, Apache County, Ariz., for the construction, and improvement of public-school buildings, for which the Indian Service may furnish plans, $25,000: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all Indian children of the school district on the same terms as other children of said school district: Provided further, That the amount expended on this project shall be recouped by the United States within a period of 30 years, commencing with the date of occupancy of the project, by the acceptance of Indian pupils in this school without cost to the United States; and, in computing the amount of recoupment of the project, interest at 3 percent per annum shall be included on unrecouped balances: Provided further, That with the consent of the tribal council of the White Mountain Apache Tribe of the Fort Apache Indian Reservation, Ariz., the Secretary may set aside tribal land at McNary, Ariz., as a school reserve so long as such land is needed for school purposes."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 85: Page 28, line 3, strike out "$875,300" and insert "$3,386,800."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 85 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$3,023,800."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 87: Page 28, line 14, strike out "$1,700,000" and insert "$5,700,000 to remain available until expended."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 87 and concur in the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert "$3,700,000."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As I understand, the gentleman is moving that the House recede and concur with an amendment making the amount $3,700,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Under the conference report was Amendment 87, the one which related to the Division of Roads?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The formula was eliminated, but I will say that the conferees agreed unanimously to advise the Indian Bureau that it must work out a formula that will be fair and equitable to the States having the bulk of the Indian population with reference to the distribution of Indian road money. In the past, for instance, the State of Oklahoma has received only about 6 percent of Indian road money, yet it has more than one-third of the Indian population of the United States. On the other hand, it was found that the new proposed formula might be unfair to other States, so the formula has been eliminated for the time being, and, as I stated, the Indian Service has been asked to work out a formula that will be fair to all States having a substantial Indian population.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, the formula applied made some of the road money go to States which really have no active reservations today.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; the committee was advised that is correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. This money, as I understand, is for the use of the true reservation roads and not for main highways.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Well, I am not sure I know what the gentleman means by "true reservations," but it is for roads and highways adjacent to lands a major portion of which is owned by Indians.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The main highways coming out of the regular Federal-aid fund.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 90: Page 30, line 16, insert "For full and final settlement of all claims and demands of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation in North Dakota in accordance with the provisions of H. R. 1095, Seventy-ninth Congress, $400,000: Provided, That not to exceed 5 per centum of the amount herein appropriated may be used for payment of fees and expenses of attorneys employed under contract approved in accordance with existing law."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 92: Page 31, line 6, insert "Administration of tribal affairs, Blackfeet Indians, Montana (tribal funds): For general support of Indians and administration of Indian property of the Blackfeet Indians, Montana, including the purchase of land, title to which shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the Blackfeet Indians, $100,000, payable from funds held by the United States in trust for the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The Bureau of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized to acquire by transfer without exchange of funds (for three years beginning July 1, 1946), from the War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Agriculture, or the War Assets Administration, equipment, materials, and supplies of all kinds, with an appraised value of not to exceed $6,300,000 from the surplus stores of these agencies, for use in the schools, hospitals, and agencies, or by any operating division of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in the United States and Alaska: Provided, That the authorization in this paragraph for transfer of surplus property to the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall not be construed to deny to veterans the priority accorded to them in obtaining surplus property under Public Law 375, approved May 3, 1946."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 141: Page 52, line 3, insert the following:

"Utilization of power revenues: No power revenues on any project shall be distributed as profits to any individual, before or after retirement of the project debt, and nothing contained in any previous appropriation Act shall be deemed to have authorized such distribution: Provided, That the application of such revenues to the cost of operation, maintenance, and debt service of the irrigation system of the project, or to other purposes in aid of such irrigation system, shall not be construed to be such a distribution."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141 and concur in the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, strike out the words "to any individual."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is in accord with a recommendation of the National Reclamation Association, as follows:

Resolution No. 11

Whereas the intent of the reclamation laws is to accord equal treatment to every type of water users' organization, and there should be no discrimination, under any Federal statute, between irrigation districts, water users' associations, mutual ditch companies, and other types of water users' organizations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That in view of that intent the reclamation laws and other Federal statutes should be clarified where necessary to insure that the application of water revenues and power revenues to repaying the cost of construction, to pay operation and maintenance expenses, and otherwise to reduce the cost of water to the farmer on a reclamation project by whatever type of organization it is operated, does not constitute a dividend or distribution of such revenues, but a proper disposition of the resources of a multiple-purpose project, as intended by Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the officers and appropriate committees of the National Reclamation Association are instructed to present and endeavor to secure the adoption of clarifying legislation to the foregoing effect.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 159: Page 55, line 1, insert the following:

"WATER CONSERVATION AND UTILIZATION PROJECTS

"For the construction of water conservation and utilization projects and small reservoirs, as authorized by the act of August 11, 1939, as amended (16 U. S. C., 590y, 590z–1, 590z–2), $3,340,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I am most gratified to have this conference committee and the House approve the appropriation of $3,340,000 for the construction of water conservation and utilization projects and small reservoirs, as authorized by the act of August 11, 1939. The amount is immediately available and will remain available until expended.

The purpose of the appropriation is to provide funds for the completion of the Mancos project, in southwestern Colorado, to the amount of $1,300,000 and the balance of the Eden project in Wyoming.

Your committee, and the House, have also approved in this bill an appropriation of $362,000 for the acquisition of rights-of-way and construction of a water supply line into the Mesa Verde National Park, the money also to remain available until expended. This water supply will probably come from the Mancos Dam when it is completed.

The Mancos project was begun 6 years ago under the Wheeler-Case Act, with WPA labor. It was continued during the war, the labor being furnished by conscientious objectors. This appropriation for $1,300,000 will complete the project, according to the estimates of the Reclamation Service. The project is about 28 percent completed at this time and it is hoped that it will be completed within the year. The completion of the Mancos project will provide supplemental water in the Mancos Valley to about 7,000 acres, and will also furnish water for 3,000 acres of new land.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 166: Page 58, line 20, insert the following:

"For purposes of effecting settlement of war veterans on public land reclamation projects and to provide facilities for veteran employment in construction and operation of reclamation projects, the Bureau of Reclamation is hereby authorized to acquire by transfer without exchange of funds from the War Assets Administration or other Federal agency in responsible charge, the lands, improvements, and equipment acquired by the War Relocation Authority on the war relocation centers on the Heart Mountain Division of the Shoshone project, Wyoming; the Minidoka (Hunt) project, Idaho; and the Tulelake division of the Klamath project, California; and the former prisoner-of-war camp at Indianola, Nebr.: Provided, That said lands, improvements, and equipment shall be made available under regulations of the Secretary of the Interior to veteran settlers and nonprofit organizations, in accordance with the provisions of Senate Report No.

1412, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session: Provided further, That the War Assets Administration is authorized to transfer to the Bureau of Reclamation funds required for maintenance and protection of the transferred property pending its final disposition."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 166 and concur in the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"For purposes of effecting settlement of war veterans on public-land reclamation projects and to provide facilities for veteran employment in construction and operation of reclamation projects, the Bureau of Reclamation is hereby authorized to acquire by transfer without exchange of funds from the War Assets Administration or other Federal agency in responsible charge and such agencies are directed to transfer the lands, improvements, buildings, furnishings, and equipment acquired by the War Relocation Authority and declared surplus on the war relocation centers on the Heart Mountain division of the Shoshone project, Wyoming, the Minidoka (Hunt) project, Idaho, and the Tulelake division of the Klamath project, California; and on the former prisoner-of-war camp at Indianola, Nebr.: Provided, That said lands, improvements, buildings, furnishings, and equipment shall be made available under regulations of the Secretary of the Interior to veteran settlers and nonprofit organizations and otherwise in accordance with the provision of Senate Report No. 1412, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session: Provided further, That the War Assets Administration is authorized and directed to transfer to the Bureau of Reclamation funds required for maintenance and protection of the transferred property pending its final disposition."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 234: Page 81, line 20, after "including", insert "necessary access roads for development and use of the recreational resources of Lake Texoma recreational area, Texas and Oklahoma, and."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, assuming that this amendment is not particularly objectionable to the great Speaker of the House, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL ACT AND STABILIZATION ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That section 1 (b) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by striking out 'June 30, 1946' and substituting 'June 30, 1947'.

"SEC. 2. Section 6 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by striking out 'June 30, 1946' and substituting 'June 30, 1947'.

"SEC. 3. Title I of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting after section 1 thereof a new section as follows:

"'PURPOSES AND POLICIES IN THE TRANSITION PERIOD

"'SEC. 1A. (a) OBJECTIVES.—The Congress hereby affirms—

"'(1) that because of abnormally excess spending power in relation to the presently available supply of commodities, rapid attainment of production equal to the public demand is one of the necessary and urgent objectives for the prevention of inflation and for the achievement of a reasonable stability in the general level of prices and rents, cost of living and costs of production (including labor costs), for the purposes set forth in section 1 of this Act and for the further purposes of protecting the real value of benefits provided by law for veterans and their dependents, of keeping faith with purchasers of United States War Bonds, and of making possible a successful transition to a peacetime economy of maximum employment, production, and purchasing power under a system of free enterprise;

"'(2) that unnecessary or unduly prolonged controls over prices and rents and use of subsidies would be inconsistent with the return to such a peacetime economy and would tend to repress and prevent the attainment of this and the other goals herein declared; and

"'(3) that adequate prices are necessary stimulants to the production thus desired and the expeditious attainment of said goals.

"'(b) DECLARATION OF DECONTROL POLICY.—Therefore, it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that the Office of Price Administration, and other agencies of the Government, shall use their price, subsidy, and other powers to promote the earliest practicable balance between production and the demand therefor of commodities under their control, and that the general control of prices and the use of subsidy powers shall, subject to other specific provisions of this Act, be terminated as rapidly as possible consistent with the policies and purposes set forth in this section and in no event later than June 30, 1947, and on that date the Office of Price Administration shall be abolished.

"'(c) RECOMMENDATIONS BY THE PRESIDENT TO THE CONGRESS.—(1) As soon as practicable after the enactment of this section and in any event on or before January 15, 1947, the President shall recommend to the Congress such further legislation as in his judgment is needed to establish monetary, fiscal, and other policies which are adequate to supplement the control of prices and wages during the balance of the fiscal year 1947, and to insure that general control of prices and wages can be terminated by the end of that fiscal year without danger of inflation thereafter.

"'On or before April 1, 1947, the President shall report to the Congress what, if any, commodities or classes of commodities, including housing accommodations, are in such critically short supply as to necessitate, in his judgment, the continuance of the Powers granted by this Act as to them after June 30, 1947, together with his recommendations as to established departments or agencies of the Government (other than the Office of Price Administration) which should be charged with the administration of such powers.

"'(d) DECONTROL OF NONAGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES.—(1) On or before December 31, 1946, the Administrator shall decontrol all nonagricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs, and prior to that date shall proceed with such decontrol as rapidly as, in his judgment, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect. In no event shall maximum prices be maintained after December 31, 1946, for any nonagricultural commodity or class of commodities unless the same has been expressly found by the Administrator to be important in relation to business costs or living costs.

"'(2) The Administrator shall provide for the prompt removal of maximum prices in the case of any nonagricultural commodity whenever the supply thereof exceeds or is in approximate balance with the demand therefor (including appropriate inventory requirements).

"'(3) Whenever, after a reasonable test period, it appears that the supply of a nonagricultural commodity which has been decontrolled is no longer consistent with the applicable decontrol standard, the Administrator, with the advance consent in writing of the Price Decontrol Board established under subsection (h), shall reestablish such maximum prices for the commodity, consistent with applicable provisions of law, as in his judgment may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

"'(e) AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES.—(1) On the first day of the first calendar month which begins more than thirty days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the Price Administrator each agricultural commodity which such Secretary determines to be in short supply. Thereafter, on the first day of each succeeding calendar month the Secretary shall certify modifications of such certification by adding other agricultural commodities which have become in short supply and by removing from such certification such commodities which he determines are no longer in short supply. No maximum price shall be applicable with respect to any agricultural commodity during any calendar month which begins more than thirty days after the date of enactment of this section, unless such commodity is certified to the Price Administrator under this paragraph as being in short supply.

"'(2) (A) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that maximum prices applicable to any agricultural commodity which is in short supply are impeding the necessary production of such commodity, he may recommend to the Price Administrator such adjustments in such maximum prices as the Secretary determines to be necessary to attain the necessary production of such commodity.

"'(B) The Secretary of Agriculture by December 31, 1946, shall recommend to the Price Administrator the removal of maximum prices on all agricultural commodities, whether or not in short supply, not important in relation to business costs or living costs, and prior to that date shall make such recommendations as rapidly as, in his judgment, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect.

"'(C) Within ten days after the receipt of any recommendation under this subsection for the adjustment of maximum prices applicable to any agricultural commodity, or for the removal of maximum prices on agricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs, the Price Administrator shall adjust or remove such maximum prices in accordance with such recommendations.

"'(3) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that an agricultural commodity with respect to which maximum prices have been removed is in short supply and that the reestablishment of maximum prices with respect thereto is necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act, the Secretary, with the written consent of the Price Decontrol Board, may recommend to the Administrator, and the Administrator shall establish, such maximum prices with respect to such commodity, consistent with applicable provisions of law, as in the judgment of the Secretary are necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

"'(4) For the purposes of this section—

"'(A) an agricultural commodity shall be deemed to be in short supply unless the supply of such commodity equals or exceeds the requirements for such commodity for the current marketing season;

"'(B) the term "agricultural commodity" shall be deemed to mean any agricultural commodity and any food or feed product processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity.

"'(5) Notwithstanding any other provision of this or any other law, except as provided in subsection (h), the Secretary of Agriculture, in exercising his functions under this Act, shall not be subject to the direction or control of any other appointive officer or agency in the executive branch of the Government, and no such officer or agency shall undertake to exercise any direction or control over the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to the exercise of such functions. The Secretary of Agriculture may at any time withdraw his approval of any action with respect to which his approval is required under this Act, and upon the withdrawal of his approval such action shall be rescinded.

"'(6) No maximum price and no regulation or order under this Act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any service rendered with respect to any agricultural commodity, unless a regulation or order establishing a maximum price with respect to such commodity had been issued under this Act prior to April 1, 1946.

"'(f) SAVING PROVISION.—Nothing in this section shall limit the Administrator's authority to remove maximum prices for any nonagricultural commodity, or any agricultural commodity with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, at an earlier time than would be required by this section, if in his judgment or in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, as the case may be, such action would be consistent with the purposes of this section

"'(g) PETITIONS FOR DECONTROL.—(1) If in the judgment of the industry advisory committee appointed by the Administrator in accordance with section 2 (a) of this Act to advise and consult with him with respect to a commodity, the standards set forth in this section require the removal of maximum prices for such commodity, it may file a petition for the removal of such maximum prices. In the case of any nonagricultural commodity, such petition shall be filed with the Administrator in accordance with regulations prescribed by him. In the case of agricultural commodities, such petition shall be filed with the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with regulations prescribed by him and shall request that he make an appropriate certification or recommendation to the Price Administrator. The petition shall specifically state the grounds upon which the committee believes such action to be required and shall be accompanied by affidavits or other written evidence in support thereof.

"'(2) Within fifteen days after receiving a petition filed in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, the Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture, as the case may be, shall either grant the petition or inform the committee in writing why in his judgment the standards for decontrol stated in subsections (d) and (e) have not been satisfied with respect to the commodity involved. If the petition is not granted in full, the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall, within ten days after the receipt of a request by the committee for further consideration of its petition, hold a hearing before himself or before a deputy administrator (or, in the case of the Secretary, before such officer as he may designate) at which the committee may present its argument in support of the petition. The Consumers Advisory Committee and the Labor Advisory Committee appointed by the Administrator shall be given notice of any such hearing and an opportunity to present their views with respect to the petition and may, not later than five days prior to such hearing, present in writing evidence relating thereto. Within fifteen days after such hearing, the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, shall either grant the petition in full or furnish the industry advisory committee with a statement in writing of his reasons for denying it in whole or in part, together with a statement of any economic data or other facts of which he has taken official notice in connection with such denial

"'(3) At any time within thirty days after the denial in whole or in part, following a hearing, of a petition filed under this subsection, the petitioning industry advisory committee may petition the Price Decontrol Board established under subsection (h) for a review of the action of the Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture. If the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, fails to act upon a petition within the time prescribed by paragraph (2), the industry advisory committee may, at any time within thirty days after the expiration of the time so prescribed, petition the Price Decontrol Board for the removal of maximum prices on the commodity involved.

"'(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to take away or impair any right of any person to protest, in accordance with the provisions of sections 203 and 204 of this Act, the further maintenance of maximum prices for a commodity under the standards of subsection (d) or (e): Provided, That the filing of such a protest or of a petition under paragraph 3 of this subsection shall not be grounds for staying any proceeding brought pursuant to section 205 of this Act or section 37 of the Criminal Code, and no retroactive effect shall be given to any judgment setting aside a provision of a regulation, order, or price schedule under the standards set forth in this section.

"'(h) PRICE DECONTROL BOARD.—(1) There is hereby established as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government a Price Decontrol Board, to be composed of three members appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than two members of the Board shall be members of the same political party. Two members of the Board shall constitute a quorum, and a vacancy in the membership of the Board shall not impair the power of the remaining members to exercise its functions. Members of the Board shall receive compensation at the rate of $12,000 a year.

"'(2) The Board shall appoint and fix the compensation of a secretary for the Board and such other officers and employees as may be necessary to enable it to perform its functions. The Board may make such expenditures as may be necessary for performing its functions. The Board may, with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, utilize the facilities, services, and personnel of other agencies or departments of the Government. The Board shall maintain an office in charge of its secretary in the District of Columbia, which shall be open on all business days for the receipt of petitions for review and the transaction of other business of the Board. The Board shall prescribe regulations and procedures for the conduct of its business which will provide for summary disposition, with the utmost expedition consistent with sound decision, of petitions filed with the Board.

"'(3) A petition made under subsection (g) (3) shall specifically state the grounds upon which the petitioning industry advisory committee believes that maximum prices on the commodity involved should be removed. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served on the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, who shall within such time as may be fixed by the Board certify and file with the Board a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the petition under subsection (g) as are material. Such transcript shall include a statement in writing of the Administrator's or Secretary's reasons for believing that maximum prices on the commodity involved should not be removed, together with a statement of any economic data or other facts of which he has taken official notice. At the earliest practicable time the Board shall conduct a hearing upon the petition, at which the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, and the committee shall be given an opportunity to present their views and argument orally or in writing. If application is made to the Board by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence, the Board may permit such evidence to be introduced or filed with it if it deems it material and determines that such evidence could not reasonably have been offered or included in the proceedings under subsection (g). At the earliest practicable time after the hearing on any petition, the Board shall make and issue an order specifying the extent, if any, to which maximum prices on the commodity involved shall be removed. The Board shall order the removal of such maximum prices if and to the extent that in its judgment the standards of decontrol stated in subsection (d) or (e) have been satisfied with respect to the commodity involved. The Administrator shall remove maximum prices with respect to the commodity in question within such time and to such extent as shall be specified in the order of the Board. Orders of the Board shall not be subject to modification or review by any other department or agency or by any court.

"'(4) No petition may be filed with the Board with respect to any commodity within a period of three months after the issuance of an order of the Board with respect to the same commodity.

"'(5) The members of the Board may serve as such without regard to the provisions of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code (18 U. S. C., secs. 198 and 203) or section 19 (e) of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, except insofar as such sections may prohibit any such member from receiving compensation in respect of any particular matter which is within the jurisdiction of the Board.

"'(6) If the number of petitions filed with the Board should at any time become so great as to prevent the Board from promptly conducting hearings upon such petitions, the Board shall appoint such hearing commissioners as it deems necessary in order to expedite the transaction of its business. The Board may authorize one or more of the hearing commissioners so appointed to conduct the hearing upon any petition under this subsection and to exercise the authority of the Board with respect to such hearing. After a hearing conducted before a hearing commissioner, the commissioner shall make recommendations consistent with this subsection to the Board concerning its action with respect to the petition. If the Board approves such recommendations, it shall issue an order in conformity therewith. If the Board does not approve such recommendations, the Board may issue such order as it deems proper upon the record or may conduct a new hearing upon the petition before the Board.'

"SEC. 4. Section 2 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'In administering the provisions of this subsection relating to the establishment of industry advisory committees, the Administrator, upon the request of a substantial portion of the industry in any region, shall promptly appoint a regional industry advisory committee for such region.'

"SEC. 5. Section 2 (b) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph as follows:

"'After the date upon which this paragraph takes effect, the Administrator, when establishing rent ceilings on hotels or when passing upon applications for adjustments of rent ceilings on hotels, is authorized to take into consideration the distinction between transient hotels and residential or apartment hotels, including the difference in the investment, operation, expenses, and mechanical details of operation between the transient hotels and the residential and apartment hotels, and is directed to classify separately by regulation (1) transient hotels, (2) residential and apartment hotels, and (3) tourist courts, rooming houses, and boarding houses.'

"SEC. 6. (a) The last paragraph of section 2 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended by the Stabilization Extension Act of 1944, shall not apply with respect to operations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation: Provided, That with respect to such corporations and such operations, the making of subsidy payments and buying for resale at a loss shall be limited as follows:

"Payments and purchases may be made with respect to operations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, which involve subsidies and anticipated losses as follows:

"(1) With respect to rubber produced in Latin America and Africa for which commitments were made before January 1, 1946, $31,000,000.

"(2) With respect to copper, lead, and zinc, in the form of premium price payments, $100,000,000: Provided, That (A) premiums shall be paid on ores mined or removed from mine dumps or tailing piles before July 1, 1947, though shipped and/or processed and marketed subsequently thereto; and that (B) the premium price plan for copper, lead, and zinc shall be extended until June 30, 1947, on terms not less favorable to the producer than heretofore and (i) adjustments shall be made to encourage exploration and development work, (ii) adequate allowances shall be made for depreciation and depletion, and (iii) all classes of premiums shall be noncancelable unless necessary in order to make individual adjustments of income to specific mines.

"(3) With respect to purchases by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, of such tin ores and concentrates as it deems necessary to insure continued operation of the Texas City tin smelter.

"(4) With respect to noncrop programs, 1946 crop program operations and the 1947 crop program operations relating to sugar, flour, petroleum, petroleum products, and other domestic and imported materials and commodities, $869,000,000: Provided, That the operations authorized under this subparagraph (4) shall be progressively reduced, shall be terminated not later than April 1, 1947, and shall not cost more than $629,000,000 during the last six months of the calendar year 1946. Operations shall not be carried out under authority of this subparagraph (4) with respect to any commodity for any period during which maximum prices on such commodity are not in effect under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended: Provided, That subsidies with respect to petroleum produced from stripper wells may be continued at not to exceed the existing rates. No new subsidy or purchase and sale operations shall be undertaken under the authority of this subparagraph (4), and no change shall be made in the basis of any existing operations for which funds are made available under this subparagraph which will increase the rate of any subsidy or the rate of loss incurred with respect to any commodity.

"(b) When any direct or indirect subsidy to an industry is reduced or terminated, any maximum price applicable to the product affected shall be correspondingly increased, except in the case of transportation subsidies and differential subsidies to high-cost producers.

"(c) Where roll-back subsidies have previously been or presently are in effect, and have been discontinued, or shall hereafter be discontinued, the industries which have received such subsidies shall be permitted to increase their ceiling prices at least an amount equivalent to the amount of the discontinued roll-back subsidy. Such price increase shall become effective either upon discontinuance of the roll-back subsidy or upon passage of this Act, whichever date is the later. For the purposes of this paragraph, the term 'roll-back subsidies' means subsidy payments, or purchases and sales of a commodity at a loss by the Government of the United States (including any Government-owned or controlled corporation), or contracts therefor, which resulted directly or indirectly in the lowering of ceiling prices below the maximum price levels established by the Office of Price Administration prior to the institution of the subsidy payments or purchases and sales at a loss, or the execution of the contracts therefor, whichever date is the earlier.

"(d) Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect the provisions of Public Laws 30, 88, 164, and 328 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, or to prevent the use of the sums authorized in such laws to fulfill obligations incurred prior to July 1, 1946, with respect to operations prior to such date.

"(e) Notwithstanding any of the foregoing provisions of this section 6, 1946 and 1947 crop program operations with respect to sugar, may, while maximum prices are in effect with respect to sugar, be continued until such crops are processed and distributed, and the cost of 1946 crop program operations with respect to sugar may be charged to the funds authorized by Public Law 30, Seventy-ninth Congress, as amended by Public Law 328, Seventy-ninth Congress. For the purpose of this section 6, no subsidy program operation on sugar shall be considered to be a new subsidy.

"(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed as a limitation upon operations authorized by the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946 (Public Law 388, Seventy-ninth Congress).

"SEC. 7. Section 2 (i) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(i) For the purposes of this Act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, fish and other sea foods shall be deemed to be agricultural commodities, and commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from fish or other sea foods shall be deemed to be manufactured in whole or substantial part from agricultural commodities: Provided, That the provisions of section 3 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall not be applicable with respect to fish and other sea foods and commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, but the maximum price established for any fish or sea food commodity or for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom shall not be below the average price therefor in the year 1942.'

"SEC. 8. Section 2 (j) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following: 'or (5) as authorizing any regulation or order of the Administrator to fix a quantity or percentage of any product which any seller may sell to any buyer'.

"SEC. 9. Section 2 (k) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting the words 'or any operator of any service establishment' after the words 'seller of goods at retail'.

"SEC. 10. Section 2 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"'(o) No maximum price shall be applicable to any item served in any restaurant or other eating establishment if such item consists in whole or major part of a commodity to which no maximum price is applicable with respect to sales to restaurants and other eating establishments, unless the maximum price of such item, when sold by such restaurant or other eating establishment, is determined, under the applicable maximum price regulation or order, by the addition of a customary margin to the acquisition cost of such item.

"'(p) After July 1, 1946, no maximum price regulation or order shall be issued or continued in effect requiring any seller to limit his sales by any weighted average price limitation based on his previous sales.

"'(q) In the case of any retail industry, the principal sales of which consisted during the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, of sales of a commodity or commodities the production or retail distribution of which has been reduced, for a period of three years beginning on or after March 2, 1942, by 75 per centum or more below such production or retail distribution for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, as a result of the operation of any governmental regulation or restriction, the Administrator shall not, in establishing maximum prices under this section, reduce established peacetime retail trade discounts or mark-up or dealer handling charges for any such commodity before the retail unit sales of such commodity for a period of six months shall have reached the average annual retail unit sales thereof for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive.

"'(r) In the case of any wholesale industry, the principal sales of which consisted during the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, of sales of a commodity or commodities, the production or wholesale distribution of which has been reduced for a period of 3 years beginning on or after March 2, 1942, by 75 per centum or more below such production or wholesale distribution for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, as the result of the operation of any governmental regulation or restriction, the Administrator shall not in establishing maximum prices under this section reduce established wholesale trade discounts or normal wholesale mark-ups for any such commodity prevailing on March 2, 1942, before the wholesale unit sales of such commodity for a period of six months shall have reached the average annual wholesale unit sales thereof for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive.

"'(s) No maximum price regulation or order shall require the reduction of the established peacetime discounts or mark-ups for the sale of any manufactured or processed commodity (treating as a single commodity for the purposes of this paragraph all commodities in a line of related commodities which, for the purpose of establishing manufacturers' and processors' maximum prices, have been placed by the Office of Price Administration under a single regulation) if the retail, wholesale, or other distributive trade selling such commodity shows that the commodity constituted approximately one-half or more of the gross sales income of a majority of the persons engaged in such trade in 1945 and that, in the first quarter of 1946, the deliveries of such commodity to such distributive trade were less than 100 per centum of the deliveries thereof in the corresponding quarter of 1945.

"'(t) No maximum price applicable to any distributor, wholesaler, or retailer, shall be established or maintained for any commodity below a price which will return to such distributor, wholesaler, or retailer with respect to such commodity his January 1, 1946 discount or the sum of (1) total current cost of acquisition plus (2) his January 1, 1946 mark-up. The January 1, 1946 discount or mark-up shall be the percentage discount or percentage mark-up of such distributor, wholesaler, or retailer in effect on January 1, 1946.

"'(u) After the date upon which this subsection takes effect, no maximum price shall be established or maintained, under this act or under any other provision of law, with respect to any new commodity when the Administrator upon application finds that its use, in the production, manufacturing, or processing of any commodity or commodities, without increasing the cost to the ultimate user, either increases the life or reduces the cost of production, manufacture, or processing of the commodity or commodities produced, manufactured or processed. As used in this subsection the term "new commodity" means a commodity which was not commercially or industrially available prior to January 30, 1942.'

"SEC. 11. The Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by inserting after section 5 thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 6. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of this Act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, but only after the procedure prescribed in subsection (d) hereof, no maximum price applicable to any producer, manufacturer, or processor shall be established or maintained for any product below the price of such producer, manufacturer, or processor for such product during the base period, increased by an amount equal to (or by a percentage factor which on a weighted average basis is equal to) the increase in the weighted average of the per unit costs of a reasonable number of typical producers, manufacturers, or processors with respect to such product since the base period, but if such product as now produced, manufactured, or processed has a different size, quality, or other characteristic, then with appropriate adjustments for such differences. This section shall not apply with respect to any new product which was not produced, manufactured, or processed in the base period, nor with respect to any product if the weighted average per unit costs of a reasonable number of typical producers, manufacturers, or processors with respect to such product has decreased since the base period. In determining costs for the purposes of this section, all costs shall be included which are considered as such under the established accounting practices of the industry.

"'(b) For the purposes of this section—

"'(1) in the case of any product with respect to which a maximum price established by a price schedule issued pursuant to any Executive order was in effect between October 1 and October 15, 1941, the "base period" shall be the two-week period immediately preceding the date upon which a maximum price so established first became effective with respect to such product; and

"'(2) in the case of any other product, the "base period" shall be the period between October 1 and October 15, 1941, except that, if in the case of any product there were no prevailing prices during the period prescribed in clause (1) or (2), as the case may be, or the prevailing prices during such period were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other cause, the base period shall be the nearest period not exceeding 60 days in which, in the judgment of the Administrator, the prevailing prices were substantially normal.

"'(c) As used in this section, "product" shall mean any major item, or any article different in character from other products of the industry; but all the styles, models, or other varieties of any such item or article shall be considered as one product.

"'(d) Any industry advisory committee may apply to the Administrator for the application to any product of the standard set forth in subsection (a) hereof, and shall present with the application comprehensive evidence with relation to the increase in cost of such product from the base period to the date of such application. The Administrator shall consider the evidence so presented and all evidence otherwise available to him and shall, within sixty days after the receipt of such application, determine the increase in the weighted average of the per unit costs of a reasonable number of typical producers, manufacturers, or processors with respect to such product since the base period and announce the amount of such increase. Such increase in weighted average of the per unit costs may be determined and announced in terms of a specified sum per unit or in terms of a percentage factor, as the Administrator may elect. In determining such weighted average of the per unit costs of producers, manufacturers, or processors, it shall not be necessary to obtain detailed cost accounting figures from any producer, manufacturer, or processor who does not already have such figures or to obtain the usual detailed accounting reports from more than a reasonable number of typical producers, manufacturers, and processors, but the Administrator shall promptly reach a conclusion from the best evidence available to him. He shall exclude from his calculations any producers, manufacturers, or processors whose costs by reason of special conditions are completely abnormal. If the Administrator fails to determine and announce the increase in the weighted average of the per unit costs for any product within the sixty-day period prescribed in this subsection, the industry advisory committee concerned may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals, created pursuant to section 204, for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the Administrator to determine and announce such increase within such time, not to exceed thirty days, as may be fixed by the court. If the Administrator fails to determine and announce such increase within the time so fixed, no maximum price shall thereafter be applicable with respect to any sale of such product by any seller.

"'(e) Whenever the Administrator has announced the increase in the weighted average of the per unit costs for any product under subsection (d), it shall be lawful for any producer, manufacturer, or processor to sell such product at the price per unit he charged in the base period, plus the increase per unit so announced by the Administrator, with appropriate adjustments for differences in size, quality, or other characteristics.

"'(f) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, in the case of any agricultural commodity, the base period shall be the calendar year 1941, and in lieu of computing the maximum prices required or permitted by this section by adding the increase in the weighted average of per unit costs to the base period prices of particular producers, such maximum prices shall be computed by adding such increase to the average 1941 price for such agricultural commodity (with appropriate adjustments for grade, location, and seasonal differentials) as determined and announced by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"'(g) The provisions of this section shall not apply with respect to any maximum price applicable to manufacturers or processors in the case of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn or wool or wool yarn.'

"SEC. 12. (a) The second sentence of section 205 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by the court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) Such amount not more than three times the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50, as the court in its discretion may determine: Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge or overcharges if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation, order, or price schedule in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation.'

"(b) Section 205 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"'The Administrator may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States, or, if such action has been instituted, the Administrator shall withdraw the same—

"'(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the commodity acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the Administrator or any regional administrator or district director of the Office of Price Administration; or

"'(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of a commodity to any agency of the Government, or to any public housing authority whose operations are supervised or financed in whole or in part by any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

"'The Administrator shall not institute or maintain any enforcement action under this subsection against any manufacturer of apparel items where the Administrator shall determine (1) that the transactions on which such proceeding is based consisted of the manufacturer's selling such an item at his published March 1942 price list prices instead of his March 1942 delivered prices, and (2) that the seller's customary pricing patterns for related apparel items would be distorted by a requirement that his ceilings be the March 1942 delivered prices. The Administrator's determinations under this paragraph shall be subject to review by the Emergency Court of Appeals in accordance with sections 203 and 204.'

"SEC. 13. The third sentence of paragraph (2) of section 205 (f) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows: 'If any such court finds that such person has violated any of the provisions of such license, regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement after the receipt of the warning notice, such court shall issue an order suspending the license to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell the commodity or commodities in connection with which the violation has occurred, or to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell any commodity or commodities with respect to which a regulation or order issued under section 2, or a price schedule effective in accordance with the provisions of section 206, is applicable; but no suspension shall be for a period of more than twelve months, and if the defendant proves that the violation in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation, then in that event no suspension shall be ordered or directed.'

"SEC. 14. Section 3 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'On and after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, it shall be unlawful to establish, or maintain, any maximum price applicable to manufacturers or processors, for any major item in the case of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn or wool or wool yarn, unless the maximum price for such major item is fixed and maintained at not less than the sum of the following:

"'(1) The cotton or wool cost (which must be computed at not less than the parity price or the current cost, whichever is greater, of the grade and staple of cotton or wool used in such item, delivered at the mill);

"'(2) A weighted average of mill conversion costs; and

"'(3) A reasonable profit (which shall not be less than a weighted average profit for each unit of such item equal to the weighted average of the profit earned on an equivalent unit of such item during the period 1939 to 1941, both inclusive).'

"SEC. 15. The Secretary of Agriculture, through the Commodity Credit Corporation or otherwise, is hereby authorized to allocate feed which he controls to feeders of livestock and poultry in domestic areas which he may determine to be in an emergency shortage condition with respect to animal and poultry feed.

"SEC. 16. (a) In the event producers of wheat are required by an order issued pursuant to the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended, to sell all or any part of wheat delivered to an elevator prior to April 1, 1947, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall offer to purchase the wheat so required to be sold at a price determined as follows: The purchase price paid for the wheat shall be the market price at the point of delivery as of any date the producer may elect between the date of delivery and March 31, 1947, inclusive: Provided, however, That only one election may be made for each lot of wheat: And provided further, That the producer may not elect a date prior to the date on which he mails a written notice to Commodity Credit Corporation of his election. In the event the producer does not notify Commodity Credit Corporation in writing by March 31, 1947, of his election of a date for determining the market price, such date shall be deemed to be March 31, 1947.

"(b) Any producer of wheat who, prior to the date of enactment of this Act, has sold any wheat pursuant to the requirements of paragraph (ee) (1) of War Food Order Numbered 144, may, at any time within thirty days after the date of enactment of this Act, pay to the Commodity Credit Corporation a sum equal to the amount for which he sold such wheat. Any producer paying any such sum to the Commodity Credit Corporation shall be deemed to have sold and delivered to the Commodity Credit Corporation as of the date he pays such sum a quantity of wheat equal in grade and quality to the quantity sold by him pursuant to such requirements and the purchase price to be paid to him for such wheat shall be determined in the same manner as in the case of a sale of wheat to the Commodity Credit Corporation pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) of this section.

"SEC. 17. This Act may be cited as the 'Price Control Extension Act of 1946.'

"SEC. 18. The provisions of this Act shall take effect upon the date of its enactment; but insofar as such provisions require any change in any maximum price, such provisions shall not be deemed to require such change to be made before the thirtieth day following the date of enactment of this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

EXTENSION OF PRICE CONTROL ACT AND STABILIZATION ACT

The House bill (secs. 1 and 3) provides for continuing in effect until March 31, 1947, the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 and the Stabilization Act of 1942. The corresponding provisions of the Senate amendment provide for extension of these laws until June 30, 1947. The date fixed in the conference substitute (in secs. 1 and 2) is June 30, 1947.

GENERAL PRICING STANDARDS APPLYING TO PRODUCERS, MANUFACTURERS, AND DISTRIBUTORS

Section 2 of the House bill prohibits the establishment or maintenance of any maximum price which will not reflect to producers, processors, and distributors (including retailers) of the commodity the sum of (1) the current cost of producing and processing and distributing such commodity as determined by the established commercial accounting practices of the industry, and (2) a reasonable profit thereon.

Section 11 of the conference substitute, and a new subsection (t) of section 2 of the Price Control Act added by section 10 of the conference substitute, have been included in lieu of the above House provision and in lieu of two provisions of the Senate amendment which are referred to below.

The provision of the House bill above referred to is not included in the Senate amendment but the Senate amendment does include a provision, section 13, relating to the determination of maximum prices applicable to manufacturers and processors. Subsection (a) of this Senate section provides that no maximum price applicable to any manufacturer or processor shall be established or maintained for any product (defined as hereinafter explained) below the price of such manufacturer or processor for such product during the base period (defined in general, in subsection (b), as the period between October 1 and 15, 1941), increased by an amount equal to the increase in the weighted average of the per-unit costs of a reasonable number of typical manufacturers or processors with respect to such product during the base period; but, if the product as now manufactured has a different size, quality, or other characteristic, with appropriate adjustments for such differences. The provision is to apply only after the procedure of application to, and determination by, the Administrator, as provided in subsection (d), has been followed. The provision is not to apply with respect to any new product which was not manufactured or processed in the base period. In determining costs, all costs were to be included which are considered as such under the established practices of the industry. It is further provided that where per unit advertising expenditures are below those of the calendar year of the base period, unit costs, for the purposes of the section, shall include per unit advertising expenditures at the rate prevailing in the year of the base period.

Subsection (b) of this Senate section, defining the "base period" contains an exception that if in the case of any product there were no prevailing prices in the period between October 1 and 15, 1941, or the prevailing prices were not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions or other causes, the base period shall be the nearest 2-week period in which, in the judgment of the Administrator, the prevailing prices were substantially normal.

Subsection (c) of this Senate section defines the term "product" as any major item, product, or article different in character from other products of the industry and which is separately considered, listed, priced, or dealt with by the industry in the normal course of business.

Subsection (d) of this Senate section authorizes any industry advisory committee to apply to the Administrator for the application to any product of the standard set forth in subsection (a) relating to the allowance of an increase in price equivalent to the increase in the weighted average of per-unit costs. The Administrator is directed within 60 days to determine and announce the increase with respect to which the application is filed. It is provided that in making the determination it shall not be necessary to obtain detailed cost accounting figures for any manufacturer who does not already have such figures or to obtain detailed accounting reports from more than a reasonable number of typical manufacturers and processors, but the Administrator is directed to reach a conclusion promptly from the best evidence available to him. He is directed to exclude from his calculations any manufacturers or processors whose costs by reason of special conditions are completely abnormal.

Subsection (e) of this Senate section provides that when the Administrator has so announced the increase in the weighted average of the per-unit costs for any product, it shall be lawful for any manufacturer or processor to sell such product at the price per unit he charged in the base period, plus the increase per unit so announced, with appropriate adjustments for differences in size, quality, or other characteristics.

Section 11 of the conference substitute is based upon and is similar to the Senate section above described, but the following changes have been made:

(1) The section has been made applicable to maximum prices applicable to producers, in addition to those applicable to manufacturers and processors.

(2) Authority is granted to the Administrator to determine and announce the amount of the increase in per-unit costs in terms of a percentage factor which on a weighted average basis is equal to the increase in per-unit costs.

(3) The provision relating to per-unit advertising expenditures at the rate prevailing in the year of the base period has been eliminated. The conference committee feels that this provision is unnecessary by reason of the fact that reasonable advertising costs would be properly allowable as a cost element without the necessity of specifically so providing.

(4) In the provision relating to the use of a different period when there are no prevailing prices or prices are not generally representative the 2-week period has been changed to a period not exceeding 60 days.

(5) A modification is made with respect to the base period in the case of any product with respect to which a maximum price established by a price schedule was in effect between October 1 and 15, 1941. In that case the base period is to be the 2-week period immediately preceding the date upon which a maximum price so established first became effective with respect to the product; except that the provision relating to the use of a different period, in cases where there were no prevailing prices or where the prevailing prices were not generally representative, will apply.

(6) Modifications have been made in the definition of "product" for the purposes of clarifying such definition and to provide that all styles, models, or other varities of an item or article shall be considered as one product.

(7) A new subsection has been included with respect to the operation of the section in the case of agricultural commodities.

(8) A provision is included providing that if the Administrator fails to make a determination and announcement within the time required the industry advisory committee concerned may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals, and such court is given jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the Administrator to make the determination and announcement within such time, not to exceed 30 days as may be fixed by the court. It is provided that if the Administrator fails to make the determination and announcement within the time fixed no maximum price shall thereafter be applicable with respect to any sale of such product by any seller.

(9) Because of the provisions of section 14 of the conference substitute, specifically applying to maximum prices in the case of products made from cotton or wool, a provision has been included to provide that this section will not apply with respect to any maximum price applicable to manufacturers or producers in the case of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn or wool or wool yarn.

(10) In order to insure that regional advisory committees appropriate for the making of applications under the foregoing provisions may be readily established, there has been included in the conference substitute (sec. 4) an amendment to section 2 (a) of the Price Control Act providing that in administering the provisions of that subsection relating to the establishment of industry advisory committees the Administrator, upon request of a substantial portion of the industry in any region, shall promptly appoint a regional industry advisory committee for such region. It is felt that this will be particularly helpful in the case of agricultural producers.

The Senate amendment (in sec. 9) also contains a provision (not contained in the House bill), adding to section 2 of the Price Control Act a new subsection (t) providing that no maximum price shall be established or maintained for any commodity below a price which will return to distributors, wholesalers, or retailers of such commodity their prewar trade discount or the sum of total current cost of acquisition plus the prewar mark-up, the term "prewar mark-up" being defined as the average mark-up for the period between October 1 and 15, 1941. A modified form of this provision is included in section 10 of the conference substitute, as follows:

(t) No maximum price applicable to any distributor, wholesaler, or retailer, shall be established or maintained for any commodity below a price which will return to such distributor, wholesaler, or retailer with respect to such commodity his January 1, 1946, discount or the sum of (1) total current cost of acquisition plus (2) his January 1, 1946, mark-up. The January 1, 1946, discount or mark-up shall be the percentage discount or percentage mark-up of such distributor, wholesaler, or retailer in effect on January 1, 1946.

In cases where the discount or mark-up prevailing on January 1, 1946, was expressed in a dollars-and-cents amount, such amount would be converted for the purposes of the above provision into a percentage of the prices prevailing on such date.

DECONTROL OF COMMODITIES; PRICE ADJUSTMENTS AND ADMINISTRATION IN CASE OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Both the House bill (by sec. 4) and the Senate amendment (by sec. 3) propose to add after section 1 of the Price Control Act a new section 1A containing declarations of congressional policy regarding termination of price controls and related controls, and prescribing particular standards or requirements with respect to termination of price controls.

Section 3 of the conference substitute adds a new section 1A to the Price Control Act which is similar in some respects to the House section, but is patterned generally on the Senate section. In addition to its decontrol provisions, it relates to price adjustments and price administration in the case of agricultural commodities. The new section 1A added by the conference substitute is explained below.

Objectives.—Subsection (a) of this new section, taken from the Senate amendment, states that the rapid attainment of production equal to the public demand is one of the necessary and urgent objectives for the prevention of inflation and for the achievement of a reasonable stability in the general level of prices and rents, cost of living, and costs of production; that unnecessary or unduly prolonged controls over prices and rents and use of subsidies would be inconsistent with the return to a healthy peacetime economy and would tend to repress and prevent the attainment of the goals stated in the act; and that adequate prices are necessary stimulants to the desired production and the expeditious attainment of said goals. The House bill contained no such provision.

Declaration of decontrol policy.—Subsection (b) of the new section declares the policy of Congress that the Office of Price Administration, and other agencies of the Government, shall use their price, subsidy, and other powers to promote the earliest practicable balance between production and demand in the case of commodities under their control, and that the general control of prices and the use of subsidy powers shall be terminated as rapidly as possible consistent with the policies and purposes set forth in this section and in no event later than June 30, 1947, and that on that date the Office of Price Administration shall be abolished. While the text of this subsection is taken from the Senate amendment, it is similar in substance to the first part of subsection (a) of the new section 1A proposed by the House bill.

Recommendations by the President.—Subsection (c) of the new section, taken from the Senate amendment, provides, in paragraph (1) thereof, that the President shall recommend to the Congress as soon as practicable and in any event on or before January 15, 1947, such further legislation as in his judgment is needed to establish monetary, fiscal, and other policies which are adequate to supplement the control of prices and wages during the balance of the fiscal year 1947, and to insure that general control of prices and wages can be terminated by June 30, 1947, without danger of inflation thereafter. Paragraph (2) of this subsection provides that on or before April 1, 1947, the President shall report to the Congress what, if any, commodities or classes of commodities, including housing accommodations, are in such critically short supply as to necessitate, in his judgment, the continuance of price control or rent control as to them after June 30, 1947, together with his recommendations as to established departments or agencies of the Government which should be charged with the administration of such control. This paragraph is almost identical with the last part of subsection (a) of the section 1A contained in the House bill.

Decontrol in case of nonagricultural commodities.—Subsection (b) of the new section 1A added by the House bill contains two paragraphs, designated (2) and (3), relating to removal of price control in the case of nonagricultural commodities. Paragraph (2) provides that in the case of any such commodity or class of commodities the producers of which are not represented by an industry advisory committee the President shall at least once each month determine whether the production of such commodity or commodities (either singly or in combination) equals or exceeds for the past 12 months, by volume, the production of such commodity or commodities in the period from July 1, 1940 to June 30, 1941. The President is directed, when he makes such a finding, to certify the finding to the Price Administrator, the Price Administrator must, within 10 days, remove price controls. Paragraph (3) relates to the case of a nonagricultural commodity or class thereof in the case of which producers are represented by an industry advisory committee. In such a case the industry advisory committee is directed to make a certification to the Administrator at least once each month as to whether the production of the commodity (either singly or in combination) equals or exceeds for the past 12 months, by volume, the production of such commodity or class of commodities for the period from July 1, 1940, to June 30, 1941. Whenever the committee so certifies, the Price Administrator, within 10 days, shall remove price controls.

The above provisions of the House bill have not been included in the conference substitute.

Subsection (d) of the new section 1A, added by the conference substitute, relates to the decontrol of nonagricultural commodities. These provisions have been taken from the Senate amendment. First, paragraph (1) of this subsection provides for the removal of maximum prices on nonagricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs. The Price Administrator is directed to proceed with the decontrol of these commodities as rapidly as, in his judgment, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect. Maximum prices on all such commodities are to be removed on or before December 31, 1946, and after that date no maximum price may be maintained for any nonagricultural commodity or class of commodities unless the same has been expressly found by the Administrator to be important in relation to business costs or living costs. Paragraph (2) of subsection (d) states a general rule for the removal of maximum prices in the case of nonagricultural commodities, whether or not such commodities are important in relation to business costs or living costs. This rule is that maximum prices shall be promptly removed whenever the supply of a commodity exceeds or is in approximate balance with the demand therefor (including appropriate inventory requirements). Under this subsection, it is the duty of the Administrator to remove maximum prices upon his own initiative when the applicable decontrol standards are satisfied; however, provision is made in the later parts of this section for industry advisory committees to petition the Administrator for decontrol when such committees believe that the applicable decontrol standards have been satisfied and, in case of adverse action by the Administrator upon such a petition, further provision is made for an appeal to an independent Price Decontrol Board which may order the Administrator to remove maximum prices. Paragraph (3) of subsection (d) provides that the Price Administrator, with the advance consent in writing of the Price Decontrol Board, may reestablish maximum prices for a nonagricultural commodiy which has been decontrolled, if the supply of such mommodity is no longer consistent with the applicable decontrol standard. Under the provision of the House bill relating to reestablishment of control, which has not been included in the conference substitute, recontrol was permitted on a finding by the President with respect to unsatisfied domestic demand.

Paragraph (4) of subsection (d) of the Senate section, specifically directing the removal of price controls not later than June 30, 1946, in the case of petroleum, and petroleum products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from petroleum, has not been included in the conference substitute.

Decontrol and other requirements in case of agricultural commodities.—The proposed new section 1A in the House bill, in subsection (b) (4), contains provisions with respect to decontrol in the case of agricultural commodities. The first subparagraph of this paragraph provides that in the case of agricultural commodities the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to make a determination as to whether supply of the commodity is equal to the domestic consumption thereof. When supply is equal to domestic consumption the Secretary is directed to certify that determination to the Price Administrator, and within 10 days the Price Administrator must remove all price ceilings with respect to the commodity. The second subparagraph provides that when the production of any agricultural commodity for the past 12 months equals or exceeds the production of the commodity during the 12 months' period from July 1, 1940, to June 30, 1941, then such fact shall be certified to the Price Administrator by the Secretary of Agriculture, and within 10 days the Price Administrator must remove all price ceilings with respect to the commodity and with respect to all commodities for human consumption derived principally therefrom. These provisions of the House bill have not been included in the conference substitute, but there have been inserted in lieu thereof provisions from the Senate bill explained below.

Subsection (e) of the section in the Senate amendment contains provisions relating to the removal of maximum prices on agricultural commodities, the adjustment of such maximum prices, and other provisions relating to the administration of maximum prices on agricultural commodities. Paragraph (1) of this subsection provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the Price Administrator each agricultural commodity which the Secretary determines to be in short supply. An agricultural commodity will be in short supply for the purposes of this section, unless the supply of such commodity equals or exceeds the requirements for such commodity for the current marketing season. No maximum price may be applicable to any agricultural commodity during any calendar month which begins more than 30 days after the enactment of this section, unless such commodity is certified by the Secretary of Agriculture as being in short supply. Paragraph (2) of subsection (e) provides that whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that maximum prices on any agricultural commodity which is in short supply are impeding the necessary production of such commodity, he may recommend to the Price Administrator such adjustments in such maximum prices as the Secretary determines to be necessary to attain the necessary production of such commodity; and the Price Administrator is required to adjust such maximum prices in accordance with such recommendations. This paragraph (2) also contains a provision relating to the decontrol of agricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs. The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to recommend to the Price Administrator the removal of maximum prices on such commodities as rapidly as, in the judgment of the Secretary, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect, and he is to recommend the removal of maximum prices on all such unimportant commodities by December 31, 1946. The Administrator is required to remove maximum prices in accordance with such recommendations. This provision is comparable to that contained in paragraph (1) of subsection (d) of this section for the removal on or before December 31, 1946, of maximum prices on all unimportant nonagricultural commodities.

Paragraph (3) of this subsection (e) providing that price controls with respect to livestock, poultry, eggs, and milk, and food and feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from livestock, poultry, eggs, or milk, and with respect to leaf tobacco and tobacco products manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom, shall be removed not later than June 30, 1946, has not been included in the conference substitute.

Paragraph (4) of this subsection provides that whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that an agricultural commodity with respect to which maximum prices have been removed is in short supply and that the reestablishment of maximum prices with respect thereto is necessary to effectuate the purposes of the Price Control Act, the Secretary, with the written consent of the Price Decontrol Board, may recommend to the Administrator, the reestablishment of price controls with respect to such commodity, and that the Administrator shall reestablish such controls upon such recommendation. This provision for restoring price controls in the case of an agricultural commodity is applicable in the case of agricultural commodities specifically decontrolled by the provisions of this section as well as in the case af agricultural commodities decontrolled under the general formula in this section or otherwise. As has been hereinbefore explained the provision of the House bill for reestablishment of price control has been omitted from the conference substitute.

Paragraph (5) of this subsection defines the term "agricultural commodity" to mean any agricultural commodity and any food or feed product processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity.

Paragraph (6) of this subsection (e) provides that the Secretary of Agriculture, in exercising his functions under the Emergency Price Control Act, shall not be subject to the direction or control of any other appointive officer or agency in the executive branch of the Government, except to the extent that a review of his decisions by the Price Decontrol Board is provided for in this section. and that no such officer or agency shall undertake to exercise any direction or control over the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to the exercise of such functions. This paragraph also provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may at any time withdraw his approval of any action with respect to which his approval is required under the Emergency Price Control Act, and that upon the withdrawal of his approval such action shall be rescinded. This provision is related to section 3 (e) of the present law, which requires that written approval of the Secretary of Agriculture be obtained for actions taken under the Price Control Act with respect to agricultural commodities and with respect to regulations, orders, price schedules, and other requirements applicable to processors with respect to food or feed products processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from agricultural commodities.

Paragraph (7) of this subsection (e) provides that no maximum price and no regulation or order under the Price Control Act or the Stabilization Act shall be applicable with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any service rendered with respect to any agricultural commodity, unless a regulation or order establishing a maximum price with respect to such commodity had been issued under the Price Control Act prior to April 1, 1946. This provision will not prevent the restoring of maximum prices in the case of a commodity upon which maximum prices had been in effect prior to April 1, 1946, even though maximum prices upon such commodity had been removed and were not in effect on April 1, 1946, nor will it prevent the maintenance of maximum prices upon a commodity if a regulation or order establishing maximum prices upon such commodity had been issued prior to April 1, 1946, even though such regulation or order did not take effect until after that date. On the other hand, the provision will prohibit other types of regulations and orders as well as maximum prices in the case of any agricultural commodity unless a regulation or order had been issued prior to April 1, 1946, establishing a maximum price on such commodity. Thus, in the case of cotton, the recent order relating to margin requirements for futures trading, although not a maximum price regulation or order, will be made inapplicable because maximum prices with respect to cotton were not established prior to April 1, 1946.

Except as stated above, the provisions of subsection (e) of the Senate amendment have been included in the conference substitute, with changes in some paragraph numbers.

Saving provision.—Subsection (f) of the new section 1A, taken from the Senate amendment, provides that nothing in this section shall limit the authority to remove maximum prices at an earlier time than would be required by the section. This provision is similar to subsection (c) in the new section 1A in the House bill, except for its reference to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Petitions for decontrol.—Subsection (g) of this new section, taken from the Senate amendment, provides that the industry advisory committee appointed under the Price Control Act with respect to a commodity may file a petition for the removal of maximum prices on such commodity, if in the judgment of the committee the standards set forth in this section require the removal of maximum prices for such commodity. Such petitions are to be filed with the Price Administrator in the case of nonagricultural commodities and with the Secretary of Agriculture in the case of agricultural commodities. The petition is to state the grounds upon which the committee believes the removal of maximum prices to be required and is to be accompanied by written evidence in support of the petition. The Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture, as the case may be, must act upon the petition within 15 days after it is filed. If the petition is not granted in full, the Administrator or the Secretary, as the case may be, must, upon the request of the industry advisory committee, hold a hearing for the further consideration of the petition, and must within 15 days after the hearing make a decision upon the petition. If the petition is denied in whole or in part, such decision must be accompanied by a written statement of the reasons for denying the petition in whole or in part. If the Administrator or the Secretary has not granted the petition after the hearing, the petitioning industry advisory committee may petition the Price Decontrol Board, established under this section, for a review of the action of the Administrator or the Secretary. The special method which is provided in this section for the consideration of petitions for decontrol made by industry advisory committees does not take away or impair any right of any person subject to a maximum price regulation to protest the continued maintenance of maximum prices in accordance with the regular protest provisions of the Price Control Act.

Price Decontrol Board.—Subsection (h) of the new section, taken from the Senate amendment, establishes a Price Decontrol Board as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government. The Board is to be composed of three members appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. This Board is to have jurisdiction to review decisions of the Price Administrator and the Secretary of Agriculture in cases where those officers have failed or refused to remove price controls upon the petition of industry advisory committees. Upon such review the Board is to order the removal of maximum prices if and to the extent that in its judgment the standards of decontrol stated in subsections (d) and (e) have been satisfied with respect to the commodity involved. Also, as indicated above, price controls may be reestablished with respect to a commodity from which price controls have been removed only if the Price Decontrol Board gives its written consent to reestablishing such controls. This subsection contains provisions giving the Board such authority as is necessary to enable it to perform its functions and prescribing procedure to be followed with respect to petitions made to the Board.

SUBSIDY OPERATIONS

Authorized subsidy operations.—Section 6 of the House bill and section 5 of the Senate amendment contain certain provisions relating to subsidy operations, having for their purpose permitting the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, notwithstanding the prohibition contained in the last paragraph of section 2 (e) of the Price Control Act to carry on subsidy operations (subsidy payments and buying commodities for resale at a loss) within specified limits as to time, commodities, and amounts.

The House provision provides that such subsidy operations for the year ending December 31, 1946 shall be limited as follows (these provisions being subject to other provisions later referred to):

"(2) * * *

"(A) With respect to funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation—

"(i) for the dairy production payment program, $180,000,000: Provided, That in carrying out the dairy production payment program the rate of payment per pound of butterfat delivered shall not be less than 25 per centum of the national weighted average rate of payment per hundred pounds of whole milk delivered;

"(ii) for other noncrop programs, $17,500,000; and

"(iii) for the 1946 crop program operations, $56,000,000:

* * * * *

"(B) With respect to funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—

"(i) for rubber produced in Latin America and Africa for which commitments were made before January 1, 1946, $31,000,000;

"(ii) for materials or commodities produced in the United States as follows:

"Flour, $91,000,000;

"Petroleum and petroleum products, $50,000,000;

"Copper, lead and zinc in the form of premium price payments, $100,000,000;

"(iii) for other materials or commodities, produced in or outside the United States, $59,500,000:"

The comparable provisions of the Senate amendment are as follows:

"Payments and purchases may be made with respect to operations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, which involve subsidies and anticipated losses as follows:

"(1) With respect to rubber produced in Latin America and Africa for which commitments were made before January 1, 1946, $31,000,000.

"(2) With respect to copper, lead, and zinc, in the form of premium price payments, $100,000,000: Provided, That (A) premiums shall be paid on ores mined or removed from mine dumps or tailing piles before July 1, 1947, though shipped and/or processed and marketed subsequently thereto; and that (B) the premium price plan for copper, lead, and zinc shall be extended until June 30, 1947, on terms not less favorable to the producer than heretofore and (i) adjustments shall be made to encourage exploration and development work, (ii) adequate allowances shall be made for depreciation and depletion, and (iii) all classes of premiums shall be noncancelable unless necessary in order to make individual adjustments of income to specific mines.

"(3) With respect to purchases by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, of such tin ores and concentrates as it deems necessary to insure continued operation of the Texas City tin smelter.

"(4) With respect to noncrop programs, 1946 crop program operations and the 1947 crop program operations relating to sugar, flour, petroleum, petroleum products, and other domestic and imported materials and commodities, $969,000,000: Provided, That the operations authorized under this subparagraph (4) shall be progressively reduced, shall be terminated not later than May 1, 1947, and shall not cost more than $629,000,000 during the last six months of the calendar year 1946. Operations shall not be carried out under authority of this subparagraph (4) with respect to any commodity for any period during which maximum prices on such commodity are not in effect under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended. No new subsidy or purchase and sale operations shall be undertaken under the authority of this subparagraph (4), and no change shall be made in the basis of any existing operations for which funds are made available under this subparagraph which will increase the rate of any subsidy or the rate of loss incurred with respect to any commodity."

The provisions included in the conference substitute are the same as those in the Senate amendment except that—

(1) in subsection (a) (4) the sum of $969,000,000 has been changed to $869,000,000;

(2) the provision in subsection (a) (4) providing that operations shall be progressively reduced and shall be terminated not later than May 1, 1947 has been changed by striking out "May 1, 1947" and inserting "April 1, 1947"; and

(3) a proviso has been included that subsidies with respect to petroleum produced from stripper wells may be continued at not to exceed the existing rates, even though maximum prices are not in effect.

The House bill, in the case of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, respectively, permits amounts not needed for any particular purpose to be used for other items, subject to the limitation that not to exceed 10 per centum of any such amount may be so used. No such provisions are contained in the Senate amendment.

Discontinuance of subsidies and related price adjustments.—Section 6 of the House bill also contains the following proviso relating to discontinuance of livestock and meat subsidies, and price adjustments in lieu thereof:

"Provided further, That no funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated to, borrowed under Congressional authorization by, or in custody or control of any governmental agency, including Government-owned or controlled corporations, shall be used after June 30, 1946, to continue any existing program, or to institute any new program for the payment of subsidies on livestock or meat derived from livestock, or for the purchase of such commodities for resale at a loss thereby subsidizing directly or indirectly the production, sale, or distribution of such commodities, except that nothing contained herein shall prevent the payment of obligations created under existing programs which accrued prior to June 30, 1946: And provided further, That in order to prevent a reduction in livestock prices upon the elimination of such livestock and meat subsidy payments, the Administrator shall make corresponding increases in maximum prices of livestock, meat, and meat products to the extent necessary to compensate for the removal of such subsidies."

Section 7 of the House bill, relating to liquidation of subsidy operations in the case of agricultural commodities, and price adjustments in lieu thereof, reads as follows:

"SEC. 7. (a) The Administrator shall make adjustments in maximum prices of agricultural commodities including milk and livestock and products manufactured in whole or substantial part from such commodities in lieu of any payment by the Federal Government of sums of money or losses incurred by any agency of the Government through the purchase and resale at a loss of such commodities or products, and equivalent reductions in subsidy or similar payments shall be made by any such agency authorized to make such purchases and sales at a loss or to make such payments: Provided, That the first such adjustment or adjustments of not less than 25 per centum of the rate of subsidy or similar payments made in the corresponding period of 1945 shall be made not more than 45 days from the effective date hereof and similar adjustments shall be made at intervals of not more than 45 days thereafter: Provided further, That none of the foregoing provisions shall apply to any operations conducted for the purpose of maintaining support prices for agricultural products or payments or losses incurred with respect to domestic sugar beets or sugarcane: And provided further, That nothing contained herein shall be construed to prevent the making of parity payments or soil-conservation payments authorized under existing law or benefits to sugar growers authorized under title III of the Sugar Act of 1937, as amended.

"(b) Modifications shall be made in the maximum prices established for any agricultural commodities and for commodities processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part from agricultural commodities where it appears that the maximum prices established do not reflect all increases in costs to the producers of such agricultural commodities incurred since January 1, 1941, and such modifications or adjustments in the case of milk and its products shall be made on a regional or area basis.

"(c) In no event shall maximum prices of agricultural commodities be established below support prices therefor or below the prices specified in section III of Public Law No. 729 approved October 2, 1942: Provided, That, where minimum prices to producers are regulated under any agreements or orders pursuant to the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to adjust such minimum prices to reflect not less than the adjustments in maximum prices ordered pursuant to the provisions of this section. Except as expressly provided herein, nothing contained in this section shall be construed to repeal, amend, or supersede the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended."

The House provisions above set forth are not included in the conference substitute.

The provisions of the Senate amendment relating to liquidation of subsidies, and to the making of price adjustments by reason of reduction or discontinuance of subsidies are contained in section 5 of the Senate amendment, and are as follows:

"(a) * * *

"(4) With respect to noncrop programs, 1946 crop program operations and the 1947 crop program operations relating to sugar, flour, petroleum, petroleum products, and other domestic and imported materials and commodities, $969,000,000: Provided, That the operations authorized under this subparagraph (4) shall be progressively reduced, shall be terminated not later than May 1, 1947, and shall not cost more than $629,000,000 during the last six months of the calendar year 1946. Operations shall not be carried out under authority of this subparagraph (4) with respect to any commodity for any period during which maximum prices on such commodity are not in effect under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended. No new subsidy or purchase and sale operations shall be undertaken under the authority of this subparagraph (4), and no change shall be made in the basis of any existing operations for which funds are made available under this subparagraph which will increase the rate of any subsidy or the rate of loss incurred with respect to any commodity.

"(b) When any direct or indirect subsidy to an industry is reduced or terminated, any maximum price applicable to the product affected shall be correspondingly increased.

"(c) Where roll-back subsidies have previously been or presently are in effect, and have been discontinued, or shall hereafter be discontinued, the industries which have received such subsidies shall be permitted to increase their ceiling prices at least an amount equivalent to the amount of the discontinued roll-back subsidy. Such price increase shall become effective either upon discontinuance of the roll-back subsidy or upon passage of this Act, whichever date is the later. For the purposes of this paragraph, the term 'roll-back subsidies' means subsidy payments, or purchases and sales of a commodity at a loss by the Government of the United States (including any Government-owned or controlled corporation), or contracts therefor, which resulted directly or indirectly in the lowering of ceiling prices below the maximum price levels established by the Office of Price Administration prior to the institution of the subsidy payments or purchases and sales at a loss, or the execution of the contracts therefor, whichever date is the earlier."

The Senate provisions above referred to have been included in the conference substitute except that—

(1) as hereinbefore explained, the amount of "$869,000,000" has been substituted for "$969,000,000", the date of "May 1, 1947" has been changed to "April 1, 1947," and a proviso relating to petroleum produced from stripper wells has been included; and

(2) subsection (b) has been modified so that it will not be applicable in the case of transportation subsidies and differential subsidies to high-cost producers.

Saving provisions.—In section 7, set forth above, the House bill contains saving provisions with respect to certain types of operations. In the conference substitute these provisions have not been included because they are considered unnecessary: It is intended, and it is believed to be clear, that the provisions relating to subsidy payments and buying for resale at a loss will not limit or affect payments or losses incident to such of the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation as sales of commodities for export at competitive world prices pursuant to section 21 (c) of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, sales of farm commodities for new or byproduct uses pursuant to section 2 of the act of April 12, 1945 (59 Stat. 50), sales of commodities pursuant to section 2 of the act of April 12, 1945 (59 Stat. 50), which have substantially deteriorated in quality, or of nonbasic perishable commodities where there is danger of loss through waste or spoilage, and loans, purchases, or other price support operations which do not involve supporting prices to producers of agricultural commodities at levels above those reflected by price ceilings, or prevent parity payments or soil conservation payments under existing law or benefits under title III of the Sugar Act of 1937.

Section 8 of the House bill contains a provision to make it clear that the limitations imposed with respect to subsidy operations are not to affect the operation of Public Laws 30, 88, and 164 of the 79th Congress, or to apply to purchases by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of such tin ores and concentrates as it deems necessary to insure continued operation of the Texas City tin smelter. The Senate amendment contains provisions having similar legal effect, but adding Public Law 328 to the provisions of law referred to. The conference substitute contains the Senate provisions, with a clarifying change of the word "Act" to "section" in subsection (d).

The Senate amendment, in section 5, includes the following provision:

"(e) Notwithstanding any of the foregoing provisions of this section 6, 1946 and 1947 crop program operations with respect to sugar, may, while maximum prices are in effect with respect to sugar, be continued until such crops are processed and distributed, and the cost of 1946 crop program operations with respect to sugar may be charged to the funds authorized by Public Law 30, Seventy-ninth Congress, as amended by Public Law 328, Seventy-ninth Congress. For the purpose of this section 6, no subsidy program operation on sugar shall be considered to be a new subsidy."

This provision is included in the conference substitute.

The Senate amendment contains a provision to the effect that the limitations imposed with respect to subsidy operations are not to affect the operation of the premium payment provisions of the Veterans' Emergency Housing Act of 1946 (Public Law 388, 79th Cong.). This provision, which was not in the House bill, is included in the conference substitute; with a clarifying change striking out the word "Act" and inserting the word "section."

RENT CEILINGS IN CASE OF HOTELS

Section 5 of the House bill adds a new paragraph to section 2 (b) of the Price Control Act authorizing the Administrator, when establishing rent ceilings on hotels or when passing upon applications for adjustment of rent ceilings thereon, to take into consideration the distinction between transient hotels and residential or apartment hotels, including the difference in investment, operation, expenses, and mechanical details of operation. The Senate amendment (sec. 4) contains this same provision, but there is added a requirement that the Administrator classify separately by regulation (1) transient hotels, (2) residential and apartment hotels, and (3) tourist courts, rooming houses, and boarding houses. This provision, with the Senate modification has been included in the conference substitute, as section 5.

FISH AND SEA-FOOD COMMODITIES

Section 6 of the Senate amendment amends section 2 (i) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, which now provides that no maximum price shall be established for any fishery commodity below the average price of such commodity in the year 1942. Under the proposed amendment, this subsection will provide that for the purposes of the Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act, fish and other sea foods shall be deemed to be agricultural commodities, and commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from fish or other sea foods shall be deemed to be manufactured in whole or substantial part from agricultural commodities. However, instead of making applicable to fish and other sea foods the provisions of section 3 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, which establishes for agricultural commodities pricing standards based on parity or the highest price prevailing between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942, the amendment provides that the maximum price for any fish or sea food commodity or for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part therefrom shall not be below the average price therefor in the year 1942. The amendment will have the effect of making applicable to fish and other sea foods the provisions of section 3 (e) of the Price Control Act relating to securing the written approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, and will also have the effect of making applicable to fish and other sea foods the decontrol standards which are provided for agricultural commodities. There is no corresponding provision in the House bill. This provision is retained in the conference substitute.

LIMITING QUANTITY OF PRODUCTS SOLD TO ANY BUYER

Section 7 of the Senate amendment adds to section 2 (j) of the Price Control Act a provision to the effect that nothing in such Act shall be construed as authorizing any regulation or order of the Administrator to fix a quantity or percentage of any product which any seller may sell to any buyer. This provision would have the effect of discontinuing and prohibiting such limitations as that contained in Maximum Price Regulation 602, which provides that a manufacturer of nylon hosiery may not distribute a larger percentage of his product to wholesale outlets than he did in the base year, 1941. There is no corresponding provision in the House bill. This provision is retained in the conference substitute.

HIGHEST PRICE LINE IN SERVICE ESTABLISHMENTS

Section 8 of the Senate amendment amends section 2 (k) of the Price Control Act so as to make applicable with respect to service establishments the provisions of that subsection which provide that no seller of goods at retail shall be required to limit his sales with reference to any highest price line offered for sale by him at any prior time. There is no corresponding provision in the House bill. This provision is retained in the conference substitute with clerical changes.

SUBSECTIONS ADDED TO SECTION 2 OF THE PRICE CONTROL ACT

Section 9 of the House bill, section 9 of the Senate amendment, and section 10 of the conference substitute, respectively, add several new subsections at the end of section 2 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942.

Certain new commodities.—Section 9 of the House bill adds a new subsection (o) which provides that no maximum price shall be established or maintained with respect to any new commodity the use of which, in the production, manufacturing, or processing of any commodity or commodities, without increasing the cost to the ultimate user, either increases the life or reduces the cost of production, manufacture, or processing of the commodity or commodities produced, manufactured, or processed. The term "new commodity" is defined to mean a commodity which was not commercially or industrially available prior to January 30, 1942. No corresponding provision is included in the Senate amendment. This provision is retained in the conference substitute as subsection (u), with an amendment which provides that the exemption provided for in this subsection is to apply only when the Price Administrator upon application finds that the standards prescribed in the subsection are met.

Control of certain items in restaurants.—The new subsection (o) which is added by the Senate amendment provides that no maximum price shall be applicable to any item served in any restaurant or other eating establishment if such item consists in whole or major part of a commodity which is not under price control with respect to sales to such restaurant or other eating establishment, unless the maximum price of such item, when sold by such restaurant or other eating establishment, is determined by the addition of a customary margin to the acquisition cost of such item. There is no corresponding provision in the House bill. This subsection is included in the conference substitute.

Maximum average price plan.—The new subsection (p) which is added by this section of the bill is the same in the House bill, in the Senate amendment, and in the conference substitute. This subsection provides that no maximum price regulation or order shall be issued or continued in effect requiring any seller to limit his sales by any weighted average price limitation based on his previous sales. This provision will have the effect of eliminating the maximum average price plan under which manufacturers subject to it are restrained from delivering for sale in any quarter goods averaging in price more than the weighted average price of the goods which he delivered for sale in a corresponding previous quarter.

Discounts in certain retail industries.—The House bill adds a new subsection (q) which provides that the Administrator shall not reduce established retail trade discounts or dealer handling charges in the case of certain commodities whose production was discontinued or restricted during the war. This restriction would apply in the case of any retail industry whose principal sales during the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, consisted of sales of a commodity or commodities whose production or retail distribution was reduced for a period of 3 years beginning on or after March 2, 1942, by 75 percent or more below such production or retail distribution for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive, as a result of the operation of any governmental regulation or restriction. The restriction contained in this subsection would no longer apply after the retail unit sales of an affected commodity for a period of 6 months have reached the average annual retail unit sales thereof for the calendar years 1939 to 1941, inclusive. The Senate amendment makes a clarifying change to indicate that the established discounts which must be preserved are the normal peacetime discounts and not those which are in effect upon the enactment of the act, and also makes the provision applicable with respect to goods priced on a mark-up basis as well as goods priced on a discount basis. This provision is included in the conference substitute with the changes made by the Senate amendment.

Discounts for certain wholesale industries.—The new subsection (r) which is added by this section of the House bill makes the same kind of provision, except as to dealer handling charges, for wholesalers dealing in the commodities described above in subsection (q) as that subsection makes for retailers dealing in such commodities. This subsection in the conference substitute is the same as the corresponding provision of the House bill except for some clerical changes which are made in the Senate amendment.

Discounts for certain commodities.—The Senate amendment adds a new subsection (s) which provides that no maximum price regulation or order shall require the reduction of the established peacetime discounts or mark-ups for the sale of any manufactured or processed commodity if the retail, wholesale, or other distributive trade selling such commodity shows that the commodity constituted approximately one-half or more of the gross sales income of a majority of the persons engaged in such trade in 1945 and that, in the first quarter of 1946, the deliveries of such commodity to such distributive trade were less than the deliveries thereof in the corresponding quarter of 1945. For the purposes of this subsection, all commodities in a line of related commodities which, for the purpose of establishing manufacturers' and processors' maximum prices, have been placed under a single regulation are to be treated as a single commodity. The effect of this provision is to require that dealers in farm implements and farm machinery, or in any other commodities to which the subsection may be applicable, be given maximum prices which will allow them the same discounts or mark-ups which they enjoyed during peacetime. There is no corresponding provision in the House bill. This provision is included in the conference substitute.

Distributor discounts and mark-ups.—The new subsection (t), based upon a provision in the Senate amendment and included in the conference substitute, is discussed earlier in this statement in connection with pricing standards applying to producers, manufacturers, and processors.

ENFORCEMENT AMENDMENTS

Section 10 of the Senate amendment relates to the enforcement provisions of section 205 (e) of the act. Subsection (a) prevents the cumulation of the Administrator's claims, except for three times the actual overcharges, where he brings a treble damage action based on overcharges to a number of buyers. Under the present law, the Administrator might sue a grocer for $5,000 because of 100 overcharges of 10 cents each to 100 different buyers. Under the amendment the maximum recovery in that lawsuit would be $50. Had the overcharges been 20 cents each, the maximum recovery would be three times the overcharges or $60.

This subsection also provides that if the defendant in a treble damage action proves that his violation was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against its occurrence, the damages assessed shall be the amount of the overcharge. The effect of the amendment is to eliminate in such cases the $25 minimum prescribed by the present law.

Subsection (b) forbids the Administrator from instituting or maintaining an action if (1) the violation arose because the seller acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the Administrator or any regional administrator or district director of the Office of Price Administration or (2) if the violation arose out of a sale to an agency of the Federal Government or to any public housing authority supervised or financed by such an agency if the sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

The last paragraph of this subsection is designed to forbid the institution or maintenance of an action by the Administrator in a situation like that which has arisen in the work-glove industry. The amendment forbids enforcement action where the Administrator determines (1) that the violation consisted of an apparel manufacturer's selling an item at his published March 1942 price list prices instead of his March 1942 delivered prices, and (2) that his customary pricing patterns for related apparel items would be distorted by a requirement that his ceilings be the March 1942 delivered prices.

Section 11 of the Senate amendment amends section 205 (f) of the Emergency Price Control Act, relating to suspensions for violations of the Act. The amendment made by this section provides that no suspension of a license shall be ordered or directed if the person charged with the violation proves that the violation in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take proper precautions against the occurrence of the violation.

The House bill does not include any provisions corresponding to sections 10 and 11 of the Senate amendment. These provisions are included in the conference substitute as sections 12 and 13.

PRODUCTS MADE FROM COTTON AND WOOL

Section 10 of the House bill adds a new paragraph to section 3 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended. This paragraph relates to maximum prices applicable to manufacturers or processors of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn or wool or wool yarn. Under existing law the price standards established in the law must be applied separately to each major item in the case of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn. This amendment makes it clear that when the current cost of cotton is higher than parity, the current cost must be used in applying such price standards separately to each major item. The amendment also specifies that as to each such major item there shall be added to the cotton cost the weighted average of mill conversion costs and a reasonable profit. This amendment also provides that the pricing standards applicable to major items made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn under this paragraph shall also be applicable to major items made in whole or major part from wool or wool yarn. The Senate amendment includes this provision of the House bill and adds to it a provision defining the reasonable profit as not less than a weighted average profit for each unit of the item in question equal to the weighted average of the profit earned on an equivalent unit of such item during the period 1939 to 1941, both inclusive. This provision is included in the conference substitute with this change made by the Senate amendment.

RELIEF OF FEED SHORTAGES

Section 14 of the Senate amendment provides that the Secretary of Agriculture or other governmental agency having control of supplies of grain or feedstuffs for shipment overseas is authorized and directed to make such diversions of such supplies as he shall deem necessary to relieve feed shortages in domestic areas where an emergency condition exists with respect to animal and poultry feed. The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized under the Senate amendment to replace such diverted supplies by further purchases for foreign shipment. No corresponding provision is included in the House bill. The conference substitute includes this provision in a modified form as section 15, which provides that the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Commodity Credit Corporation or otherwise, is authorized to allocate feed which he controls to feeders of livestock and poultry in domestic areas which he determines to be in an emergency shortage condition with respect to animal and poultry feed.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASES OF WHEAT

Section 16 of the Senate amendment provides that when producers of wheat are required by the Government, pursuant to the Second War Powers Act of 1942, as amended, to sell all or any part of the wheat delivered to an elevator prior to April 1, 1947, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall offer to purchase the wheat which the producers are required to sell. The purchase price to be paid by such corporation in these cases is to be the market price at the point of delivery as of any date the producer may elect between the date of delivery and March 31, 1947. The producer may not elect a date which has occurred prior to the time he makes his election. In this manner the producer is given an opportunity to decide whether or not he wishes to retain the right to profit from any increases which may occur in the market price of wheat before April 1, 1947; but, if he does so, he must assume the risk of loss which will result from any decrease in the market price of wheat prior to such date. Subsection (b) of this section of the Senate amendment in effect makes the provision described above retroactive until May 24, 1946, when the Government's present wheat purchase program was put into effect. Producers who have sold their wheat under that program prior to the date the provisions above described takes effect may, by returning or paying to the Commodity Credit Corporation the sum which they received for their wheat when it was sold, place themselves in the same position as if the provisions of subsection (a) of this section had been in effect at the time when the wheat was sold. There is no provision in the House bill corresponding to this section of the Senate amendment. The section is included in the conference substitute.

MISCELLANEOUS

Section 17 of the conference substitute contains a short title for the act.

Section 18 of the conference substitute provides that in cases where the provisions of the act require the Administrator to make or permit changes in maximum prices, the Administrator shall have a period of 30 days from the date of enactment of the act to comply with such requirements.

BRENT SPENCE,
PAUL BROWN,
WRIGHT PATMAN,
WM. B. BARRY,
JESSE P. WOLCOTT,
RALPH A. GAMBLE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. SPENCE (interrupting the reading of the statement). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the statement be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I object.

(The Clerk continued reading the statement.)

Mr. SPENCE (interrupting the reading of the statement). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the statement be dispensed with, that it be printed in the RECORD at this point, and that time for debate be extended 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have had no chance to read either the conference report or the statement. I object to the request. I think the statement should be read.

(The Clerk continued reading the statement.)

Miss SUMNER of Illinois (interrupting the reading of the statement). Mr. Speaker, I am willing to withdraw my objection on the understanding that there be 30 minutes additional time for debate. I ask unanimous consent that the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] be permitted to go through.

The SPEAKER. There is no particular request pending before the House at the present time.

Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to submit a request?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that further reading of the statement be dispensed with, that it be printed in the RECORD at this point, and that time for debate be extended 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

(The Clerk continued reading the statement.)

Mr. WOLCOTT rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate be continued one-half hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am a believer in effective price control. I introduced the bill to continue the Price Control and Stabilization Acts without amendment. I believe in spite of all the criticisms that have been leveled against the Office of Price Administration, and regardless of the many inequities that have existed, it has saved the economy of the Nation. I believe if we take off price controls—and one does not have to be an economist to be convinced of this—there will be an indescribable disaster befall the people of America. We went into conference endeavoring to obtain a bill that would carry out the purposes of the Price Control and Stabilization Acts. This is the best act we could obtain. This act will in a general way continue to control all prices until supply and demand get in equilibrium. I think the longer we continue price control and the more the opportunity exists for supply and demand to equalize, the greater opportunity we have to avoid disaster. We know what has occurred. The great productive activity of America was converted to manufacture instruments of war. Men have had large wages. They have accumulated purchasing power, and there has been no consumers' goods on which to expend it. Now, turn this power loose and I think you are experimenting with an economic atomic bomb. I would think twice and consider prayerfully before I would vote down this conference report, because if we have no price control, in my honest opinion, we have nothing. If we have nothing, what a train of evils is going to follow. Labor is wise. Labor knows what its purchasing power is. Labor is not asking for dollars. Labor is asking for purchasing power. Labor will know what happens if the lid is off, and labor will make demands for a purchasing power to which they will be entitled.

We have done the very best we could in bringing a bill here that I think will meet the exigencies of the occasion as far as they can be met. It may not meet with the entire approval of any of the conferees, but it certainly was a happy culmination of the whole matter when many times it looked as though we could not come to any conclusion. I am confident there will be no great injustices done if this bill is enacted into law. You have talked about decontrol, and I think we all want decontrol when decontrol can safely be administered. Certainly decontrol is not a legislative matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONRONEY). The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two additional minutes.

Decontrol is essentially administrative. The Senate took out of control livestock and livestock products; it took out of control poultry and eggs, milk, dairy products, petroleum and petroleum products, and tobacco. Some of those things, petroleum and petroleum products, and tobacco will automatically be decontrolled because the supply and demand are now in balance, and in the case of tobacco the Secretary of Agriculture would be compelled to find it was in short supply before he could issue an order placing it under control, and it is obviously not in short supply and he would not issue such an order for its control. The essential food, feed, and fiber of the American people will remain under control until the supply comes in balance with the demand. When this takes place we need have no apprehension of disastrous inflation. I sincerely hope and I confidently trust that the conference report will be agreed to.

I am not going into detail in regard to the conference report, but I want my colleagues to take the broad view as to what might happen if they vote this down. I firmly believe that if you vote this conference report down you are going to have no price control.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I think we can all agree that the Congress has had rather a difficult time with this price control extension bill. Our objective when we started out was to compel adjustments in maximum prices sufficient to get full production, but under control. That objective has been maintained in the bill so that the policies and principles and objectives which we sought originally will have been effectuated when this bill becomes law and operative. For that reason anyone who voted for the price-control bill in the House on final passage can vote for this conference report with full assurance that the principles for which he fought at that time, the policies with which he was in accord at that time, have been in principle preserved in the conference report.

I am inclined to think that in many particulars the conferees agreed upon language which was more effective than that in either the House or the Senate bills. We met for three full days and late into last night, breaking up about 12 o'clock after we had finally agreed on this conference report.

I think, to be realistic about it, that it is this conference report or nothing. I do not believe this House is in any temper, I do not think this Congress is in any temper, to continue price control as it exists today by a simple continuing resolution. We have preserved the principle of price control, we have put the responsibility for price control where it belongs and yet we have established certain standards, established certain formulas, which should assure full production by all producers.

I know that there is in the minds of many the question: Why did not the conferees agree to specific controls on meat, poultry, dairy products, petroleum, and tobacco?

It can be said that one of the principal reasons why we insisted there be no specific decontrols was that the machinery had been set up under this bill for decontrols under certain standards applicable to all commodities, including those which I have mentioned and which are listed specifically in the Senate bill.

We have provided that prices will reflect the increase in production costs from the October 1 to 15, 1941, base. That is carried through not only on the price to the producer but also on the price which the distributor and retailer may charge, in principle the House language. Within the last 2 weeks the Office of Price Administration has put into effect that formula. So there is not any question at all but that they can work that out. They have put it into effect on 61 different items in the last 2 weeks. In other words, the OPA has increased the price of 61 commodities during the last 2 weeks to absorb increases in production costs. That is what this formula provides.

The only controversy between OPA and the Congress in that particular is whether OPA shall be forced to do the things which it says it is going to do anyway.

In respect to agricultural commodities, we have decontrolled the OPA in that respect. The OPA will have only token control over agricultural commodities from now on. The Secretary of Agriculture, who will operate under the terms of the bill independently of any other officer or agency of the Government, is given control over the prices to be maintained on all food commodities, all agricultural commodities, and is given broad powers in respect to decontrol of all agricultural commodities. So that, in effect, Clinton Anderson, Secretary of Agriculture, can within 10 days after this bill becomes law effectively decontrol meat or livestock or dairy products or poultry or all other food commodities.

He may make recommendations to the Office of Price Administration when agricultural commodities are in short supply as to price adjustments which must be made to get full production, and if the Office of Price Administration does not act in accordance with those recommendations within 10 days the adjustments suggested, the recommended modifications, automatically become operative. Each month he must make up a list of the agricultural commodities that are in short supply and price controls on all other articles which are not included on the list of short-supply articles are automatically decontrolled. Even though they are in short supply he can make recommendations for price adjustments, as I have said, and the Office of Price Administration must within 10 days follow that recommendation or the adjusted prices automatically prevail.

Let me say further that we have set up in this bill a decontrol board to make sure that the standards under which the Administration of OPA and the Secretary of Agriculture must operate in respect to decontrols are followed and any aggrieved person claiming that the Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture has not complied with the standards set up can petition this decontrol board, which must act expeditiously. The board is given quasi-judicial and quasi-administrative powers. So that if it finds that the standards have not been complied with and that the Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture, as the case may be, has not decontrolled, then the board has the administrative authority to decontrol the article, notwithstanding any other action which the Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture may take.

Taking those three things into consideration, the fact that we almost automatically increase the price of all goods sufficiently to absorb the increase in production costs, coupled with the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture can, on his own initiative, in effect decontrol any agricultural commodity in 10 days' time or adjust the price of any agricultural commodity to get full production, and that we have set up this board to make sure that these standards have been complied with, make unnecessary any provision in the law specifically decontrolling any particular commodity. We put the responsibility for decontrols and price controls squarely on the Administrator and the Secretary of Agriculture, who must function in compliance with very specific and understandable standards.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I take the opportunity at this time to read a telegram which Mr. Philip Murray, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, has just sent to several Members of Congress, and which has been read to me over the telephone:

On behalf of the CIO I urge you and all friends of price control to vote down the conference report for the OPA bill which will not control prices but in effect legalize inflation. Instead, I urge passage of concurrent resolution extending price control for 1 year. We do not want the American people fooled by an amendment called price control which will not do the job. Only by extending price control and vigorous enforcement can the living standards of all Americans be maintained.

Mr. Speaker, the bill as it comes out of conference is not a price-control bill but a bill to legalize inflation. Examination of the amendments to the present act agreed to by the conference committee leaves no doubt of this.

1. COST ABSORPTION

By the adoption of the amendment requiring prices to be fixed to include increased costs all along the line in the manufacture and distribution of any commodity, this bill will produce a continuous spiral of higher prices to which no end can be seen.

2. MAXIMUM AVERAGE PRICE

By the abolition of the maximum average price regulation and with the present demand for textiles, all low-cost clothing will disappear and manufacturers will divert all material to the high-price lines.

3. AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Although there is no specific decontrol on June 30 of meat, poultry, and dairy products, through transfer of authority to the Department of Agriculture, for price increases and decontrol of agricultural products, the conference report opens the way for every big packer and processor to exert pressure on the Secretary of Agriculture for higher prices by withholding farm commodities from the market.

4. DECONTROL BOARD

By setting up a separate decontrol board, a new avenue is established for future relaxation of controls and higher prices. There is serious question whether such a decontrol board will be able to cope with the administrative task required of it.

The major industries in the country have just closed labor contracts based on the assumption that the present level of the cost of living would be maintained. The passage of this bill will result in either great hardship on the people or in the revision of all wage agreements arrived at after great disturbance of the national economy.

This bill flouts the will of the American people. The polls have run 10–1 for effective price control. Passage of this bill in the name of continued price control would deceive the people for only a short time. I refuse to share responsibility for the inflation that will be ushered in by this bill.

It will now be argued as an excuse for surrender that this bill is better than nothing. This is worse than nothing; it is unconditional surrender to inflation and to powerful, selfish interests. There is a way out of this dilemma. This Congress can pass a simple resolution extending OPA for another year. We have ample precedent for such action. Once before we were up against a similar predicament when President Roosevelt vetoed another OPA bill which, like this one, legalized inflation. Then, too, we were told to either agree to surrender or have no legislation. However, Roosevelt fought back in defense of the consumers. He vetoed the surrender. Immediately Congress passed a continuing resolution extending the life of price controls. Why cannot this be done now? Vote down this betrayal of the American people and pass a resolution extending the life of price controls. We will be told that Congress will not do it. That remains to be seen. I venture that after the American people talk to Congress following the rejection of this bill, that such a resolution will pass. If you vote for this bill now, you preclude this opportunity for real price control. If Congress refuses, then those who refuse to vote for such a resolution will have to assume the responsibility. I shall discharge mine by voting in favor of such a resolution. I refuse to accept the alternative to such a course, abject and unconditional surrender, by voting for the adoption of this conference report. Within 4 months, America will be thrown into the most violent inflation as a result of this legislation. Therefore, I refuse to vote for it. I shall not cast my vote to ruin the economy of the Nation, to permit the robbery of the hard-earned dollars of Americans simply because you tell me that Congress will not do its duty and extend price controls for another year.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Is there any provision in there for any chance to end OPA? It seems to me there is no termination date. It looks like a permanent OPA. They can come back any time they want to and slap it on again.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I will answer that later.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think this report pleases anyone in every particular. I am satisfied that if you want any control you must vote for this conference report. I am satisfied there are many who do not want any kind of control. I am satisfied there are many who want much stronger control, but we were limited to the provisions of the House and Senate bills. I hope I can show you before I take my seat that the conference report speaks only the present law, but the present law has not been carried out. I am satisfied if you vote down this conference report you will not be able to get anything. The other body practically destroyed the bill by decontrolling nearly all food products. When you take off food you might just as well take everything off. If we are going to have any control it must be on food, rents, and clothing, but food comes first.

Now what? The amendment known as the Taft-Wolcott amendment has been the law all the time, because every man in all kinds of business is entitled to the profit he made in peacetime. That is all there is to it. He will only be given the increased cost, not increased profit, under this amendment. Who within the sound of my voice will challenge the fairness of this statement? You should not oppose this amendment, because it was the intent of the law all the time, but this is the first time we have spelled it out in the bill. That is all some of you oppose. Some are opposed to the committee report because we did not agree with the other body in taking control off of practically all foods. We have created an independent decontrol board to do this, based on certain standards as a yardstick for all those commodities and everything else.

As I understand, the situation in the other body was as follows: Many wanted to take price control off beef. Other Members said if you take price control off beef we must take it off pork. Some said if you take it off pork we must take it off lamb. Others said if you take it off lamb we will take it off poultry, and if you take it off poultry we must take it off everything, including milk, butter, and everything else. So you can well see the fallacy of not having standards but singling out one commodity to be decontrolled, and how far reaching it would be without an independent decontrol board, which, in the final analysis, meant no price control on practically all foods, regardless of merit. The decontrol board, I am satisfied, will take control off of some food commodities, as well as other commodities, when a proper case is made to the board, and I take it as nonsense to decontrol any commodity unless it complies with the fair standards of decontrol we have set up in the bill.

I take the position that the conference report has not changed the fundamental law. We have written into the bill language to show the OPA that they must carry out what was the original intention of Congress.

This bill is workable. Yes; some commodities may be higher, but what everybody wants is that full production will not be hampered and will be secured as soon as possible. You know that without controls in the days following World War I your dollar went down to less than 40 cents in value. Today it is around 70 percent. The OPA officials sometime ago said, "We hope to hold the purchasing power of the dollar to 60 cents." I think this can be done under the bill agreed to by the conferees; but, if you take all controls off, the people are going to bid against each other so much on scarce commodities that the public will have to pay two or three times more than such commodities are worth. I say it is a workable bill. It is the only bill we are going to be able to get. All the conferees know this. Now, are we going to be so foolish as to vote this down because we are not getting what we want. May I say to the extremists who do not want any control under any circumstances, and to the extremists who want no change in the present law, that the position of both groups means no control on any commodities the production of which is greatly below the demand. The position of both groups is untenable.

The conferees of both the House and Senate were limited to the provisions of the bill as passed by both bodies, and we have done the very best we could. Let me state to both groups—those who believe in no control and those wanting everything in the present law—that it is impossible to carry out your wishes, and I am satisfied unless the conference report is adopted both groups will regret it, and we will have no way to prevent people bidding against each other on all the necessary commodities which are so short of demand in the present emergency. When production is not short of demand, all controls will be taken off. I beg you to vote for the conference report under all these circumstances.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, this particular compromise now placed before us in my opinion is far better than either the House or Senate bill. Anyone who voted for the OPA extension bill as it passed the House originally should certainly vote for this, assuming he or she seeks to keep a check rein on prices. Naturally, it will not satisfy a great many people. However, if you do not support it, in my humble judgment you are just taking a great big gamble with the future of the Nation, because you cannot tell what will result. You will most probably, as was indicated by both the gentleman from Michigan and the distinguished chairman of our committee, end up with no price control at all—not even over rents and food—or you might end up with a simple continuing resolution which will give you the same kind of badly administered, slow, and inefficient price control that we have had for many months past.

The votes against the conference report will come from those who have extremely stern or extreme views on one side of the question or the other. If it is defeated, it will be defeated by votes representing two minorities at the opposite poles. The people who hold those two views, for their own safety, had better get together with the conferees and try to adopt this solution which does give great promise of working with at least some degree of success and not take the risk of subjecting themselves to the will of the minority seeking to impose the opposite extreme. That would not be good for the Nation nor would it be an easy thing to explain to their constituents.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Anybody who votes for the British loan cannot pretend he is against inflation.

Mr. KUNKEL. I am discussing the conference report on the OPA. I want to see an effective and intelligent OPA. This proposal goes too far in many respects, in my judgment. But it does keep a check rein. It offers good possibilities.

In voting for the conference report, whether you like it or not, it is at least a known quantity. If you vote it down, you are voting for an absolutely unknown quantity. You cannot foresee what will occur. I urge its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BUFFETT].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUFFETT. I yield to the gentlewoman.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Do you think anybody who cannot see any connection between the British loan and the OPA ought to be listened to for his advice on how to stop inflation?

Mr. BUFFETT. I think, if the Members of the House will look up the testimony of Mr. Bernard Baruch and Mr. John Small on the extension of the OPA, they will get the answer as to how the British loan will prolong OPA controls. Mr. Speaker, this bill as it stands is another attempt to continue hoodwinking the people of this country on the issuance of deficit dollars that cause inflation.

However, I think this House is missing another great fact that is confronting us—that is, the fact that the farmers of America have lost confidence in the integrity of their Government.

That is the great fact confronting us. Until that confidence is reestablished we are going to see this problem of food get worse and worse.

A wise man once said, "You cannot go to work tomorrow morning on yesterday morning's breakfast." The answer to the food problem in this country is in the hands of the farmers who produce the food.

But they have lost all confidence in the management of the affairs of this Government as they relate to agriculture. Unless the farmers produce and bring in the food, you will not get it, and the Members from the big cities should recognize that fact.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUFFETT. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. How do you think supply is ever going to equal demand with forty billion of foreign money coming into this country to wipe the shelves clean?

Mr. BUFFETT. Obviously, supply is not going to meet demand when they expect the American farmer to supply the demands of the world in exchange for a deteriorating currency of limited use value.

Out through all the producing regions, corn is being bartered, wheat is being bartered. The normal sale of those products has almost stopped.

In the Omaha grain exchange in the last month there has not been a single car of wheat or corn come up for sale in the normal fashion. New Deal "planned corruption" is rampant. If wheat does not roll into the elevators during harvest time, you can look for a shortage this fall or winter that will be devastating. But do not blame the farmers. The blame belongs here in Washington. This House should face the fact now that nonperishable farm products are not coming to market normally until constructive action is taken to restore the confidence of the farmers in the Government.

I believe that confidence can be regained by making a genuine start on decontrol—by taking controls off of meat.

Then the corruption and thievery and underground operations going on now in the meat industry will end. Unless something like that is done to restore the confidence of the farm population the food situation is going to deteriorate to the point of disaster and crisis. That disaster is almost guaranteed by the conference report. When it comes, it should be considered a prearranged crisis, and the responsibility for the tragedy belongs to the Truman administration. Let that fact be understood now.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if the American people believe this measure will give them relief from the tyrannical impositions of the OPA, they will soon be disillusioned. God help us save America.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this conference report will mean a continuation of a controlled economy in peacetime, just one more step for America down the road toward state socialism. This bill will not hold down prices, stop the inflationary trend, or give our people the bread, meat, and clothing for which they cry.

I predict the President will sign this bill, and it will become law, although I shall vote against it. I further predict that Chester Bowles will soon resign, regardless of the fate of OPA or price control. Both have served their purpose well to give him the publicity springboard he desired to become a candidate for high political office. I join Mr. Bowles in his prediction of "boom and bust." His "boom" as a candidate for political office is now on. The "bust" for both Chester's candidacy and the administration's attempt to control our national economy will come next November—on the first Tuesday after the first Monday.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RABIN].

Mr. RABIN. Mr. Speaker, I have always advocated a strong OPA. Until supply meets the demand there is no other way to prevent inflation. When the original OPA extension bill came before this session I opposed all amendments that would limit OPA controls. I voted for the bill, however, in the hope that the Senate would send back a better bill. That the Senate failed to do. I am sorry that it did not.

The provisions of the conference report on which we are now voting will not prevent inflation. It will insure it. I am constrained to vote against it. I cannot accept the statement that it is the better of the two evils or that it is the best that we can get. Congress can do better if it wishes to do it. This bill does nothing. We should vote it down and extend OPA in an effective manner.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, on April 16 last I imposed myself upon the House with an address describing the corruption then existing in the livestock industry. No statement made by me upon that occasion has been contradicted. It was a statement of the truth. I regret at this time to have to state to the House that the situation is infinitely worse today than it was on April 16.

We speak about decontrolling meats. Mr. Speaker, they are already decontrolled. At least 80 percent of the beef, the mutton, the pork, the veal, the lamb purchased by our housewives is purchased in an open, competitive black market.

I communicated with the stockyards at Chicago yesterday morning, and found that, despite the statement of Mr. Bowles, the farmers were holding back the shipment of their stock; that there were 10,000 cattle in the yards Monday morning at Chicago, and yet the 3 largest buyers could only buy 18 head. One week before that, a week ago Monday, there were 7,500 head of cattle in those yards, and 6,500 of them were shipped out alive over the horizon. Nobody knows. Armour did not get one, neither did Wilson, for the simple reason that they could not compete with the bids of the black marketeers on live animals. Everybody in the industry knows that plants are closing down all over the country. I am assured by the gentleman from Michigan and by the gentleman from Georgia that this bill as reported by the conferees gives power to the Secretary of Agriculture to decontrol livestock and meats and that if he does not do it the decontrol board may do it. From the bottom of my heart I hope one or the other has the courage to do it; otherwise we shall live in a welter of corruption and hypocrisy which rivals the days of prohibition.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, referring to the remarks of the gentleman from New York who preceded me as to the scarcity of cattle in the livestock markets, today's Washington News carries a picture on the front page of a lone steer in the stockyards. Being a stockman all my life and living among cattle, and having won a judging contest before I was 20 years old, when I look at this steer I see "he" is a heifer, and a sad, long-faced heifer at that. About this picture, this heifer had some time or other had a calf, maybe two, which makes her in the market grade as a heiferette, actually a scrub cow.

That is the kind of stock in the stockyards; that is the kind of stock the packer gets. Her scrubby horns, her long face, hard lines, and large muzzle indicate that she is over 4 years old and has had a hard life.

As far as the farmers' withholding their livestock is concerned, it is just not true. Ten thousand head were in the Chicago yards yesterday morning. That was a fair sum, an average day for late June. You have no right to expect more cattle. That was normal; but they did not get into the legitimate market.

More cattle in trucks are traveling over the highways than ever, mostly black market.

Swift & Co. daily purchases around 700 head. Yesterday they got eight head of cattle.

It just gets down to this, that you are not going to have a supply of legitimate food until you get rid of these controls. Production and more production is the only safeguard against inflation and the answer to nearly all of the world's problems. This is impossible under OPA.

The very same fellows who are handling this thing some time ago—referring to the Secretary of Agriculture from New Mexico—one of those fellows down there trying to sell me on an irrigation project some time ago showed me a picture of a plain with sagebrush and with a large beautiful mountain in the background. Then he picked up another picture and said, "This is the same scene 15 years later," and the fruit trees had grown so high on the plain that you could not see the mighty mountain. Those are the kind of fellows that are handling this, and the farmers get the blame. I am reminded of the following by Edwin Markham:

Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
Upon his hoe and gazes on the ground,
The emptiness of ages in his face,
And on his back the burden of the world.
Who made him dead to rapture and despair,
A thing that grieves not and that never hopes,
Stolid and stunned, a brother to the ox?
Who loosened and let down this brutal jaw?
Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?
Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?
O masters, lords and rulers in all lands,
How will the Future reckon with this Man?
How answer his brute question in that hour
When whirlwinds of rebellion shake the world?
How will it be with kingdoms and with kings—
With those who shaped him to the thing he is—
When this dumb Terror shall reply to God,
After the silence of the centuries.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, this conference report has some merit. For instance, it provides that all agricultural products are turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture. This is in line with a bill introduced by me 3 years ago. My bill was approved by the Republicans and by many Democrats. The chairman of the Agriculture Committee of the House, Mr. FULMER, who was a distinguished Democrat, approved it and the Agriculture Committee of the House recommended the passage of a bill introduced by Mr. FULMER after I had introduced my bill. The Fulmer bill was very similar to my bill. My bill and the Fulmer bill were positive and provided positively for the transfer of all food products over to the Secretary of Agriculture. We have repeatedly, on this floor and in speeches all over the country, demanded that instead of permitting a half dozen different agencies to handle food prices that all foods be put under one agency. While they say that this conference report will put all food under one agency in the Department of Agriculture, still it is not done in a positive way. The Secretary will be compelled to report to Mr. Bowles or his successor. Why should not all food be put under the Department of Agriculture? Why restrict him with some other control? When we amended the OPA legislation 2 years ago we gave Mr. Anderson enough authority that would have enabled him to control the food prices, but he was fearful and he was afraid to assert himself. He probably will do the same thing again.

If Bowles is retained and if Anderson must refer matters to Bowles, I am afraid that Bowles and his wrecking crew will continue to ride over the American food producers and food distributors, as he has been so shamefully doing for years.

Mr. Speaker, this proposed legislation is wrong in another respect. What else is wrong with this piece of legislation? My good friend the distinguished Member from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] painted a very vivid picture to you a few minutes ago. He told you of the critical conditions that obtain today. Mr. Speaker, this bill does nothing today. This bill will not bring meat today; it will not bring bread today; it will not bring butter today. It is all in the future. Whatever it proposes to do is to be done upon the passing of several other contingencies. As the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] said, the law already provides that these things can be done. But they have not been done because of the weakness of the administration. Mr. Speaker, how in the name of common sense can Bowles and Porter and their gang defend their efforts as top men in controlling our food supplies when this very day, right here in Washington and in all parts of the country, long lines of people are trying to get a loaf of bread, and when the papers, in flaming headlines, tell us that there is not a pound of meat in the city? And how can we defend ourselves by voting for a lot of promises?. Mr. Speaker, we want bread now; we want meat now.

Under this legislation they say we are going to appoint a control board of three members. Who will they be? And how are they going to do any decontrolling? Are they going to be under the control of Chester Bowles? If we judge the future by the past, we will have to conclude they will be. This board, as I understand it, cannot do anything initially.

Any powers that it may have must be invoked by the action of someone who has been aggrieved. Why do we not set up a decontrol board and give it power to decontrol upon its own initiative?

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if the Secretary of Agriculture cannot make a final decision he will be just another official rattling around over the country. And if the decontrol board can do no decontrolling except when someone initiates a proceeding, all Bowles has to do is to continue to scare the people into submission. This is not right. Let us do something that will bring results.

We have a rather strange situation presented here this afternoon. From the remarks already made it is evident that some of the Members will vote against the approval of the conference report for some reasons and other Members will vote for entirely different reasons. Some would like to see Chester Bowles and his gang continue in power without let or hindrance in any respect. Others would repeal OPA completely, root and branch. Personally, I think that control should be continued over rents in large cities and congested areas. I think it would not be wise to raise all control on sugar and products which might be bound up in treaty agreements made by the State Department. I think, however, these could all be handled by transferring them to appropriate agencies of the Government which have for a long time been in existence and which agencies are permanent in their nature.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH].

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of a strong OPA and while this bill is not as strong as I would like to see it, nevertheless I shall vote for the conference report. I do it with this thought in mind, that I and everyone else here knows that unless we accept the conference report we will not have any OPA after June 30. There are two schools of thought—so-called—who intend to vote against this conference report. Both of them are seeking to defeat OPA. One of those schools of thought is composed of Members who are actually opposed to OPA's further continuance and who openly state so. The other school of thought is composed of those who claim to be for a strong OPA and, because they are not able to obtain every last provision, are willing to scuttle the whole ship. I, for one, shall not vote to scuttle the OPA today in the vain and visionary hope that by some ledgerdemain an OPA bill will again come forth in the remaining few days before June 30 and price controls will be continued. I do not believe that there is a possibility of extending an unamended OPA bill by resolution. If we cannot get a better bill than the present one through the House and Senate, we certainly cannot get through a resolution that would extend the OPA in its present strength.

The Members of the House, especially those of us who come from the large cities, have been under pressure from certain groups, who are neither Democrats nor Republicans, to vote against this conference report and to vote for a continuance to June 30, 1947, only in the event that OPA is extended in its present form—in other words, without amendments and on a take it or leave it basis. The people who are urging that course upon us are not in their hearts for OPA. They are for confusion worse confounded; they are for discord and chaos; as a result of which they hope to spread their foreign ideologies. They pretend to be for price control—actually they want to see inflation; they want to see privation; they want to see the value of the dollar grow less; in short, they want to confuse and distress the people of our community. I know whereof I speak. I hope that my colleagues who come from consumer districts as I do will not fall into the trap.

I call attention to my colleagues on the Democratic side and especially from New York that we belong to the majority party, that it is our responsibility to pass legislation for the interests of the people, and that we cannot take the position, which some have in mind to take, of letting OPA die because the legislation is not altogether to our liking. As the dominant political party we cannot permit OPA to die. We should not follow the plan that you and I know does not come from Democratic sources and which advocates voting against OPA and letting it die and giving it a fraudulent death certificate. If we do that we might just as well abandon the idea of Democratic leadership and accept the leadership of those who want to cause chaos and confusion, of those who want to spread disorder and discontent, of those who to advance the interests of their own political and economic ideologies would permit the removal of rent ceilings and would permit the spiraling of prices—all under the guise of being advocates of price control.

There are things in this conference report, as I have said, which I do not approve, but I certainly am not going to take the position that I am 100 percent right in everything that I advocate insofar as OPA is concerned, and that I shall not take one thing less than the 100 percent that I demand. That does not go or tend for good legislation. If I cannot get all that I think should be had in the bill, then I certainly would be most foolish to reject the bill entirely if it gave me any considerable part of what I want and it certainly gives us, under the conference report, ceilings on foodstuffs and ceilings on rents, and that is what the people of my district need; that is what they want and that is what I am going to vote for.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST].

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I shall support this conference report. In doing so I wish to make it clear that I do not believe it will meet adequately the challenge of terrific inflationary pressures.

Under the circumstances, however, it is rather obvious that we must choose between this report and the very likely possibility of no control at all.

Many of those who want to abandon completely the battle against inflation and many others who wish tighter controls will no doubt oppose this report.

But if it should be voted down, then the chances are about 100 to 1 that we shall have no control after midnight Sunday.

In the fight against inflation I stand today where I stood in 1942 when I supported the original Gore bill for over-all price controls.

Those of us who have battled consistently for effective price control, properly administered, cannot help but fear there will be some rather sharp increases under the provisions of the pending conference report.

But without the bill before us, the situation would be worse. I shall, therefore, support the report brought back to the House by the conferees.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to express what I believe is a widely shared appreciation for the work of the House conferees on this bill. By their diligent and conscientious labors they have brought to the House a better bill than either of the bills passed earlier.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POWELL].

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not meet the desires of consumer organizations and Mr. Murray, president of the CIO. I am voting against this conference report. This is not OPA. This is a hoax being perpetrated upon the little man. Under this there will be no controls. This is pure inflation masquerading under the hypocrisy of OPA. There is not one bit of OPA left in this. Even the so-called ceilings to be maintained on food are taken out of OPA's hands and given to the Secretary of Agriculture. Anyone who votes for this bill is voting against the people and voting in favor of big interests, big corporations, big money, and big people.

This bill is an attempt to hoodwink the consumer. No one in his right mind who can read or write can differ from that conclusion.

It is now up to the President of the United States to veto this bill just as he vetoed the Case bill. The Case bill was supposed to be a labor bill but the public knew it was antilabor; this bill is supposed to be an OPA bill but it is anti-OPA, anti-consumer, anti-hold the line, anti-low prices—it is pure inflation.

From now on, unless the President vetoes it, there will be a runaway. By the time election rolls around the value of the dollar will be cut in half. The only way to stop inflation now is for the President to veto this bill and force the House and the Senate to pass a resolution continuing OPA in its present form with present controls.

I voted against every crippling amendment when this bill first came up weeks ago and I am voting against this now because this is the cripple.

Because Congress has not the courage to do the right thing, I refuse to do the wrong.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the conference report should be rejected. The bill is unworkable. It adds confusion to confusion and chaos. In reading the bill, it does seem that someone in the OPA had a fine opportunity to write the conference report.

The Decontrol Board, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, is set up to handle industrial commodities. The Decontrol Board may act when a petition is presented to the Board under rules and regulations prescribed by the Board. The industry advisory committees are appointed under the law by the OPA. Many of these committees are no longer in existence. Members have resigned. The OPA seldom calls upon these committees for advice. It then follows that many segments of industry would have no access or means of presenting a petition to the Decontrol Board. If all advisory committees were functioning, the Decontrol Board would need thousands of individuals to hear their complaints. The Board would be so swamped with requests for price adjustments that it would be impossible for the Board to function within the time prescribed in the bill.

I oppose the bill also because meat and agricultural products are not decontrolled. The conference report sets up a greatly complicated method of decontrolling agricultural commodities. I do approve of the section of the bill which transfers to the Secretary of Agriculture the complete control of agricultural products. The Secretary of Agriculture must determine when the supply is equal to the demand. In my judgment the Secretary of Agriculture is no longer free to make his own honest opinion, he is merely a pawn in the hands of the CIO and other radicals in this administration. He is without a spine. In the question of meat, how would the Secretary of Agriculture determine how much meat was available to the consumer during any month or year since the black market has been in operation? The black market started in 1942.

The bill sets up a yardstick placing the years of June 30, 1940, to July 1, 1941, as a standard representing agricultural products. In the matter of milk, there is more milk produced now than in 1941. There is less butter produced now and the supply is diminishing because of OPA regulations. I am wondering if the bill would direct the Secretary of Agriculture to decontrol milk because more is produced now than in the years 1940–41. He can still say agricultural products are in short supply.

The question of meat is highly complicated. Would the Secretary of Agriculture decontrol meat on the basis of the number of cattle in the country or the amount of meat in the wholesale or retail trade?

The bill as written is entirely unworkable and would cause a revolt among the farmers and food processors handling agricultural products. The bill should be recommitted with instructions to strike from the bill all meat, dairy, and agricultural products.

The past history of the OPA is such that regardless of the type of law that Congress might pass, they proceed to interpret the law to suit their convenience. The OPA should be entirely abolished along with subsidies on consumer foods, and the American farmer and industry should be given a free hand to produce. Just as long as we keep the heavy heel of the OPA upon the neck of industry and the farmer, there will be continued difficulties in adjusting our economic problems.

I would also point out, Mr. Speaker, that in section 15 of the bill, it states:

> That the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Commodity Credit Corporation, or otherwise, is hereby authorized to allocate feed, which he controls, to feeders of livestock and poultry in domestic areas, which he may determine to be an emergency shortage condition with respect to animal and poultry feed.

Mr. Speaker, this is the first step of seizing not only all agricultural products but all meat and everything produced by the farmer. He will be told what and when to plant, and where and when to sell. He will have nothing to say about how he shall conduct his business. This is a form of economic slavery unmatched except in Russia. This bill must be sent back to conference.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may desire to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that there is no termination date on this, and that if they do not choose to be controlled this bill will go on and on and will not come back to Congress? In fact, it is a permanent OPA.

Mr. SPENCE. The act itself will expire on June 30, 1947. It is a 1-year extension.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may desire to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. DOUGLAS].

Mrs. DOUGLAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I have worked and fought for the continuance of the OPA. I believe in price control. I believe that to abandon price control at this time will be as disastrous to our economy as the atomic bomb was to Hiroshima.

I have spoken and pled for price control in meetings all over the country. As late as yesterday on a national hook-up, I urged the continuance of price control, but I cannot vote for a measure which according to the testimony given before the Senate committee and the Banking and Currency Committee of the House by Chester Bowles and Paul Porter, has amendments which leave nothing but the title OPA to protect the American people.

I do not consider that voting for this bill will give the American people a half loaf instead of a whole loaf, which is the argument of those in favor of the conference report. What the American people are being handed in this bill is a half loaf of illusion. Now you see it. Now you do not.

This bill is a control of the price controllers so that they cannot control prices.

This bill is an invitation to the mad marathon of inflation.

By the adoption of the cost absorption amendment alone requiring prices to be fixed to include increased costs all along the line in the manufacture and distribution of any commodity, this bill will produce a continuous spiral of higher prices so that no businessman will know from day to day what his costs are going to be.

I cannot insult the intelligence of the American people by voting for this bill.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER].

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, we are today faced with a dilemma created when the House acted on the OPA extension bill several weeks ago. When we adopted several crippling amendments at that time we all but destroyed effective price control.

Today the sad results of that victory of special-interest groups is before us again. From the conference committee we have received a measure all too similar to the one which passed this House. The so-called Taft amendment is particularly dangerous.

But I do not particularly blame the conferees for the inadequate and dangerous bill which is in front of us. They had to deal with the various amendments which had passed the House and Senate. I believe they have given us the best bill they could construct from the mass of inflationary amendments which were in front of them.

I shall very reluctantly vote for this bill. Any other action today would simply mean that there was no bill on which the President could take action.

Should the President see fit to veto the bill and challenge the House to pass a sound price-control measure, I think he would be doing the people a real service.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, were it not for the fact that defeat of the conference report would end rent control on existing buildings, I would vote against it because all other OPA controls have brought the country nothing but high prices, black markets, and scarcities. I vote for the report with much reluctance.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, this country is facing a deplorable situation in handling and marketing of livestock and meat products. In the early stages of the war the OPA seemed to exercise complete control of the meat products of this country—the Government control of the country's meat supply at the present time is an absolute failure—and must be changed and corrected.

Mr. Speaker, a telegram has just been placed in my hand from the management of one of the finest packing plants in Idaho—a business concern in which the people of Idaho take especial pride—this telegram indicates that there is a complete break-down in Government control of the livestock marketing and meat-packing industry which is submitted for the information of the Members of the House:

NAMPA, IDAHO, June 26, 1946.

COMPTON I. WHITE,
House Office Building.

REPRESENTATIVE WHITE: Closed our plant Friday due to fact cannot buy cattle at legal ceilings prescribed by OPA. Present control program has been abolished and ceilings on live cattle a failure. Certainly must urge you to consider voting for taking meats out from price control.

MARSHALL ANDERSON,
Kings Packing Co., Inc.
NAMPA, IDAHO.

Mr. Speaker, I know that with over twenty-nine billions of currency in circulation and millions of new money being placed in circulation every day—I know that if we are to maintain a stable national economy and protect the consumer, price controls are necessary, but, Mr. Speaker, I shall vote, if given an opportunity, to remove the control on marketing of livestock and meat and packing-house products. This bill should be recommitted and price controls on livestock and meat products removed.

Mr. Speaker, realizing the inflated condition of the currency—and the disastrous effect on business if all price controls are removed—I shall vote for the conference report.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, my choice here is a very difficult one. I am a believer in strong price controls—really effective controls. This conference report does not offer such controls. It is price control legislation in name only. To vote against it, I know I aline myself with those who do not want any controls whatsoever. Yet I cannot bring myself to vote for a bill which would have no effect at all. It would continue the OPA it is true, but it would be so hamstrung that it could not operate effectively. I believe that if we vote this conference report down, the Republicans and those who have been so vigorously opposing price controls will not wish to assume the onus and responsibility of killing price controls altogether. They will agree to a simple resolution extending the Price Control Act, at least until a new and better act can be worked out. Those opponents of price control do not want the American people to know of their opposition to controls, but would seek to delude them by passing the compromise bill under discussion, retaining only the name "price control." I will not be a party to such tactics.

I repel the company I now find myself in, but I must vote against this bill and trust that a better bill will result if the conference report is voted down.

Mr. RAYFIEL. Mr. Speaker, the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Price Control Act has submitted recommendations which make virtually impossible of enforcement its few remaining controls. By them the law will be stripped of the effective weapons which have prevented inflation and saved our national economy.

While I am mindful of the most urgent necessity of price controls, particularly with regard to articles and services which are in short supply, I feel that the conference report will give to the people of the Nation an act which will be so barren of all practical value that I cannot conscientiously support it.

Mr. KELLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have always supported price control, with the firm conviction that if properly administered it would prevent, or at least restrain, the forces of inflation. This bill, as it comes from conference, will not do that, and I cannot support it. The bill is a sham and a pretense, to deceive the American people who are looking to the Congress to safeguard them from rising living costs and excessive prices in this transition period. The Congress can do that by enacting sound, workable price-control legislation.

The conferees' bill would encourage inflation and delay full production at a time when just the opposite is needed. There is not a person in this country who will not feel the effects of unchecked inflation; and if the Congress enacts this legislation, it is going to have to answer to everyone for the disastrous conditions which will inevitably result.

Price control is ruined.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the conference report on H. R. 6042 falls far short of the requirement for satisfactory price-control legislation. I opposed the crippling amendments which were adopted in the House several weeks ago. The enemies of price control have succeeded in weakening this legislation to such an extent that prices are certain to rise on some commodities.

Speaker RAYBURN, Majority Leader MCCORMACK, and the chairman of the committee, Congressman SPENCE, have each declared on the floor of the House this afternoon that if this conference report is not adopted our country will be without any price-control legislation. The Speaker was very emphatic in stating that a continuing resolution of the present price-control law would not be adopted by the Senate.

In order to retain some protection for the consumers of this country, especially as to rents and other essentials still embodied in this bill, I am going to cast my vote for the conference report.

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, when the extension of price control was before the House originally I voted against the amendments which I thought were crippling. I then voted to send the bill to the Senate notwithstanding the fact that those amendments were still in the bill as it passed the House.

I stated then that I would vote against the bill on final passage unless the Senate produced a better bill than that which passed the House. I do not think the Senate bill, nor the result of the conference report, is, to any appreciable extent, superior to the bill as it passed the House.

Therefore, I have voted against the conference report. It will not control prices—only provide jobs for people in the OPA. As for rent control, you cannot let everything the landlord buys for his personal use or for the maintenance of his property rise 50 percent without increasing rents. So that is a poor excuse to support the conference report.

The administration owed a duty to put through effective price control. It has failed in that duty. I will not, by my vote, condone that failure or assist in the perpetration of a fraud—price control in name only.

Mrs. MANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is pretty much of a farce. We have inflation already but it has been controlled to some extent. This measure takes off practically all restraint and I believe will precipitate a disastrous rise in prices.

While it offers little hope for controlling inflation, I voted for it as it was this or nothing, but in my opinion we are now headed inevitably for a postwar period that will be a case of boom and bust.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, the time has come when Congress must deal with the realities of life. We are either to provide legislation which will furnish the people with vital foods through legal channels, or we are forcing them to go into the black market and buy meat, poultry, and dairy products at inflationary prices. I urge that this conference report be returned to the conference committee for the purpose of decontrolling meat, poultry, and dairy products. This is the only manner in which these vital foods can be taken away from the black market and restored to legitimate production, marketing, and distribution channels at reasonable prices to the people.

As matters now stand, 90 percent of all meat has passed into black-market channels, and shortly, if present policies are continued, poultry, eggs, and dairy products will follow suit.

I am interested in the consumers of America who demand meat, dairy, and poultry products at reasonable prices from legitimate dealers. As I see it, the continuation of the policies of Chester Bowles, who has paid lip service to abundant production, but who has in fact put into operation policies to drastically curtail production, will cause the black market to flourish under legal OPA maladministration. The people do not want to eat statistical meat or dairy products. They want red meat, butter, and milk. We have the opportunity to legislate for the consumers today, and I therefore again urge that the conference report be returned to the conference committee for further consideration.

I definitely know that the conference committee can write provisions into the law which will continue price control but at the same time direct the initiation of policies by the Administration which will encourage production and stop inflation. Abundant production is the only remedy to stop inflation, and Congress must speak for the people to reach such an objective before it is too late.

I voted for the price-control bill when it came up in the House, and it was my hope that the Senate would have concurred in the House amendments, but this was not done. I feel that there is a need for the right kind of a price-control law to curb inflation. Had the original price-control law been properly administered by Chester Bowles the tragic situation confronting the country in its food crisis would not have taken place. Mr. Bowles did not administer the law in accordance with the intent of Congress. He disregarded the law and, as I see it, purposely created scarcities of vital products as an excuse to remain in power for the purpose of controlling the lives and business of every American citizen. No one man, whether it be Chester Bowles or any other individual, is big enough to direct or control the destiny of our economic system. Therefore, it is up to Congress to write a law that will restore production, which is the only remedy to stop inflation.

I do not know what the final vote will be on the conference report, but I do want to say this: My single purpose in voting to send the conference report back to the committee is to give that committee an opportunity to rewrite its report and to make clear that Congress means what it says when it insists on the initiation of policies to bring about full production of all foods and civilian goods. Of course, should Mr. Bowles resign, the President may give the Secretary of Agriculture sufficient power under the report to realistically deal with the food crisis, and if this is done I am satisfied that we can secure a return to full production without the need for many amendments to the present price-control law. We are legislating today against maladministration, and not against the original Price Control Act as written by Congress.

Mr. KELLY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago, in Washington, at the Mayflower Hotel, the Director of Economic Stabilization, Chester Bowles, speaking before 1,000 women of the District of Columbia, stated and declared:

If Congress compromises the OPA out of authority and power, no matter how hard we try—

Meaning the agency of Price Control—

we can't keep down disastrous inflation.

Do we not know we have it now, in the black market?

Pointing out that Washington is packed with lobbyists determined to get what they can and destroy OPA, "come what may." Seems that the voice of the American people can be heard only dimly here, since it is drowned out by special interest groups.

Has it come to the point in life where it is a sin for a citizen to fight for his right—and probably un-American to try and stay in business, according to Mr. Bowles' statement?

The only lobbyists I have seen around here are people whose promotion of activities comes from and is augmented by the OPA.

Honest business people, who have to come to Washington seeking redress of right, in order that they may remain in business, have no right to protest against the methods that are being used by this and other agencies that are constantly stifling business, according to Mr. Bowles.

In a speech of the 21st day of June 1945, I said that the maladministration of the OPA was causing the black-market operations in the meat industry.

And I cited a specific case of slaughters on that day, whereby the nonprocessing slaughterer was actually losing $10.95 on every head of cattle he slaughtered that was graded A–1 beef. That condition has been the cause of many reputable packing plants having to almost suspend their operations. Many of them now are holding on in hopes that some level-headed action may be taken before all the legitimate packers are forced to close completely.

What little operation is in process today is for the purpose of keeping their forces together. For the matter of profits is not the principal concern with these people today. The difficulties are the loss of long-established business, due to pitifully light livestock slaughter, volume lost to thousands of black-market operators and some new, unscrupulous slaughterers who are nothing more than opportunists, many of whom do not even apply for subsidies.

This practice of operations has caused the loss of important byproducts, such as hearts, livers, tongues, bones, fats, grease, and animal glands that are so badly needed for pharmaceutical purposes.

Yes, even the hides are buried in the ground, for a black-market operator cannot market the hide, because he knows the marketing of these byproducts will disclose his illegitimate business. These byproducts, which are so essential to the people—for we shall wake up some one of these days with a terrific shortage of leather—and no shoes or leather goods.

Unemployment is constantly on the increase in the packing districts all over this Nation. Because of the slow-down in operations, the average worker does not get a full week's time, which, naturally, reduces his take-home money. And the stockyard worker cannot get employment with the black-market slaughterer, because he operates outside of cities.

I have heard many employees claim that the packers are purposely curtailing operations to break unions. That is a false impression, because legitimate slaughterers have to comply with OPA and War Food Administration regulations and cannot compete with the black-market operator, because they are paying up to fifty or seventy-five cents per hundredweight alive more for cattle and livestock than the legitimate slaughterer can pay, thus putting them over OPA live compliance regulations.

This practice is well known by these governmental agencies, for they have been told about it many times, yet nothing ever happens.

We now have a black market in meat. Notwithstanding near-record livestock numbers on ranches and farms, we have an acute shortage of meat in most large consumer centers, brought about by the black-market maldistribution. These unscrupulous operators are now charging for inferior meat all the consumer will pay to get it.

It is as certain as you and I are here assembled that consumers will not pay legitimate operators as much per pound, with meat in abundance.

Most of us are familiar with the methods used by the distributors in the purchase of this meat. The consumer goes to the market to make a purchase and unless she is well known to the butcher, as an old customer, she is told, "Sorry, we have no meat today." Or, if it is on display, she is told that it has all been sold, or has been ordered by customers early in the morning, or she may be told to go around to the back door, and there she will get her meat from an out-of-the-pocket transaction.

The butcher, while not a criminal, has also taken advantage of a serious situation, and he is out to get his share of the profits. The consumer, anxious to acquire meat for the family, pays more than she should.

We doubt whether any group of men can devise a system of price control for this complex industry and its multitudinous products which would not create a black market. However, we do not need to argue this point.

The Office of Price Administration, by its price policy, has created a black market which cannot now be corrected by a mere revision of livestock or meat prices. It, together with the War Food Administration, has been apparent that profit control, rather than price control, has been the principal objective of both these agencies of government.

In the face of indisputable evidence that its policy was and is forcing legitimate meat packers out of business and otherwise dislocating the supply of livestock and meat, these two agencies have stubbornly and persistently refused to abandon its theory that as long as the over-all profits of the industry, before taxes, were as large as such profits in the year of 1939, then individual meat prices were "generally fair and equitable."

The Office of Price Administration was fully aware that there were included in these over-all earnings large income wholly unrelated to the domestic meat business, such as foreign earnings, earnings from fertilizers, mineral cleansing powders, sports and athletic equipment, vegetable oils, soaps, acids, pharmaceutical products, butter, cheese, ice cream, poultry, eggs, and other products, none of which accrue to hundreds of meat packing companies who, therefore, must choose between bankruptcy, closing down, curtailing operations, or entering the black market.

I have a case now before the War Food Administration that clearly explains black-market operations and shows that this agency is helping the black-market operators, not any individual in particular, but because of a new order to curtail the slaughter of livestock, known as War Food Order 75.7 Livestock Slaughter Restriction.

And here again a Government agency is now curtailing production of food, while other agencies of the Government are preaching from the mountain tops for more production—that we must have food—food to feed a starving world—but what they are actually doing is destroying legitimate business.

Yet, in issuing War Food Order 75.7, the OPA not only curtails legitimate slaughterers of swine, but helps promote a most serious situation which is developing in the hog market and pork business, and unless the causes thereof are removed promptly an increasingly large percentage of the hog and pork business also will be black market. Many pork packers already are forced to operate at only a small percent of the normal production and in some areas have ceased all pork operations.

We who went through the bootlegging era know the disrespect for law and order, and how cheaply life was held by unscrupulous individuals. Well, a new field of get-rich-quick has sprung up overnight, only this new adventure is dealing with the most needed product of today—food.

Bootlegging and black marketing are twin brothers. The consumers of our Nation no longer feel that they are under a patriotic obligation to observe unnecessary wartime restrictions.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I have voted for extension of the Price Control Act each time it has been before us Two months ago I voted against most of the amendments adopted by this House because I believed they went too far and would serve to destroy price control rather than to improve its effectiveness, which is what I want and what I believe the country wants and needs.

There is plenty to support the position that it would be better to abolish the OPA entirely than to have it continue in the same impractical and unrealistic fashion as so often in the past. However, I believe it would be still better for our whole economy if we can get the OPA to operate more flexibly in order to get maximum production and thus be able to discontinue price control gradually as supply approaches demand.

This bill agreed on in conference has a good chance of achieving that end. It is better than last year's law or than either the bill passed by the Senate or the one passed by us. It does not change the basic philosophy or purposes of the original Price Control Act which prescribed that prices be fair and equitable. It sets up a mechanism to require that OPA operate according to that act wherever it has not done so hitherto.

When the administration bought off the steel strike by raising the price of steel $5 a ton, one of the top OPA price executives said to a friend of mine, "There goes the last chance of effective price control." He was right in the sense that there was no longer any chance of holding the old line which had been kept remarkably stable for almost 3 years. Our problem and OPA's immediately became one of trying to establish and hold the new price line made necessary by the wage break-through engineered by the administration.

Our objective always has been and is to get those price adjustments necessary to effect maximum production, but no more. That is where legitimate costs have gone up 10 percent, we know prices must go up accordingly or the manufacturer will stop producing the commodity—but we do not want the prices to go up 15 percent or 30 percent or 50 percent as might very well happen for a time if this conference report is voted down and we have no price control at all.

I believe that extension of the OPA operating along these lines is necessary if we are to win the fight against runaway inflation. This bill, if faithfully administered, should enable us to reconvert to a genuinely free economy with a minimum of shock and hardship to all concerned. Therefore, I hope the report will be adopted.

Mr. HEALY. Mr. Speaker, preventing further increases in the cost of living for the American people is one of the most important problems before the Congress. Since becoming a Member of Congress I have fought for a strong OPA. When the original bill came before the House of Representatives I voted against every amendment designed to permit price increases. I know that the people of the Thirteenth District in Los Angeles want me to continue my fight against inflation.

Mr. Speaker, this emasculated OPA bill which is before us today is going to make it impossible for prices to be kept at their present level. This bill is an invitation to economic disaster. I cannot vote for such a bill. By a simple joint resolution Congress can extend an effective OPA.

This is supposed to be a measure to control prices, to prevent further inflation. Last April this House effectively took most of that purpose out of the bill; this measure will complete the job. Under it, prices will increase rather than stand still—and when that happens no act of Congress can, or should, prevent the workingman from demanding a comparable increase in his income. By passage of this bill we will have encouraged a new wave of labor unrest and strikes.

Should this bill pass, I predict that by September or October of this year the American people will already be feeling the full pinch of inflation.

Certainly OPA is crippled—it has been badly crippled by the forces who have put profits ahead of their country. But the passage of this bill will not help that cripple—it will take away its last crutch. I urge the defeat of this bill. We should then pass a bill giving the OPA authority to hold the line on prices.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I intend no reflection upon the conferees in saying that I shall vote for the conference report with great reluctance. While an improvement over the Senate bill, the bill reported by the conference will not enable the OPA to deal effectively with the pressures bearing down upon the price structure. A general price increase is now inevitable. In spite of this, I shall support the conference report because it is the only alernative offering even a semblance of control. It is the conference bill or no legislation at all, and I am unwilling to share responsibility for complete abandonment of controls.

I have consistently supported the price-control program and in spite of its irritations I have insisted that OPA should be retained until inflation threats disappear.

In my opinion the Banking Committee reported an acceptable bill and I regretted that the House adopted a series of weakening amendments. I supported the amended bill, however, in the hope that further investigations would result in an improved measure in the Senate and in conference.

Today we must choose between the conference bill and death for OPA, for obviously a simple extension of the law will not be possible.

How great the increase in living costs will be under this bill is not ascertainable. It will be substantial but if all interests will think less of the price factor and work together for full production we can come through with no grave consequences. It will require more than half-hearted cooperation, however, and we can keep ahead of the inflation evil only by an all-out production program.

The outcome will be determined not so much by administrative efficiency in the executive agencies as by the spirit in which everyone accepts the new policies and works without interruption for the kind of production that will destroy inflation dangers.

PRICE CONTROL A MYTH AND A TRAP

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, just as surely as one and one make two, an unusual volume of money in circulation and a below-normal production of merchandise brings inflation; an increase in prices and higher living costs.

During the war, the production of goods used by civilians, the construction of homes and other buildings, was to a large degree of necessity suspended. Thus was created a Nation-wide scarcity of those items.

The necessity of the speedy construction of buildings for the use of the armed forces; the urgent demand for the immediate production of munitions of war, including vehicles of all kinds, planes and ships, forced the employment at unusually high wages of millions of workers in war industries; thus withdrawing them from the production of goods ordinarily needed and purchased by a civilian population and, at the same time, placing in the hands of the workers an unprecedented volume of purchasing power, created largely either directly or indirectly out of Federal appropriations obtained through the selling of war bonds.

The shipping of millions of tons of food, clothing, supplies of all kinds, to our own men abroad and to our allies but increased the scarcity of things ordinarily supplied to and used by a people and which is inevitable in every war.

Germany surrendered on May 6, 1945; Japan, the following August. Our country should then immediately have turned its attention, directed its energy, toward the solution of its domestic problems; the restoration of its domestic economy, a speedy reconversion of its productive machinery from the war effort to the supplying of our own people with the merchandise for which they had so long waited and which they had ample funds to buy.

Unfortunately, the administration, to obtain the political support of labor politicians and, it thought, of the members of some unions, issued the absurd statement that wages could be increased 24 percent without increasing the price of the manufactured product.

Due to the appropriation by the Federal Government of billions of dollars, not only for the war but, since the fighting ended, for this, that, and the other purpose, which funds it had obtained through the selling of bonds—borrowed money—there is now in the hands of would-be purchasers cash spending power of more than two hundred and twenty-five billions—more than three times as much as there was in 1939 and, in addition, more than $100,000,000,000 of Government security available for cash borrowing.

The volume of money now in circulation is almost five times what it ever was at any previous period in our history.

That fact, coupled with the loss of production due to strikes and the senseless regulations of OPA which have prevented production, are sufficient to give us runaway inflation.

To make the situation worse, the administration and the internationalists insist upon increasing the scarcity, upon diminishing the supply of available merchandise of all kinds, by shipping abroad millions of feet of building material; millions of tons of food and clothing; millions of tons and billions of dollars' worth of machinery—thus giving us an ever greater scarcity of the essentials of life, of those things which we must have if the cost of living is to go down.

The administration and its political allies, the labor politicians, are not content to permit our productive machinery to function normally. They insist upon increasing wages. They demand that the price of the articles upon which they work be held down, even though every item going into the cost is increased.

They demand that the life of OPA continue. They ignore the fact—wilfully ignore the fact—that, although the fighting ended in Germany on May 6, 1945, and Japan surrendered on August 14, 1945, and, although, since that time, OPA has exercised arbitrary power over the production, transportation, and distribution of food, of more than a million items in everyday use, prices have continued to advance until today they are at an all-time high.

That the administration is determined to create a scarcity here in America is evidenced by release No. 46A issued by Chester Bowles this morning.

In that release he made it clear that he would prevent, if possible, the payment of subsidies to the slaughterers of cattle who did not set aside for foreign shipment the tonnage of meat designated by an administrative agency.

That release is proof positive of a fact which many of us have long known; that is, that this administration is determined that, come weal or woe to our own people, they are to be compelled to feed and clothe all those of other nations who, regardless of their need or their ability to sustain themselves, ask us for charity.

The policy Bowles is following today is the same as that followed by administrative agencies during the war. The OPA would issue a regulation or a directive which it had no legal authority to enforce. Then it would call upon and receive the aid of either the War Labor Board or the War Production Board, which would blackjack the American citizen or corporation into complying with the nonenforceable order of Mr. Bowles and his OPA.

That is government by intimidation, by coercion. That is the kind of government Hitler imposed. That is the kind of government we are now getting from the present administration. Unwittingly Bowles is playing into the hands of the Communists.

Not only has price-fixing proven itself to be a myth, but it is a snare and a delusion—a trap into which our people have fallen.

Why? Because today, regardless of the price, necessities which we must have if we are to live and maintain ourselves, to say nothing of helping other nations, are disappearing from the market.

Long years ago, Wallace brought about the killing of the little pigs and the old sows; the plowing under of the cotton; the restriction of the acreage devoted to the production of wheat, corn, and other farm crops, and yesterday in Washington a morning newspaper carried a streamer across the front page, "Not one meatball in sight in District."

The news story in all the papers yesterday and today is to the effect that the District is without beef; that there is a negligible supply of lamb and pork, a decreasing volume of poultry; almost no butter; but little bread, and the prices of fresh fruit and vegetables are going up.

It is no longer a question of price, but a question of ability to buy. OPA and Chester Bowles, its operator, are responsible in part for the fact that the cost of living has gone up. They are directly and almost wholly responsible for the fact that needed supplies cannot today be purchased at any price.

It is no longer a question of "What is the price?" The question which today confronts every housewife is, "Where can I buy it?"

OPA should be kicked out the window—this in spite of the fact that we know that, because of the administration's restrictive policies, its give-away policy, its determination to ship abroad so much of the many things we need here at home, prices will continue to rise and, unless it mends its ways, our economy will be completely wrecked.

The only real remedy for the high cost of living—the only cure for inflation—is a return to a free economy; the noninterference of Government agencies with the operation of the law of supply and demand.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to continue OPA for at least 1 year without crippling amendments. For that reason on April 17 last, I voted against every amendment which I thought would weaken OPA in its efforts to hold the line against the rising cost of living. Although on April 17 when the OPA extension bill was before the House for amendment I was very careful to vote against such crippling amendments, most of them carried in spite of my vote and thus helped to shape what was to my mind a very unsatisfactory House version of the bill.

The bill as the House passed it last April was unsatisfactory, but even so, I voted for it on final passage. Some of my constituents wondered why I did so and criticized me for voting to pass such an unsatisfactory bill. I had to explain to them that my vote even for that unsatisfactory bill was a vote friendly to OPA, because the parliamentary situation required the House to pass some measure on which the Senate and the later conference committee could work or there would be no extension of OPA legislation, and thus there would be no OPA at all after June 30, 1946. Now, that was the impelling reason then that I voted for an unsatisfactory OPA extension bill last April when it came to a final passage in the House.

In April, when I saw one crippling amendment after another being added to the OPA bill, in spite of my vote against them all, I consoled myself that the other body would probably exercise better judgment than the House had exercised in drafting its version of the OPA extension. I cannot say that the Senate version of the bill was any more satisfactory to my mind than the House version. I know that the conferees have worked hard and earnestly trying to make something satisfactory and a worthy piece of legislation out of what seemed to me two unsatisfactory versions.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not satisfied with the measure now presented to us by the conferees. However, there is no chance to amend it under our rules and I must either vote it up or vote it down. Wanting as I do to continue price control on the necessities of life, for at least a limited period until supply and demand can be more nearly equalized, I find myself today in about the same predicament which I was in last April in regard to this vote.

I feel inclined to vote "no" on accepting the conference report as I feel that it is a fake OPA extension measure; however, it may be better than I think. The Administration leaders have taken the floor to urge us to vote for this bill even though we do not feel satisfied with it. We are told by our House leaders on the Democratic side that this is the best we can hope to get, and it is either this or nothing. I believe that to be the case. I believe that if this bill is voted down, or if it is passed and the President should veto it, in either case, I am sure there would be no extension of OPA in any form after June 30. So I am about where I was last April. I must vote for this bill, or OPA will expire by limitation in less than a week's time and certainly now there is no other chance to extend it in a safer form.

I listened earnestly to what my colleague from California, [Mr. OUTLAND] said in fixing the blame for the unsafe and unsatisfactory features of this legislation. He spoke exactly what was on my mind. I feel sure that under this legislation the country will experience a dangerous and cruel rise in the cost of living, surpassing anything that we have known during the war. Who will be blamed by the millions of American citizens for passing legislation that will bring about such a calamity? And who will really be to blame?

Of course, the administration party which has the majority vote in both Houses of Congress will get the credit and the blame. Who should get the blame for the ill effects of this legislation upon the American economy and standards of life certain to occur during the coming 12 months? The gentleman from California [Mr. OUTLAND] thinks, and I agree with him, that the blame should fall in large part upon the Members of the House who voted on roll-call vote for those crippling amendments last April 17. Of course, some crippling amendments were added in the Senate. However, I am specifically referring my constituents who wanted a strong OPA continued, to the roll-call vote taken in this Chamber on amendments to the OPA extension bill on last April 17. The study of those votes will make interesting and profitable reading during the next 12 months.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that a matter which so materially affects the future of the United States should come to the floor under a conference report with so little time for discussion. The report still brings to us unsettled problems of administration, for example, the demands upon the Secretary of Agriculture requiring him to furnish statistics upon which his decisions shall be based are, in my opinion, difficult to carry out, because under present conditions, particularly in the meat industry, those statistics are not available to him. The meat is not going through the channels which provide the figures.

More important, this bill, so far as the control board is concerned, resembles an election in Russia. In Russia you can vote for any candidate you want, but the only person on the ticket is the one candidate of Mr. Stalin. Here we have a decontrol board apparently given broad powers, but as I read the bill—and I shall be glad to be corrected if this is not so—the only way an appeal can come to the decontrol board is to go through the advisory committees, already set up and under the influence of Mr. Bowles.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield willingly to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I say to the gentleman that that is not the case.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Can an appeal go direct to the Decontrol Board from industry or agriculture?

Mr. WOLCOTT. A petition is made to the Decontrol Board that the standards have not been complied with, and the matter is heard de novo before the Decontrol Board. In other words, where there is no industry advisory committee, any individual can raise the issue whether or not the standards have been complied with in a protest, and that protest may go to the Emergency Court of Appeals, and by certiorari to the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I am glad to have the gentleman's explanation, but I suggest that the confusion still exists. Apparently, if an advisory committee does exist, the appeal must pass through it to the Decontrol Board.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. OUTLAND].

Mr. OUTLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the remarks that have been made here on the conference report this afternoon and I have been waiting for someone to say something about the consumers of America. It seems to me that we in this Congress have been giving a great deal of consideration to one portion of our economy but that there has been very little consideration given to those who are going to have to foot the bill. Those on fixed incomes are especially going to be affected. People have asked me how I was going to vote on this measure, and I had to give them the same answer that a great many other Members of the House have also given, that is, I did not know. It is a choice between two evils; that is obvious. The choice is bad, but the badness, the evil in it, came long before the conference report. The badness, Mr. Speaker, came out at the time when we added eight amendments to the bill here in this House when the price-control bill was up. Those who really favored a strong price-control bill opposed every one of these crippling amendments.

I am going to vote for this conference report, but I am going to do it in the hope that by so doing I shall be able to contribute toward saving a little bit for the consumers of this country—not a great deal, I admit. It might be a good thing if this thing were voted down and the American people knew just who was responsible for killing price control in America. It might be that that would be a good thing. I do not know. But as long as there is a chance to save anything at all, my vote and my work are going to be for saving that little that we can save. Already Congress has taken a long step forward, breaking the price-control line, already we are on our way toward boom and burst. However, by defeating this conference report, we would be doing more harm than good.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OUTLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Speaking for myself as one who believes that effective price control is still necessary, I think the gentleman has taken the only sound position that can be taken at this time.

Mr. OUTLAND. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

There is a temptation, I admit, for a great many of us to vote against this report and place the blame for raising prices squarely where that blame belongs, but as long as there is some chance to save something, Mr. Speaker, I expect to vote for the conference report. My vote will be made reluctantly; but I would feel that I was tossing away even that small chance that still remains, should I join with the opponents of all price control and vote against this report. I repeat, I shall vote for what I sincerely believe to be the lesser of two evils.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN].

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from North Carolina. I found in my congressional district and in the district adjoining that they had just completed plowing under approximately one-quarter of a million dollars worth of very fine lettuce, based on the cost of production. Just this last week they have plowed up thousands of tons of the finest cabbage you ever saw I visited the fields and saw it myself. They had no market for them. Yesterday it was estimated that there were 3,200 carloads of potatoes for which there is absolutely no market except the Government's buying them and either dumping them or carrying such of them as they can use to the alcohol plants. In California they are dumping them in the woods, and the California Members know it. Let some of these folks who say that the justification for continuing the OPA is scarcity of food, justify these facts. There is probably a need for some sensible regulation with a few items, but apparently the OPA folks do not know how to be reasonable, fair, or sensible. It seems that their desire for power and an opportunity to exercise it exceeds their desire to be helpful, reasonable, and fair public servants. A most regrettable situation.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this comparatively brief period to call the attention of the House to a communication I received this morning. It reads as follows:

> Mr. CONGRESSMAN: The proposed OPA bill would make a mockery of price control.
> I strongly urge you to support a new bill to extend OPA for a full year without any amendments.
>
> Name: Joseph W. Kelley, Jr.
> Address: 59 Putnam Street, Somerville 43, Mass.
> Sponsored by: Communist Party of Massachusetts, 80 Boyiston Street, Boston 16.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to our distinguished and able Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], to close the debate.

Mr. COOPER assumed the chair.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a moment. We have in this Chamber this afternoon a most peculiar situation. Two elements are warring against this conference report. One of those want no price control at all. If this conference report is voted down, they will have their way. Others say that they want more control than is contained in this bill. If this conference report is voted down, they will get nothing because there will not, in my opinion, be any price-control legislation at all. If this House will not vote up this conference report, it certainly will not vote for a continuing resolution and continue the law as it now stands. Even though the House were to pass a continuing resolution, the leader of the Senate is doubtful if it has a chance on earth to pass there. So if we want to control any kind of food prices and if we want to control rents and not have people turned out into the streets—as they will be turned out—the only alternative is to vote up this conference report. The responsibility is here. I will not, as far as I am concerned, by my vote here this afternoon shoulder the responsibility of killing all price control.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet seeking recognition in order to offer a motion to recommit and I also addressed the Speaker, saying that I had a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman says he was on his feet seeking recognition, of course, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. What is the parliamentary situation with reference to the decision of the House in having ordered the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. That will come later.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The SPEAKER. Yes; if the matter reaches that point.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. RIZLEY. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RIZLEY moves to recommit the bill to the committee of conference with instructions to the managers on the part of the House to remove all controls from livestock, dairy, meat, and meat products.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RIZLEY) there were—ayes 108, noes 181.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, on this vote I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 220, not voting 61, as follows:

Mr. KELLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have a live pair with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. WORLEY, who left this afternoon on official business. If he were present he would have voted "yea." I voted "nay." I withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF TRADE-MARKS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 1654) to provide for the registration and protection of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1654) to provide for the registration and protection of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 34.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 7, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 35, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with the following amendments: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Act; or

"(d) at any time in the case of a certification mark on the ground that the registrant (1) does not control, or is not able legitimately to exercise control over, the use of such mark, or (2) engages in the production or marketing of any goods or services to which the mark is applied, or (3) permits the use of such mark for other purposes than as a certification mark, or (4) discriminately refuses to certify or to continue to certify the goods or services of any person who maintains the standards or conditions which such mark certifies."

On page 44 of the House bill strike out beginning with line 18 down to and including line 2 on page 45 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The term 'certification mark' means a mark used upon or in connection with the products or services of one or more persons other than the owner of the mark to certify regional or other origin, material, mode of manufacture, quality, accuracy or other characteristics of such goods or services or that the work or labor on the goods or services was performed by members of a union or other organization.

"The term 'collective mark' means a trademark or service mark used by the members of a cooperative, an association, or other collective group or organization and includes marks used to indicate membership in a union, an association or other organization."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numerbed 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That the Federal Trade commission may apply to cancel on the grounds specified in subsections (c) and (d) of this section any mark registered on the principal register established by this Act, and the prescribed fee shall not be required."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and on page 18, line 23, of the House bill strike out "hereof." and insert the following:

"hereof; and

"(4) no incontestable right shall be acquired in a mark or trade name which is the common descriptive name of any article or substance, patented or otherwise."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(7) That the mark has been or is being used to violate the antitrust laws of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1654) to provide for the registration and protection of trademarks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: This amendment changes the House provision by refusing registration to a mark which, when applied to the goods of the applicant, is descriptive. Under the House bill, a mark is refused registration only if it is "merely" descriptive. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 2: This amendment makes clear that, under section 5 of the House bill, the use by related companies of a registered mark or a mark sought to be registered must be legitimate. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 3: This amendment provides that marks which become descriptive of a patented article are subject to cancellation at any time. The House recedes with an amendment making subject to cancellation at any time any mark which becomes the common descriptive name of an article or substance on which the patent has expired. While this change in section 14 (c) adds as a ground for cancellation the fact that the registered mark has become the common descriptive name of an article or substance on which the patent has expired, this specific provision is not intended to affect the applicability of the subsection to registered marks used on or in connection with nonpatented articles or substances where the mark is the common descriptive name of the goods and has become "abandoned" as that term is used in this section and defined in section 45.

Amendment No. 4: This amendment provides that registration of collective and certification marks obtained contrary to section 4 are subject to cancellation at any time. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 5: This amendment adds a new subsection (d) to section 14 to provide that a certification mark is subject to cancellation if the registrant (1) does not or is not constituted so as legitimately to exercise control over the use of such mark, (2) produces or markets any goods or services to which the mark is applied, (3) permits the use of such mark for other purposes than as a certification mark, or (4) refuses the use of such mark on nondiscriminatory and reasonable terms by all persons producing or marketing goods or services to which the mark is applied who maintain the standards or conditions which such mark certifies. The House recedes with amendments clarifying clauses (1) and (4), and with amendments to the definition of collective and certification marks in section 45 which are rendered necessary by the inclusion in section 14 of subsection (d).

Amendment No. 6: This amendment permits the head of any Government department or agency to apply for cancellation of collective and certification marks without the payment of the prescribed fee. The House recedes with an amendment permitting the Federal Trade Commission to apply for cancellation, on the grounds specified in section 14 (c) and (d), of any mark registered on the principal register without the payment of the prescribed fee.

Amendment No. 7: This amendment is technical, conforming to the inclusion in the bill by amendment No. 5 of the new section 14 (d). The House recedes.

Amendment No. 8: This amendment adds a new paragraph (1) to section 15 providing that if a mark or trade name becomes descriptive of a patented article, the right of a registrant to use such mark may be contested at any time. The House recedes with an amendment omitting such paragraph (1) and inserting a new paragraph (4) which provides that no incontestable right shall be acquired in a mark or trade name which is the common descriptive name of any article or substance, patented or otherwise.

Amendments Nos. 9, 10, 11, and 12: These amendments are clerical and technical and are rendered unnecessary in view of the action taken on amendment No. 8. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 13: This amendment increases the fee for filing each original application for registration of a mark in each class on either the principal or the supplemental register proposed by the House from $15 to $25. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 14: This amendment increases the fee for filing each application for renewal of registration in each class proposed by the House from $15 to $25. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 15: This amendment increases the fee for filing notice of claim of benefits of the bill for a mark to be published under section 12 (c) proposed by the House from $5 to $10. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 16: This amendment increases the fee for filing notice of opposition or application for cancellation proposed by the House from $10 to $25. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 17: This amendment increases the fee for filing an appeal from an examiner in charge of the registration of marks to the Commissioner of Patents proposed by the House from $20 to $25. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 18: This amendment increases the fee for filing an appeal from an examiner in charge of interference to the Commissioner of Patents proposed by the House from $20 to $25. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 19: Since the United States is no longer an adherent to the protocol establishing the International Bureau, Habana, this amendment eliminates (1) the fee of $15 proposed by the House for filing in each class each application communicated to the United States from the International Bureau, and (2) the fee of $10 proposed by the House for filing and transmitting application in each class, including certificate, to the International Bureau. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 20: This amendment increases the fee for certifying manuscript copies proposed by the House from 75 cents to $1. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 21: This amendment increases the fee for each additional registration or application which may be included under a single certificate proposed by the House from 25 cents to 50 cents. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 22: The House bill proposed a fee of 50 cents for each brief from the digest of assignments of two hundred words or less, with an additional fee of ten cents for each additional one hundred words or fraction thereof. This amendment changes this provision by prescribing a fee of $1 for each brief from the digest of assignments of two hundred words or less. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 23: This amendment increases the additional fee proposed by the House for a single printed copy of statement and drawing, if certified, for the grant, from 50 cents to $1. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 24: This amendment increases the fee for the certificate proposed by the House from 50 cents to $1. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 25: This amendment increases the fee for copy of certificate of renewal proposed by the House from 50 cents to $1. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 26: The House bill proposed for photographic copies of records, a fee of 20 cents per page; if certified, for the certificate, an additional fee of 50 cents. This amendment changes this provision by providing that the fee for photographic copies of records and drawings shall be the reasonable cost of making them. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 27: In conformity with amendment No. 26, this amendment eliminates the fee of 20 cents per sheet for photographic copies of drawings proposed by the House. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 28: This amendment provides that the use of a registered mark in violation of the antitrust laws shall constitute a defense to a suit by the registrant. The House recedes with an amendment substituting the words "to violate" for the words "in violation of." This amendment provides an additional defense to the conclusive evidence rule of a certificate of registration of a mark which has become incontestable under section 15. It does not and is not intended to enlarge, restrict, amend, or modify the substantive law of trade-marks either as set out in other sections of this Act or as heretofore applied by the Courts. The amendment does not and is not intended to affect the validity of the mark nor affect the right of the registrant to continue use or enforce his rights in the mark. If it is established that a registrant has used or is using his registered mark, which has become incontestable, as the legal, causal, and efficient instrumentality to violate the antitrust laws of the United States, such registrant is denied the benefit of the rule that the certificate of registration is conclusive evidence of his exclusive right to use the mark. Under such circumstances, the certificate is only prima facie evidence of his exclusive right to use and he must be prepared to carry the additional burden of proof as though his mark had not become incontestable.

Amendment No. 29: Inasmuch as court fees are prescribed by the Act of September 27, 1944, this amendment eliminates the provision in section 34 that for each notice with respect to any action, suit, or proceeding arising under the bill required and furnished to the Commissioner of Patents by the clerk of the court, a fee of 50 cents shall be taxed by the clerk as costs of suit. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 30: This amendment amends the definition of the term "related company" to exclude any person who does not legitimately control or is not legitimately controlled by the registrant or applicant for registration in respect to the nature and quality of the goods or services in connection with which the mark is used. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 31 and 32: These amendments are clerical; the House recedes.

Amendment No. 33: The House bill provides that nothing contained in the bill shall be construed as "limiting or restricting" any statute in force on the effective date of the bill which does not relate to trade-marks. This amendment amplifies the stipulation by adding that nothing contained in the bill shall be construed as "modifying or repealing" any such statute. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 34: This amendment provides that nothing contained in the bill shall be construed as limiting, etc., any statute which does not relate to trade names (as well as any statute which does not relate to trademarks as provided in the House bill). The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 35: The House bill provides that nothing contained in the bill shall be construed as restricting or increasing the authority of any Federal regulatory agency except as may be specifically provided in the bill. This amendment includes any Federal department in this provision. The House recedes.

FRANK W. BOYKIN,
FRITZ G. LANHAM,
FRED A. HARTLEY, Jr.,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, this is the trade-mark bill that has passed the House on three or four different occasions. The purpose of it is to protect legitimate business and the consumers of the country. The Senate placed certain amendments upon the bill which were objectionable to the House conferees in some of their features, but they were so modified and amended in the conference that we are presenting a full conference report and all the conferees are in agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my distinguished friend and colleague and fellow conferee the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY].

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I concur in everything that the gentleman from Texas has said. We feel that the position of the House was sustained in the conference.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, the legislative history of this act is long and extensive. Many hearings have been held over a period of almost 8 years. Those hearings may, and probably will, be referred to by the courts in construing and interpreting the provisions of the act. However, there is one provision in the act which has no recorded legislative history, and in order that the purpose and intent of the House may be made perfectly clear, I wish this statement to appear in the RECORD as an explanation of our intent and as a part of the legislative history of the act.

This Trade-Mark Act places in one statute all the Federal law relating to the subject and repeals the prior laws specifically referred to in its provisions. It reenacts much prior legislation and creates new rights, some of which are substantive and others procedural. It implements our international commitments and brings the trade-mark law of the United States down to date, recognizing the changes in business and commercial practices since the act of 1905 became the law.

The Senate amended the act and the conference committee has reconciled its differences. I believe it necessary, however, that specific reference be made to one amendment in order that its interpretation may be made clear.

Paragraph (b) of section 33 of the act has been amended by adding subparagraph (7) in the following words:

(7) That the mark has been or is being used to violate the antitrust laws of the United States.

The prior statutes enacted by Congress on this subject provide that the certificate of registration shall be prima facie evidence of ownership and the right to use the mark. H. R. 1654 changes this rule and provides that "the right of the registrant to use such registered mark in commerce for the goods or services on or in connection with which such registered mark has been in continuous use for five consecutive years subsequent to the date of such registration and is still in use in commerce shall be incontestable" if the conditions of section 15 of the act are met. Section 33 (a) of this act reenacts the prima facie evidence rule which is applicable from and after the date of registration of a mark under the act of March 3, 1881, the act of February 20, 1905, and under this bill. Section 33 (b) provides that where the registered mark has become incontestable under section 15, the certificate of registration shall be conclusive evidence of the registrant's "exclusive right to use the registered mark in commerce on or in connection with the goods or services specified in the certificate."

However, section 33 (b) contains seven exceptions to the rule that the certificate of registration shall be conclusive evidence of the rights of the registrant even where the provisions of section 15 have been met. Some doubt has been expressed on the following points:

First. Do these seven exceptions, including the amending paragraph (7) with reference to the violation of the antitrust laws of the United States, lay down substantive rules of law or substantive defenses which go to the validity and enforceability of the mark, or do they relate only to the weight of evidence to be given to the certificate of registration?

Second. What is the meaning of the words "used to violate the antitrust laws," as found in paragraph (7) of paragraph (b) of section 33?

It is clear from the language of the act and from the congressional history of the act as it is found in the hearings and reports that the seven "defenses or defects" listed under paragraph (b) of section 33 are intended to relate to and to affect the weight of the evidence to be given to the certificate of registration where the owner claims the benefit of the incontestable rule and where the opposite party can, by the weight of the evidence, establish any one of the things listed in the seven paragraphs in paragraph (b); but these seven paragraphs are not intended to enlarge, restrict, amend, or modify the substantive law of trademarks either as set out in other sections of the act or as heretofore applied by the courts under prior laws. A trade-mark registrant who is shown to have used his mark to violate the antitrust laws is denied the benefit of the rule that his certificate of registration is conclusive evidence of his right of ownership and his right to the exclusive use of the mark. Under these circumstances, his certificate of registration is only prima facie evidence of his right and he must be prepared to carry the additional burden of proof as is necessary under the laws and statutes as they existed prior to the passage of this act. One of the valuable new rights created by the act is the incontestable right after 5 years' use of the mark and the corollary thereto that the certificate of registration is conclusive evidence of ownership and the right to the exclusive use of the mark. This new and valuable right is denied to any trademark registrant who is shown to have used his mark to violate the antitrust laws, but this provision does not and is not intended to deprive the registrant of any rights he would possess or enjoy if this act were not enacted into law. Stated in other terms, proof of violation of the antitrust laws of the United States by a registrant in the use of his mark does not under this act destroy the validity of or the right of the registrant to continue to use the mark, but it places on him a burden of proof in the event of litigation which others do not have to carry, by diluting the weight the court is to give to his certificate of registration as evidence of ownership and the right to use the mark. This is the intent and effect and the only intent and effect of the seven subparagraphs of paragraph (b) of section 33.

Although the words "used to violate the antitrust laws of the United States" are general in their nature, their meaning is clear. A registrant of a trade-mark might violate the antitrust laws by entering into an agreement to restrict output or to suppress competition and yet the use made by the registrant of his trade-mark in his business might have no legal, causal, or efficient relation to the violation of these laws. The relation of the trade-mark to these illegal acts might be purely physical or coincidental. If a trade-mark should be used the legal, causal, and efficient instrumentality to effect a contract, agreement, or arrangement which violates the antitrust laws, then the actual use of the mark to carry out such a scheme would constitute a use in violation of the antitrust laws; but if the mark is in no true sense an essential legal element of the unlawful conduct, then the fact that the registrant may have violated the antitrust laws would not bring paragraph (7) of paragraph (b) of section 33 into operation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. BATES of Kentucky, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 677, Report No. 2338), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3420) to provide for refunds to railroad employees in certain cases, so as to place the various States on an equal basis, under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, with respect to contributions to employees. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL] may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report and statement on the bill H. R. 6429, the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON THURSDAY, JUNE 27

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock a. m. on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

RECOMMITTING BILL TO THE COMMITTEE ON REVISION OF THE LAWS

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 2200) to revise, codify, and enact into positive law title 18 of the United States Code entitled "Crimes and Criminal Procedure" be recommitted to the Committee on Revision of the Laws with authority to rereport with committee amendments and that such rereporting shall not affect the calendar position of the bill nor the special rule which has been reported thereon.

I further ask unanimous consent that such committee amendments may be printed in roman type when the bill is rereported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO FILE REPORT ON H. R. 6702

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill (H. R. 6702) to clarify the rights of former owners of real property to reacquire such property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

ASSISTANCE TO THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. DREWRY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5356) to provide assistance to the Republic of China in augmenting and maintaining a naval establishment, and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD.

ADMISSION OF PERSONS OF RACES INDIGENOUS TO INDIA

Mr. LESINSKI, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 3517) to authorize the admission into the United States of persons of races indigenous to India, to make them racially eligible for naturalization, and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. DOUGLAS of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOOK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter with regard to the British loan.

Mr. PATTERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement from the Congress of Civilian Rights.

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ROWAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Post of today.

Mr. THOM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a clipping from the North Canton Sun, and a letter from the Department of Agriculture on the sugar situation.

Mr. WEICHEL asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FULTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and also to have printed three columns of Mr. Stokes' as written concerning the American Veterans Committee in Des Moines, Iowa.

Mr. MUNDT (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the legislative business of today and any other special orders, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, I was present and voted against the motion to recommit the conference report on the extension of the Office of Price Administration. I then returned to my office to transact some business but was unable to return until after my name had been called the second time. Had I been present at the time my name was called I would have voted "yea" for the passage of the conference report to extend the Office of Price Administration.

GRAIN FOR NEW ENGLAND

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I had a telegram from Mr. Louis Webster, former Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, and I have introduced a resolution to inquire as to why Massachusetts is being discriminated against, and I believe gets a poorer quality and a lesser amount of feed than other sections or States in the country.

He states:

BOSTON, MASS., June 24, 1946.

Congresswoman EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Canvassed two-thirds Massachusetts grain trade today. They are receiving 40 percent of 1945 shipments, some of which is unsatisfactory substitute for regular grain. No help in sight. Above figures do not include Government allocation. Government allocation 793 cars for New England, 198 cars for Massachusetts, of that 91 cars ordered and little if any shipped, practically no corn, just substitute. Middlesex County Farm Bureau Cooperative with high priorities reports only four cars from allocation and all on paper, no deliveries, even if whole 198 come through in 1 month. That is less than 8 cars a day, and normal Massachusetts consumption is 60 cars a day, and we are now short 36 cars a day. Allocation not even a decent trickle; dealers still blame unrealistic price pattern.

LOUIS WEBSTER.

House Resolution 676

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is requested to submit to the House of Representatives such facts as may be in his possession with respect to the shortage of food and feed in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, particularly with respect to the alleged discriminatory shortage of meat, milk, butter, and bread, and of grain suitable for the feeding of poultry and livestock.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

CARRY-BACK OF UNUSED EXCESS-PROFITS CREDITS

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the 2-year carry-back of unused excess-profits credit was adopted by the Senate Finance Committee as an amendment to the revenue bill of 1942, as a substitute for the allowance of setting up of reserves for deferred maintenance, inventory losses, and other deductible expenses held down during the war years to a bare minimum by priorities, rationing, labor and material shortages, and other factors beyond the control of the taxpayer.

The report of the Finance Committee on the revenue bill of 1942, states as follows:

> The present law permits corporations to carry forward for 2 years their net operating losses. It also allows the unused excess-profits credit to be carried forward for 2 years. These provisions obviously are of benefit only in periods of increasing business activities. Many corporations will suffer substantially in periods of declining profits, especially at the close of a war economy in which their deductible expenses have been held down to a bare minimum by priorities, rationing, labor shortages, and other factors beyond the control of the taxpayer. For example, a corporation during the war years makes substantial profits which would be considerably reduced if it could make the expenditures possible in a free economy for maintenance, repair, and other deductible expenses. Upon the termination of the war, the materials and labor will once more be available, but the costs and expenses which would otherwise be taken against the wartime profits will fall into years of lesser profits or no profits, thereby resulting in small or no tax benefit for the taxpayer.
> If the taxpayer would in any case be subject to excess-profits tax for every year of the cycle, no harm results from deductions being taken in years other than those to which they should properly be attributable. This would be generally true if the taxpayer would in any case be subject only to the normal and surtax for each of the years in the cycle. If, however, the taxpayer is subject to excess-profits tax in the year to which the deduction should properly be attributable and not subject to excess-profits tax in the year in which the deduction is allowable under the present law, hardship results. The same is true if he is subject to normal tax and surtax in the former year and has a deficit in net income in the latter year..
> To afford relief to these hardship cases, where maintenance and upkeep expenses must, because of wartime restrictions, be deferred to peacetime years, your committee has provided a 2-year carry-back of operating losses and of unused excess-profits credit. This provision affords, in effect, the same type of relief in periods of declining profits which the present 2-year carry-forward of operating losses and unused excess-profits credits affords in periods of increasing profits.

CONTINUATION OF CARRY-BACK FOR 1946

Secretary Vinson in his statement to the Committee on Ways and Means on October 1, 1945, recommended the repeal of the excess-profits tax as of December 31, 1945. He also recommended the continuation of the carry-back of the unused excess-profits credit for 1 year following the repeal of the excess-profits tax. In this connection he said:

> The chief purpose of the carry-backs was to correct inflated wartime profit figures by allowing a deduction of war-induced costs not incurred until the end of the war. It appears that a considerable volume of such costs will remain to be incurred after December 31, 1945. Accordingly, despite repeal of the excess-profits tax the carry-backs should continue for one more year.

The revenue bill of 1945 as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means did not repeal the excess-profits tax, but merely reduced the rate of tax. The committee's action, in effect, continued the carry-back of the unused excess-profits credit for 1946 the same as under the affirmative action by the Senate in continuing the same for 1 year after the repeal of the excess-profits tax.

When the bill reached the Senate the Finance Committee provided for the repeal of the excess-profits tax and the continuance of the carry-back of unused excess-profits credit for 1946. At that time I questioned the wisdom of continuing this provision beyond the expiration of the excess-profits tax.

The purpose and reason for continuing the carry back of the unused credit for 1946 was set forth in the Finance Committee report, as follows:

> The 2-year carry-back of unused excess-profits credit is retained for 1 year beyond the repeal of the excess-profits tax. Thus it will be possible to carry back unused excess-profits credits arising in 1946 to 1944 and 1945 and reduce the excess-profits tax paid in these years. It is believed necessary to continue the carry-back for one more year to be sure that business has the opportunity to apply reconversion expenditures to reduce wartime taxes. However, it is recognized that the carry back is subject to abuse and inequity. Therefore your committee is studying ways of removing the abuses of this provision and expects to propose retroactive legislation on this subject in the near future.

Later in the report, on page 30, the following statement is made:

> There is danger that the operation of the unused excess-profits credit carry-back provision, particularly in 1946, may make possible certain abuses. These potential abuses might arise through various devices or transactions entered into wholly or in large part for the purpose of obtaining refunds of wartime excess-profits taxes through unused credit carry-back, or through transactions having the apparent effect of creating carry-back refunds in situations unrelated to the purpose and intent of the provisions allowing carry-backs. While various tax avoidance schemes are already dealt with either by express provisions in the internal-revenue laws or through court decisions, your committee will give further consideration to the necessity or desirability of retroactive legislation in this connection.

IS THE UNUSED CREDIT A PROPER YARDSTICK FOR MEASURING WAR-INDUCED COSTS?

Before discussing the potential abuses which might arise through various devices or transactions entered into in order to increase the benefits thereunder, it might be well to examine the unused credit from the standpoint of equity and soundness as a yardstick for measuring the amount of war-induced expenditures incurred in 1946, and whether or not the same carries out the purpose and the intent of the provisions as set forth in the Finance Committee report and in Secretary Vinson's recommendation.

What relationship, if any, does the unused excess-profits credit have to war-induced expenditures? While such expenditures, if actually incurred, will in some measure determine whether or not the corporation has an unused credit, the principal factor determining the amount of its unused credit in 1946, or lack of an unused credit, is the amount of corporate earnings in 1946 as compared with the normal peacetime earnings. In the absence of abnormal conditions such as fires, floods, and prolonged idleness growing out of labor disputes, earnings of many corporations in 1946 would naturally tend to return to their peacetime level, especially in view of the continued material shortages.

In the case of those corporations whose credit is based on their average earnings in the base period years 1936–39, no unused credit would likely occur in 1946 unless their 1946 earnings are less than 95 percent of their base period earnings.

However, in the case of corporations whose credit is based on invested capital, which in many cases is greatly in excess of their base period earnings, such corporations by the very nature of things will have an unused credit in 1946 even though their earnings may be greatly in excess of their base period earnings.

For example, a corporation whose normal earnings might show an excess-profits net income of $50,000,000, whereas its excess-profits credit based on invested capital may be $100,000,000. Such a corporation, even though its 1946 excess-profits net income equals its normal earnings of $50,000,000, will have an unused excess-profits credit of $50,000,000 and would be entitled to a refund or tax adjustment of its 1944 or 1945 excess-profits taxes amounting to $22,750,000 regardless of whether it had any war-induced expenditures in 1946. If such a corporation had no earning at all in 1946 it would be entitled to a refund or tax adjustments of $45,500,000.

On the other hand many corporations having legitimate war-induced expenditures in 1946 will be denied any relief by offsetting such expenditures against wartime income because they do not have an unused excess-profits credit in 1946. If the intent and purpose of the carry-back of the unused excess-profits credit is to allow for war-induced expenditures not incurred until after the war because of the taxpayers' inability to make such expenditures during the war because of priorities, rationing, scarcity of labor and materials, and other factors beyond the control of the taxpayer, why should corporations having such expenditures be denied relief while other corporations receive refunds and tax adjustments regardless of whether or not they have any war-induced expenditures?

In this connection, I quote from a statement by Mr. Roy Blough, of the Treasury Tax Research Division, as follows:

To the extent that earnings simply fall off in amount while remaining above their peacetime level there is room to question whether the corporation should receive a tax refund out of its wartime profits. Yet the development of a high credit far above the prewar experience of a company results in a carry-back against excess profits and a refund in such a case.

The objection is most valid in the case of the invested capital credit. Many concerns using this credit not only receive free from excess-profits tax much larger profits than they earned before the war, and perhaps ever received, but in effect will have their profits level artificially maintained by the carry-back in the postwar years.

In addition, it might be pointed out that the corporations most likely to benefit through the carry-back of an unused 1946 excess-profits credit, are those corporations which benefited most through the 2-year carry-forward of unused excess-profits credit. This is especially true in the case of those corporations using the invested capital method for determining their excess-profits credit. Under the 2-year carry-forward of unused excess-profits credits it was possible for a corporation to escape paying any excess-profits tax during the war even though they had excess-profits net income in excess of their current year's credit. Others were allowed to earn 15, 20 or more percent on their invested capital before being subject to the excess-profits tax.

In my opinion, the use of the unused credit as a yardstick to measure the amount of war-induced expenditures incurred in 1946 fails to carry out the purpose and the intent as set forth in the committee reports and as stated by Secretary Vinson. The unused credit in many cases has little relation to war-induced expenditures in 1946, and the benefits derived in such cases under the carry-back is therefore not measured by deferred war-induced expenditures.

Many corporations continued their normal operations during the war producing for the Government and after the end of the war continued their normal operations producing for civilian consumption. Many such corporations had little reconversion costs, and during the war enjoyed top priorities for maintenance and upkeep as the Government was anxious to speed up war production. Why should such companies having no reconversion cost and little, if any, deferred maintenance receive a refund of excess-profits taxes paid during the war? Many corporations during the period following VE-day or VJ-day incurred war-induced expenditures and applied the same against their 1945 profits, thereby reducing their excess-profits net income. Such corporations have already offset war-induced expenditures against wartime income. Why should they be allowed an additional offset merely because they have an unused excess-profits credit in 1946?

USE OF 1946 CREDIT

Many corporations following the end of the war have and are increasing their capital to take care of peacetime expansion. Such increase in capital in 1946 will increase their excess-profits credit, resulting in a carry-back in many cases, or an increased amount of carry-back, having no relation whatever to wartime profits. For example, if a corporation invests an additional $100,000 of new capital in 1946, it could increase its credit as much as $10,000. To the extent that this new capital produces less than $10,000 in 1946, any unused credit it has will be increased accordingly. Many corporations are increasing their invested capital structure by many millions of dollars of additional capital for expansion purposes, and where the same results in additional refunds out of the Treasury the taxpayers are contributing to the expansion of private industry for the benefit of private stockholders.

The following are some of the abuses and transactions that will no doubt be resorted to in order to create carry-back refunds or tax credits:

(a) The bunching of expenditures, which by normal business policy would be spread over a number of years, in such a way that increased carry-back advantages may be obtained.

(b) The embarking on broad experimental undertakings or "prestige advertising" the expenditures for which are not only largely borne by the Treasury, but will result in increasing also the amount of the unused credit carry-back.

(c) Deferment of profits normally attributable to the immediate postwar period (1946) to later years.

(d) Manipulations in general so that losses or reduced income are made to appear in 1946 to increase unused credit carry-back.

(e) Keeping so-called war babies which have no peacetime use, alive for the purpose of carrying back excess-profits credits against wartime income in order to secure refund of war profits.

For every $1,000,000 increase in the unused credit by reason of such manipulations and transactions the taxpayer will be entitled to a refund or tax credit of $455,000, and if the same causes a loss in 1946 he will be allowed in addition 85½ percent of such loss.

POTENTIAL REVENUE EFFECT

The following earnings reports of corporations, and estimated effect of the carry-back provisions, as shown by published reports in the Wall Street Journal, gives some idea as to the probable magnitude of the impact on the Treasury.

There were over 54,000 corporations paying excess-profits tax in 1944 and while many of these corporations will have no unused credit in 1945, and others through the carry-back of unused credits in 1945, or through the elimination of excess-profits tax liability for 1944 and 1945 by reason of recomputation of amortization of emergency facilities, it is possible that several thousand corporations may benefit under the carry-back of 1946 unused excess-profits credits.

The two tax adjustments, Mr. Sloan said, were made as follows:

"(1) By a tax credit computed at the combined normal tax and surtax rate of 40 percent, representing the amount by which the normal tax and surtax for the year may be reduced because of the loss in the first quarter, and

"(2) By an additional credit to income for the quarter equal to one-fourth of the maximum amount of taxes which may be recovered through the carry-back to 1944 of the unused excess-profits credit for 1946."

NOTE.—For the year ending Dec. 31, 1945, General Motors reported as follows:

"The 1945 provision for United States income taxes has been reduced by $34,415,207 representing the net reduction in income and excess profits taxes for the year 1943 arising from the carry-back of unused excess-profits credit for the year 1945." EXCERPTS FROM ARTICLE BY ARUNDEL COTTER IN WALL STREET JOURNAL, APRIL 29, 1946

The New York Central Railroad, after a relatively brief 4 years of war prosperity following 10 lean years, faces the possibility of substantial postwar losses. * * *

Central's earning record in the decade before the war—1931-40—was far from satisfactory. In 4 of the 10 years the road reported deficits, and for the period as a whole these exceeded aggregate profits by $18,000,000.

The road, however, is in a far better position today than it was at any time during the 10 prewar years. Fixed charges against income—interest, rentals, etc.—which were $62,700,000 in 1932 and averaged $55,700,000 over the decade, are estimated at only about $41,000,000 in 1946. Central, other things being equal, would not have done so badly in the prewar decade if its fixed charges had been at present levels.

Outstanding debt has been cut from $1,108,000,000 in 1932 to $855,400,000 at the end of 1945. And there is reason to expect further reduction in debt. The road has no important maturities for many years. The largest total for any of the next 10 years is $25,000,000, less than the annual depreciation charge, while average maturities for the 10 years is $10,200,000.

Finally, New York Central is in the best working-capital position in its history. Net current assets December 31, last, were $149,800,000, compared with $37,500,000 at the end of 1940. * * *

Tax refunds may play an important part in Central's final results for 1946, as they did in 1945. Due to a special charge on earnings of $45,600,000 for accelerated amortization of war facilities that year, the road had a deficit, before taxes, of around $17,000,000. Recomputation of its reports for previous years, combined with carry-baek of the loss, resulted in tax recoveries of $32,800,000, while tax credits of $9,400,000 resulted from over accruals of previous years. These recoveries offset the loss by $24,400,000.

In the event that the road's earnings this year fall short of its excess-profits tax credit, it will be able to recompute 1944 taxes and secure a refund.

NOTE.—The deficit for the first 4 months of 1946, exclusive of tax credit, is $18,931,500 as compared with a net income of $8,752,862 for the corresponding period 1945.

[2] Westinghouse Electric's operating loss for the first quarter of 1946 gives no effect to the carry-back features of the Federal Revenue Act, G. A. Price, president, stated. He emphasized that losses incident to the 118-day strike have been absorbed in operations currently and not charged to reserves created during past years. "The reason for not making such adjustments," Mr. Price explained, "is that the Westinghouse strike still was in progress at the end of the quarter. Such adjustments may be made at the end of the second quarter."

[1] Deficit.

[2] Net operating income for 4 months 1946 was $543,210 as compared to $39,150,491 in 1945 and $26,197,070 in 1944.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY] on January 21, 1946, introduced legislation to repeal the provision of law providing for the carry-back of unused excess-profits credits. The Ways and Means Committee requested a report from the Treasury Department on the bill on January 23, 1946. The Treasury Department has not filed this report with the committee to date. The Treasury is studying the matter, we are advised, in an effort to make recommendations of methods of eliminating abuses and inequities.

In view of the fact that the Congress will soon adjourn for an indefinite period and before the Treasury can make its report and legislation can be passed carrying out the report if the Congress desires, I recommend that the Congress immediately repeal this provision of law as suggested by the so-called Bailey bill. The Congress can at a later date pass legislation on the subject to carry out the original intent and purpose and to safeguard against abuses and inequities. Certainly we cannot afford to permit the present situation to continue unaltered.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include tables and charts which I have prepared and others which I have taken from magazines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

MINIMUM-WAGE LEGISLATION

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, the greatest enemy of democracy is poverty; the most persistent challenge to American democracy is human want. Poverty is the "black hole"; it is the breeding ground of the social diseases, and the physical and mental diseases, too, which weaken the spirit and the strength of our Nation. Local infections and ailments threaten the health of men; and if they are chronic, if they persist, even though localized, they draw on the strength of the whole man to fight them and can be the cause of his death. Not a few of our young men who looked as healthy as a man can look and strong were rejected by the armed forces because of some persistent, though not apparent, defect. Many an athlete of national prominence and great ability failed to pass the careful scrutiny of medical boards. I am sure, too, that many of my colleagues here can recall the sudden passing of a friend who when last seen looked sound and vigorous. The whole body succumbs to the devastating effect of a single, even a local, defect, a brain tumor, a heart disease, a cancerous growth. And we know, too, that the spirit is of prime importance in maintaining life and health; the will to live can fight off the malady. But if the spirit falters and fails, the bodily break-down follows fast.

It would be to neglect an obvious and true parallel if we were to fail to apply this knowledge to our national being. It is in recognition of this that we assert our purpose and strive to achieve "freedom from fear" for our people. Fear is a harrowing and destructive social disease which can be campaigned against with success by practical remedy, or which can rage as an epidemic. Closely allied is the struggle to achieve "freedom from want," which is a struggle against a companion disease, best identified as poverty. Not only can we witness the ravage of the social disease of poverty in the great corporate land of wealth and plenty as we see a single and local malady afflict the healthy body, but we can witness in poverty the source of many of the physical and mental illnesses of our people.

I make this comparison because I see it to be true, yet would like to impress it more forcibly because there is a danger that we do not realize in full the fatal consequences of the presence of poverty in our land of plenty. A man whose grip is strong, his step firm, his sight good, yes, and his clothing new, will ignore that occasional pain in his side until he is suddenly stricken. This Nation, victorious in war, rich in resources, and greatest in production, a power in the world and a source of aid to suffering nations can easily ignore the pain in its side, the poverty that is manifest in the very middle of almost every large city. We are rich, we are strong, we are vigorous. How can we be poor?

We, the collective, the national "we," may not be poor, but some of us are. We identify the disease by its symptoms. What are the symptoms of poverty? Undernourishment, overcrowding, deterioration of household equipment and clothing, liability to acute distress with any minor disturbance in the family equilibrium. There is not a man among us who can deny that he has witnessed these symptoms. We do not have to travel far to see them, but we can travel far across the country and everywhere see them. And if we fail to see them because the train of progress and plenty we are traveling on is going too fast, let us remember for a minute when that train slowed down and almost stalled.

Do we remember the depression? We were traveling on the same line then that we are now. We have come some distance since then; we have new power, greater steam in our engines of production; we have streamlined our cars, added men to operate and control, and perhaps strengthened the ties and the rails with social advances and some guaranties of security. But this is the same system we were on; it is the road of our own choosing, which does not stop us from seeking improvements. The memory of the snail-pace and creaking condition of the "depression local" is too sharp for us to forget.

Yet who can assert that our way of life has forever eliminated the danger of the business cycle, as we call it, which finds its nadir in depression? Our hopes are strong; we refuse to accept as inevitable the cycles of prosperity and depression; we will not regard the cycle complacently as characteristic. But we have no assurance that we have straightened out the cycle and made it a level, if not of prosperity, yet a minimum guaranty of freedom from want for our people. We refuse to accept the alternative of peace and depression, war and seeming prosperity. But already festering in us is the fear that in days to come we may be stricken again, the germ of fear is in us. As the body marshals its forces against the germ, as the vital principle in man fights off disease, we too are already marshaling our forces, and the vital principle in our Nation which asserts the essential dignity of the human being, and his right to be free from want and fear continues to stir us.

We have asserted our determination that mass unemployment will not afflict us again. We strive for full employment, a goal which the late Franklin D. Roosevelt proclaimed with characteristic vision, faith, and assurance. President Truman reasserted this objective in his message to Congress on the state of the Union last January when he said:

> All Americans able to work and desiring to work have the right and opportunity to useful, remunerative, and full-time employment.

He asserted our basic objective—

> To improve the welfare of the American people which, in addition to economic prosperity, means social security in the fullest sense.

Mr. President, this House is now considering legislation which is directed to that objective. I refer to the proposed amendment to minimum-wage legislation reported to the floor in H. R. 4130 which would set a minimum wage of 65 cents an hour. I endorse that proposal. I am convinced that the present minimum of 40 cents per hour, set by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 in pre-inflation days was, as the President has said: "Inadequate when it was established. It has now become obsolete. Increases in the cost of living since 1938 and changes in our national wage structure require an immediate and substantial upward revision of this minimum." However, while I endorse legislation which would raise the minimum wage to 65 cents an hour, I believe that if this alone were now provided by law, the same appraisal might now or very shortly be made, namely of present inadequacy and imminent obsolescence. As a cosponsor of minimim-wage legislation with a group of my colleagues in the House who also oppose the impoverishment of people in this land, I insist that we must not stop with the proposed 65-cent minimum. We must step up to security, to the level of freedom from want and one step does not get us there, particularly when the rising waters of prices tend to float the level higher day by day. This legislation was first reported by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor in S. 1349, which proposed a gradual step-up from the dirt-floor 40-cent minimum, which might better be described as quicksand, for the level seems to sink constantly for the great mass of workers whose feet are gripped in it. The original Senate bill proposed a minimum of 65 cents an hour in the first year of operation, 70 cents per hour in the second, and 75 cents per hour thereafter. With these minimum rates our workers might have kept pace with the escalator of prices, though butter has gone up 11 cents a pound, a cue to the soaring prices we can expect now that the OPA, almost the only safety valve in our economy, has been blown up by pressure. These graduated minimum rates I thoroughly endorse; every lesser scale is inadequate and promises to bind the worker to his first meager step up, a step up, a step which he will find flooded as soon as he steps on it.

But there are those who deny the necessity for such upward revisions. The Senate bill as amended and passed by that House, in addition to numerous confining provisions, provides a minimum of 65 cents per hour for the first 2 years of operation, 70 cents per hour in the third and fourth years, and 75 cents thereafter. Meanwhile, the cost of living, the mean of subsistence, continues to advance as much per month as the proposed percent increase provides in years. And are we now to be content with the barest minimum proposed and to be forced to devote our energies to securing only that end?

The Fair Labor Standards Act, inadequate at the time and now obsolete, provided for graded increases with a minimum of 25 cents per hour the first year, 30 cents per hour the next 6 years, and 40 cents per hour thereafter, the present rate. The inadequacy of this legislation was manifest at the time of enactment, and witness to this is the fact that in many cases provisions for increases above the minimum were made in anticipation of the legal increase. But it is 8 years since the act became law, 8 years in which it has been more and more inadequate, 8 years in which tremendously expanded production and increasing prices were the rule, and it is 8 years before we get around to proposing an additional increase. Are we to persist in inadequacy; are we to continue to hold security or, more accurately, freedom from want beyond the reach of our low-paid workers? This is the opportunity; let us be aware of the danger of letting it slip.

It is apparent to observers of the political and economic scene that the western world, of which America is a most important part, is passing through a period of high social tension produced by the tardiness of social and economic adjustment to change. In the great depression years of the last decade millions of our people suffered from want, the entire Nation suffered from an economy of scarcity. Yet we had not lost our capacity to produce. We had great national resources and our tremendous productivity during the war years proclaimed mightily our ability to produce goods. That production potential existed in the depression years, but we still went without. We did not consume; we did not produce. There is emerging from our experience of the last two decades a conviction that we must deliberately set out to achieve new minimum goals of consumption.

The first fact pertinent to that conviction is that to close the gap of tardiness in social and economic adjustment, we must raise the minimum wage rate immediately and adequately and not permit a less than adequate rate to forever prevent our workers from buying and consuming what they need.

There is a second fact pertinent to our conviction that we must deliberately set out to achieve new minimum goals of consumption, namely that this can be achieved in part by setting new minimum goals for wages. We are acutely conscious of the capacity for production of American industry, so acutely conscious that some of our economists speak of overproduction and many observers speak of the flooded market. But we have no proof that industry can produce more than we can consume. What we do know is that production can exceed what we can consume expressed in terms of our ability to pay. The needs and wants of our people have never been satisfied. Even in June 1945, the percent of workers receiving below the minimum wage in the tobacco, lumber and textile industries was 58, 54, and 47 percent respectively. That means that more than one-half of the families of such workers were living below an emergency sustenance level of living. Prof. Alvin Hansen, the noted economist, says this: "We may take it as axiomatic that within the visible range human wants are insatiable." Arthur A. Hood, director of dealer relations of Johns-Manville, in an address to the American Business Policy Conference of the Economic and Business Foundation recently stated in this way: "There is no down cycle in human wants." The total market is unlimited. There is no known height to which the American standard of living cannot rise." The economist is recognizing, the merchant and manufacturer are now declaring what the great majority of American workers and their families have known too intimately for years, that there are a great many things they need. Economists currently refer to different levels of human living, calling poverty a distinct state of submergence, and identifying other stages as "minimum of subsistence," "minimum of maintenance" and so forth. What these terms mean is that there are a great many families in this Nation today who are going without the necessities of life. Living at a minimum of subsistence means just that. They are not completely impoverished, they are not completely without food or housing or medical care, but they live at the very lowest level of subsistence.

Now look at the relationship between low income and high infant mortality, between low income and poor physical condition of children or between low income and the mortality of mothers at childbirth. Study the report and supplement of the Senate Committee of Education and Labor on this proposal and see the corrolation between low income and inadequate education. Then note that in June 1945, about a year ago, there were more than 4,000,000 workers receiving below 65 cents per hour. Here is the unlimited market. Here is the capacity to consume which flaunts the fear of overproduction. Four million workers who must consume more food, live in better houses, obtain adequate medical care, educate their children, and better clothe themselves and their families.

I do not insist that a complete answer to our economic problems can be obtained by increasing the minimum wage as proposed. In fact my primary concern in advocating such legislation is in the fundamental necessity of assuring a living wage, even a minimum living wage, to the great numbers of our people who are now at best merely subsisting. I am primarily determined to try to eliminate privation and want and to enable all our people to live in decency and health. I believe that still further increases in wages, and particularly in the wages of our lowest paid workers, are necessary before the great majority of those dependent on them can live in a manner consistent with decency and self-respect. Few grievances man may suffer are more acutely painful than those of insufficient earnings. In addition to the effects, great and depressing, on the physical well-being of the worker and his family of inadequate earnings, is the pernicious effect of fear and the dangerous effect of resentment. What other feelings can a man have who works at hard labor all day only to find that he has less than enough to feed, clothe, house, and safeguard the health of his family?

To those who cannot see that such fears and resentment can exist in this Nation today, I recommend a reading of the statistical record of the supplemental report of the Senate committee. To those who cannot give the time to such a study, I recommend a reading of the thorough, detailed, and clear speech on minimum wage legislation by our distinguished colleague from California, Representative OUTLAND. Let them consider the fact that the Senate now deems it necessary to raise the salary of Members of Congress from ten thousand to fifteen thousand dollars a year while recognizing that more than 4,000,000 workers are now receiving less than 65 cents an hour for their labor with no guarantee that they will be employed for 52 or 50 weeks in the year. Or recall that only 42,500 workers in industry today receive any kind of guaranteed annual wage. Remember that in the mid-thirties over one-half of our regularly employed labor force suffered from seasonal lay-offs and had no other employment. If you regard that as abnormal, and who can positively assure the worker that it is, take account of the fact that in 1943, in the very midst of our years of greatest productivity, nearly one-fourth of the regularly employed labor force had less than 52 weeks of work. And when a man is earning subsistence wages, the loss of a week's pay can seriously affect the family equilibrium. It has been well and wittily asserted that there are only two occupations which are largely proof against cyclical and seasonal fluctuations, the baking of bread and the building of coffins. Irregularity of employment is the greatest industrial wastes and one of the main causes of social demoralization. Yet in voting a minimum wage we are not guaranteeing the worker a minimum assured income for the year; we are merely assuring him that while he works he will receive not less than a definite hourly rate, one presumably sufficient to sustain him and his family. Can we do less?

We are in a period of expanding production. Our experience must warn us that sufficient purchasing power must be returned to the worker, the consumer, to enable him to purchase what is being produced. This era has been called by management the imperative consumption stage, in which management will operate under the compunction that production is not complete and goods are not sold until they are in consumption or use. We must raise the wages of our lowest paid workers to enable them to buy, to place necessary purchasing power in their hands, and what is more important, to enable them to live in decency and in health. I repeat my insistence that the minimum wage must be raised to 75 cents an hour either immediately or within a few years, and if the latter, it must be guaranteed by our action now.

Mr. President, the issue is presented squarely to us by our veterans who are returning to the labor field after 3 and 4 years' absence. Great numbers of them are being offered jobs which pay less than the proposed minimum. They know that they cannot live as they have the right to live, as all our citizens have the right to live, on the wages they are offered. Many of them are refusing to work at such rates, and are justified in so refusing. Even with a 65-cent minimum the veterans' recompense will be but $26 a week while he works. Many veterans have told me of the discouragement they are experiencing in looking for work which will pay adequately. These men are ready and anxious to work; they are not looking for bonanzas or hand-outs, but they know what it costs to live, and they declare insistently that they are entitled, as every man is, to a living wage.

The opportunity is present for us to dignify the life and extend the possibility of decent living to millions of our people, to do credit to our Nation in its steadfast belief in the dignity of the individual. We have the opportunity to extend to many more American families the ability to buy the necessities of life and to consume what the Nation can produce. We can simultaneously give a boost to our productive capacities and assure that what is produced will be consumed. We can at the same time stimulate our prosperity and safeguard ourselves against a depression. We can give our veterans the minimum assurance that in their work they will receive recompense enough to adequately support themselves and their families. Our workers will benefit and our industry and total economy will benefit. I earnestly hope that this House is anxious to achieve these ends. We are now being tested on our ability to adjust ourselves to the age in which we live, though tardily, but to fail to move forward now is to fail today and to deny hope for tomorrow.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on next Thursday after the legislative business of the day and other special orders heretofore entered for that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BENNET of New York (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts), indefinitely, on account of illness.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 2341. An act to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 32. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against interference by violence, threats, coercion, or intimidation," approved June 18, 1934;

H. R. 2544. An act for the relief of Willie Hines;

H. R. 2954. An act for the relief of John Hamlet;

H. R. 3010. An act for the relief of Mrs. Marie Edens Nast, Mrs. Bessie Amann, and George R. Townsend;

H. R. 3565. An act to authorize the charging of tolls for the passage or transit of Government traffic over the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge;

H. R. 5208. An act for the relief of Michael J. Keaveney and Mary C. Keaveney; and

H. R. 5876. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to extend and renew to Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co. for the term of 10 years a lease to Henry A. Scandrett, Walter J. Cummings, and George I. SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1946

(Legislative day of Tuesday, March 5, 1946)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, in whose peace our restless spirits are quieted, from the flickering torches of our own understanding, we would lift the difficult decisions of the public service unto Thy holy light. In these anxious days when the destinies of nations hang in the balance, the tensions of human relationships are like waters tossed and troubled. Through estranging seas, be Thou our chart and compass:

"Great God of all the earth,
Lead us to know the worth
Of sympathy.
May fellowship increase,
May all contentions cease,
And nations dwell in peace
And unity."

In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, June 25, 1946, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On June 25, 1946:

S. 1857. An act to authorize the availability for certain necessary administrative expenses of appropriations for the Department of the Interior.

On June 26, 1946:

S. 1523. An act to modify the time limitations governing the award of certain military and naval decorations for acts performed during the present war.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has been appointed a member of the commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies. I ask unanimous consent that he may be granted leave of absence from the Senate for such time as may be necessary to consummate that mission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I ask leave to be absent from the Senate for the remainder of the week because of a death in my family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on June 25, 1946, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 2218. An act to amend the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934, as amended; and

S. 2219. An act to extend for the period of 1 year the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, approved December 2, 1941, as amended.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

GRANT OF CERTAIN PROPERTY TO THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation granting certain property to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and relinquishing jurisdiction therein (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Commerce.

PENALTY MAIL MATTER

A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting, pursuant to section 2 (b) of Public Law 364, approved June 28, 1944, a tabulation showing the number of envelopes, labels, and other penalty inscribed material on hand and on order June 30, 1945; the number of pieces procured; the estimated mailings, and the estimated cost, by departments and agencies, for the period July 1 to March 31, 1946 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

INCLUSION OF SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE AS MEMBER OF ADVISORY BOARD OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON, ETC.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide that the Secretary of Agriculture be included as a member of the Advisory Board of the Export-Import Bank of Washington and as a member of the National Advisory Council of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS

Petitions were laid before the Senate and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A telegram in the nature of a petition from Eric Haase, assistant to the president, Association of National Advertisers, New York, N. Y., praying an appropriation of $15,000,000 for censuses of manufactures and business; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A letter in the nature of a petition from P. W. Singer, vice president of Fligelman's, Helena, Mont., relating to the manufacture and price ceilings on long stockings and winter underwear for children; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A resolution adopted by the fifty-first annual convention of the Colorado State Federation of Labor, at Pueblo, Colo., favoring extension of the Office of Price Administration without crippling amendments; ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. HOEY, from the Committee on Immigration:

S. 1607. A bill to provide for the naturalization of Peter Kim; without amendment (Rept. No. 1587).

By Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, from the Committee on Education and Labor:

S. 619. A bill to provide vocational education and retraining, including part-time training and work-experience programs for the occupational adjustment and readjustment of youth and adults, including persons demobilized from essential war work or from the armed services, in order that individuals and the Nation may attain economic stability and security; with amendments (Rept. No. 1588).

REPORTS ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which were referred for examination and recommendation two lists of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States that appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted reports thereon pursuant to law.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GUFFEY (for himself, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. KILGORE, Mr. TUNNELL, and Mr. PEPPER):

S. 2373. A bill to regulate the registration, manufacture, labeling, and inspection of fertilizer and fertilizer materials shipped in interstate commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 2374. A bill authorizing the appointment of three additional judges of the municipal court for the District of Columbia, prescribing the qualifications of appointees to the municipal court and the municipal court of appeals, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado (for Mr. THOMAS of Utah):

S. 2375. A bill to change the name of the Chemical Warfare Service to the Chemical Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BUSHFIELD:

S. 2376. A bill authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Sadie Janis Shorthorn; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

(Mr. MORSE introduced Senate bill (S. 2377) to amend title III of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended, with respect to the naturalization of persons who have served with the armed forces of the United States in overseas theaters, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and appears under a separate heading.)

NATURALIZATION OF PERSONS WHO SERVED IN THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I introduce at this time, although I realize it is late in the session, a bill pertaining to the naturalization of persons who have served in the armed forces, and I ask that the bill be referred to the appropriate committee. I wish to read only one section of the bill:

Persons who have served with the military or naval forces of the United States in overseas theaters and who, having been lawfully admitted to the United States, including its Territories and possessions, shall have been at the time they were accepted for such service residents thereof, may be naturalized under the provisions of this title in the same manner and subject to the same terms and conditions as if such service had been performed in the military or naval forces of the United States.

Mr. President, I should like to say that the bill bears upon a matter of great injustice to a considerable number of people who really have performed very valuable services for the United States during the war, while attached to the naval or military forces, and who in the absence of the enactment of this bill will not be eligible for naturalization.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2377) to amend title III of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended, with respect to the naturalization of persons who have served with the armed forces of the United States in overseas theaters, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

ON THE JOB TRAINING FOR VETERANS—AMENDMENT

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, this morning I attended a conference, together with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], in regard to a bill which I introduced, Senate bill 2144, to authorize the Veterans' Administration to reimburse State and local agencies for expenses incurred in rendering services in connection with the administration of certain training programs for veterans. The bill seeks to authorize the Veterans' Administration to use Veterans' Administration funds for payments to the States for the supervision of so-called on-the-job training for veterans.

In our conference this morning, we agreed upon certain additions and revisions of the bill. I now offer as a substitute a measure sponsored not only by myself and my senior colleague from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], but also by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT]. It is my understanding that, as a substitute, the measure will bear the same number as my previous bill, Senate bill 2144.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute submitted by the Senator from Oregon will be printed as an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to say that it is sincerely to be hoped that immediate consideration will be given to this measure, so that it can be passed before the Congress takes the summer recess, because the need is one of immediate emergency insofar as the veterans are concerned.

COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS BY SENATOR HAWKES AT UNION COLLEGE, SCHENECTADY, N. Y.

[Mr. WILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a commencement address to the graduating class at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., delivered by Senator HAWKES on June 24, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

IMPORTANCE OF AMERICA'S INVESTORS

[Mr. WILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Dr. B. C. Forbes, president of the Investors League, together with an enclosure, which appear in the Appendix.]

ANGLO-AMERICAN COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY—LETTER FROM MAJ. NATHAN RUBY

[Mr. CAPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter to the Secretary of State by Maj. Nathan Ruby, vice president of the Political Action Committee for Palestine, submitting its views and suggestions with regard to the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY NATIONAL CHAIRMAN OF THE AMERICAN VETERANS' COMMITTEE

[Mr. McMAHON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address by Charles G. Bolte, national chairman of the American Veterans' Committee, delivered at the first convention of that organization at Des Moines, Iowa, June 14–16, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

CITIZENS' JUVENILE COUNCIL PLAN—ADDRESS BY CECIL L. WHITEHEAD

[Mr. KNOWLAND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Citizens' Juvenile Council Plan" delivered by Cecil L. Whitehead to the Up-Town Washington Lions Club on June 21, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

LIST OF SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES WHOSE SONS, DAUGHTERS, GRANDSONS, OR SONS-IN-LAW SERVED IN THE ARMED FORCES DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, as secretary of the Congressional War Parents' Association, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD a list of Senators and Representatives who have had sons, daughters, grandsons, or sons-in-law in the armed forces during World War II.

The following list includes the names and information on all the persons who have been reported to date. I ask that if there are any mistakes in the names, the ranks, the service, or in any of the facts as reported in the following list, the Senator or Representative concerned report the correction to Representative FRANCES P. BOLTON, of Ohio, president of the association, or to Senator STYLES BRIDGES, of New Hampshire, secretary of the association, at the earliest possible date.

It is the general plan of the Congressional War Parents' Association to have a formal document prepared that will give a historical picture. In order that the information given in such a formal document be correct, the burden of reporting changes in the following list rests with each Senator or Representative.

I should also like to have any Senator or Representative who has personally served in World War II report his rank, branch of service, and any other pertinent information.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCLUSION OF NEGROES FROM VOTING

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senate's attention to an incident which reflects seriously on the integrity of this body, and which therefore should be thoroughly and quickly investigated. A United Press report which appeared in the New York Times of Sunday, June 23, accuses—and I trust that it is a false accusation—a Member of this body who is now a candidate for reelection, of inciting people in his State to use "any means" to prevent qualified voters of his State from exercising their right to vote for candidates for the United States Senate. This is a serious charge. In the absence of the gentleman whose actions are discussed in this news report, I do not wish to discuss the matter at length at this time. But time is of the essence, since elections are to be held in about 2 weeks. The matter should be quickly and fully investigated by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, so that the Member in question will be given an opportunity to clear his name if the charges are false, and so that no citizens will be deprived of their rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States, if the charges are true. Ours is the duty as well as the privilege of passing on the credentials of our Members, and we cannot disregard charges such as these without a serious loss of prestige. Americans are proud of their country as the world's greatest assemblage of freely elected representatives of the people; indeed, we are inclined to look askance upon other governments of the world whose systems are different from our own. It therefore behooves us jealously to protect our democratic institutions, and to see that full observance is given everywhere to our precious constitutional guaranties, many of which were enacted for the specific purpose of preventing racial discrimination at elections.

For the information of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD the article which appeared in the New York Times of Sunday, June 23.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BILBO URGES MISSISSIPPI MEN TO EMPLOY ANY MEANS TO BAR NEGROES FROM VOTING

JACKSON, MISS., June 22.—Senator THEODORE BILBO of Mississippi demanded tonight that the "red-blooded Anglo-Saxon" men of Mississippi bar Negroes from voting. His demand came a few hours after a Negro Army veteran charged that he had been beaten and flogged by four white men when he sought to register.

In one of his strongest "white supremacy" statements of his current campaign for renomination, Senator BILBO said that if a few Negroes vote in the Democratic primary this year, more would vote in 1947, "and from then on it will grow into a mighty surge."

He called on every "red-blooded Anglo-Saxon man in Mississippi to resort to any means to keep hundreds of Negroes from the polls in the July 2 primary."

"And if you don't know what that means, you are just not up on your persuasive measures," Mr. BILBO added.

Mr. BILBO's speech came after Etoy Fletcher, Army veteran attending Jackson College, a school for Negroes, under the GI bill of rights, charged in an affidavit that he had been seized, flogged, and beaten at Brandon on June 2 when he attempted unsuccessfully to register. His charge was made in an affidavit made public by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in New York.

In his speech, which was broadcast, Mr. BILBO said that the white people of Mississippi were sleeping on a volcano "and it is up to the red-blooded men to do something about it. The white men of this State have a right to resort to any means at their command to stop it."

It is said that the Negro veteran, who served 23 months in the South Pacific, went to the circuit clerk at Brandon on June 2 and asked to be allowed to register. He allegedly was directed to "the gentleman in charge of veterans affairs," on the second floor of the courthouse, where he was told to "get out."

After he left, he said, four men seized him, carried him to some woods, stripped him, and flogged him with a heavy wire cable, and threatened him with death if he made another attempt to register.

The sheriff's office at Brandon and the circuit clerk denied today any knowledge of the affair.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I submit the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 30, 41, 49, 54, 100, 101, 102, 118, 119, 123, 125, 126, 127, 133, 145, 146, 148, 149, 155, 162, 173, 174, 175, 184, 231, 240, 254, 255 and 261.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9, 11, 12, 14, 21, 22, 25, 42, 43, 48, 50, 51, 77, 79, 81, 82, 86, 88, 89, 91, 94, 95, 96, 103, 104, 106, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 122, 124, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 150, 151, 156, 164, 191, 212, 213, 216, 217, 222, 230, 233, 266, 270, 273, 279, 280, 281, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293 and 294, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,298,337"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$263,885"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I think I should make a brief statement with regard to the conference report. There were 295 Senate amendments. The Senate receded from 29, the House from 73, and the House agreed to the amendments of the Senate with further changes in the case of 157. There were 36 amendments in disagreement. Those disagreements have all been adjusted by the House and that is the way the matter now stands.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Has the conference report been signed by all the Senate members of the conference committee?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; it has been signed by all of them.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator tell us how many of the additions to the appropriations made by the Senate were cut down in conference?

Mr. HAYDEN. The original Budget estimate was $350,357,230. The House passed the bill carrying $179,426,847. The Senate bill carried a total of $341,890,763, or about $8,000,000 under the Budget. The bill comes back from conference under the Budget estimate by $103,190,194.

Mr. TAFT. What is the total amount of the bill as agreed upon in conference?

Mr. HAYDEN. The total is $247,161,000.

Mr. TAFT. Two hundred and forty-seven million, as contrasted with $341,000,000 as passed by the Senate?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. I think the House must have done a very good job in conference.

Mr. HAYDEN. It should make those gentlemen who feel that expenditures for the development of the natural resources of our country, particularly in the western part of the United States, are unwise and unnecessary, very happy that these reductions have been made.

I should like to point out one other thing with respect to this conference report. As will be remembered, there was considerable controversy in the Senate with respect to transmission lines. We made a very satisfactory adjustment with the House in that regard. First, as to the Bonneville project, the acquisition of certain lines which was prohibited by the House was allowed in conference.

Second, as to the Davis Dam on the Colorado River, the House denied any money for transmission lines. They were allowed in conference.

With respect to the Central Valley project in California concerning which we had a good deal of discussion here, as may be remembered, the way the bill now stands there is appropriated an additional sum of money for transmission lines. The power will not be disposed of to only one possible purchaser at the Shasta substation, as was originally proposed by the Senate, but will be carried down to Sacramento from Oroville and on to Tracy. There will be a Government transmission line to carry the power down to pump the water for the farmers of the Central Valley project in California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield

Mr. KNOWLAND. Is that the line on the east side of the Sacramento River?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. The House would not agree to a transmission line on the west side of the Sacramento Valley and insisted it was not necessary at this time, but, under the conference report, the farmers in the valley are assured of transmission lines that will bring the power from the dam to pump the water.

The House also denied any transmission lines in the Fort Peck project in Montana. That item, however, was agreed to in conference.

The same is true with respect to the Missouri River transmission lines. That proposal was specifically denied by the House but was agreed to in conference. Those lines were insisted upon, it will be remembered, by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and his colleague [Mr. BUTLER].

I can report that so far as transmission lines are concerned, they have all been restored as requested by the Bureau of the Budget. In addition there is specific mention of the acquisition of a transmission line by the Southwestern Power Administration.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Does that also include the Bonneville project transmission lines?

Mr. HAYDEN. It includes the Bonneville transmission lines. If the Senator will examine the report, he will see that while they were originally denied by the House, they were agreed to in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message showing the action of the House on certain amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 6335, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
June 25, 1946.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 17, 53, 58, 78, 80, 90, 92, 98, 105, 114, 116, 159, 234, 238 242 256 265, 274, 285, and 295 to the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment strike out "$173,000" and insert "$150,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 18 of the matter insert by said Senate engrossed amendment strike out "$449,516" and insert "$400,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 9 of the matter inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment strike out "$50,000" and insert "$12,956";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment insert "$514,500; for payment of a salary of $5 per diem while actually employed and for the payment of necessary travel expenses, exclusive of subsistence, of members of advisory committees of local stockmen, $35,500; in all, $550,00";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment strike out "$100,000" and insert "$125,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment strike out "$50,000" and insert "$40,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$3,023,800";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$3,700,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: On page 34 of the House engrossed bill, in line 4, strike out "and fifty";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment strike out "to any individual";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 166 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"For purposes of effecting settlement of war veterans on public land reclamation projects and to provide facilities for veteran employment in construction and operation of reclamation projects, the Bureau of Reclamation is hereby authorized to acquire by transfer without exchange of funds from the War Assets Administration or other Federal agency in responsible charge and such agencies are directed to transfer the lands, improvements, buildings, furnishings, and equipment acquired by the War Relocation Authority and declared surplus on the War Relocation Centers on the Heart Mountain Division of the Shoshone project, Wyoming, the Minidoka (hunt) project, Idaho, and the Tulelake Division of the Klamath project, California; and on the former prisoner of war camp at Indianola, Nebr.: Provided, That said lands, improvements, buildings, furnishings, and equipment shall be made available under regulations of the Secretary of the Interior to veteran settlers and nonprofit organizations and otherwise in accordance with the provisions of Senate Report No. 1412, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session: Provided further, That the War Assets Administration is authorized and directed to transfer to the Bureau of Reclamation funds required for maintenance and protection of the transferred property pending its final disposition."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 239 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$1,330,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 272 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$200,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 276 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment, strike out "$142,400" and insert "$71,200";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 277 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"For salaries and expenses of three municipal experts, to be appointed by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, to make a study of, and report to said committees on, the fiscal affairs of the municipality of St. Croix, V. I., $6,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate agree en bloc to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 5, 6, 18, 19, 20, 85, 87, 115, 141, 166, 239, 272, 276, and 277.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered as stated by the Senator from Arizona are agreed to en bloc.

Mr. HAYDEN. As to one of these amendments, No. 141, which was legislative in character, as a number of them were, I desire to place in the RECORD an excerpt from the hearings on the bill and to make a statement of my own, including citations to certain statutes.

For more than 30 years I have been intimately acquainted as a Member of the House and Senate with all legislation relating to the irrigation of arid lands and the incidental development of hydroelectric power and I do not hesitate to assert that Congress has never intended to make any practical distinction between water users' associations and irrigation districts, nowithstanding the fact that the latter are municipal corporations and therefore tax exempt.

In proof of this assertion I submit a list of numerous acts of Congress passed during my service which couple associations and districts on terms of equality. It was just common sense on the part of Congress to show no preference because each form of organization serves the same purpose insofar as both the Government and the water users are concerned. I ask that the list of statutes be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Reference is to statutes re power revenues, not necessarily to water users' associations.

Mr. HAYDEN. The text of the amendment as amended by the House and agreed to in conference together with extracts from the record made before the Senate Committee on Appropriations are as follows:

Utilization of power revenues: No power revenues on any project shall be distributed as profits before or after retirement of the project debt, and nothing contained in any previous appropriation act shall be deemed to have authorized such distribution: Provided, That the application of such revenues to the cost of operation, maintenance, and debt service of the irrigation system of the project, or to other purposes in aid of such irrigation system, shall not be construed to be such a distribution.

EXPLANATION OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT

This amendment is declaratory of existing law, but removes any doubt as to the intended effect of section 4 (I) of the Second Deficiency Act of 1924 (act of Dec. 5, 1924, ch. 4, 43 Stat. 703; 43 U. S. C. 501), as to the status of power revenues on projects turned over by the United States to the water users' organizations for operation and maintenance. This statute reads:

"SUBSEC. I. Profits from projects taken over by water users: That whenever the water users take over the care, operation, and maintenance of a project, or a division of a project, the total accumulated net profits, as determined by the Secretary, derived from the operation of project power plants, leasing or project grazing and farm lands, and the sale or use of town sites shall be credited to the construction charge of the project, or a division thereof, and thereafter the net profits from such sources may be used by the water users to be credited annually, first, on account of project construction charge; second, on account of project operation and maintenance charge; and third, as the water users may direct. No distribution to individual water users shall be made out of any such profits before all obligations to the Government shall have been fully paid."

It is the intent of the reclamation laws that the power revenues shall be applied for project purposes and not distributed as profits to any individual before or after the United States has been repaid its investment. The application of the power revenues to reduce the cost of water service is one of the uses intended by the Congress of the power produced as an incident to the operation of a reclamation project. No discrimination is intended by the statutes in this respect between projects operated by the United States, those operated by irrigation districts, and those operated by water users' associations or other types of water users' organizations. The reclamation laws speak throughout of all three types of projects, collectively and indiscriminately. The proposed amendment removes any doubt as to this intent, arising from the language of the cited Appropriation Act.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY NATIONAL RECLAMATION ASSOCIATION, DENVER, COLO., NOVEMBER 16, 1945

RESOLUTION NO. 11

Whereas the intent of the reclamation laws is to accord equal treatment to every type of water users' organization, and there should be no discrimination, under any Federal statute, between irrigation districts, water users' associations, mutual ditch companies, and other types of water users' organizations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That in view of that intent, the reclamation laws and other Federal statutes should be clarified where necessary to insure that the application of water revenues and power revenues to repaying the cost of construction, to pay operation and maintenance expenses, and otherwise to reduce the cost of water to the farmer on a reclamation project by whatever type of organization it is operated, does not constitute a dividend or distribution of such revenues, but a proper disposition of the resources of a multiple-purpose project, as intended by Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the officers and appropriate committees of the National Reclamation Association are instructed to present and endeavor to secure the adoption of clarifying legislation to the foregoing effect.

Mr. GOSSETT subsequently said: Mr. President, I was detained in a meeting of the Committee on Commerce when the vote was taken on the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill, and I wish to state that I favor the conference report bill. However, I wish to call attention to one item in the bill which will be contrary to the principles of sound administration.

I refer to the Anderson Ranch Dam project in my own State. The Bureau of the Budget recommended $2,847,000 for this project, but this was cut to $1,234,475 by the House. The full amount was restored in the Senate, but the conferees have settled upon the House figure.

This particular project is 75 percent complete, and a force of 800 men is now at work. If the figure as passed by the Senate had been agreed upon by the conferees, the dam could have been completed during the fall of this year.

The project on June 30 will have exhausted its 1946 fiscal year funds. It will require about half of the $1,234,475 now contained in this bill to continue payments on previous commitments to complete turbine and generator construction. That will leave only about $600,000 to continue work, and that will mean the project will shut down in August.

I am informed that this is the only project nearing completion which will have to shut down completely. A shutdown will mean that the Government will keep a great deal of money tied up in expensive machinery which must remain idle until more funds are appropriated. If the money were appropriated to finish the dam proper, this machinery could be sold and used on other construction work where it is badly needed.

Had I been present, I would have voted for the conference report, but I should like to serve notice that an effort will be made to obtain additional funds up to the amount of the Budget Bureau's approval in a deficieny appropriation bill, which will probably come before the Senate next week.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 896. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended," approved January 24, 1942, and for other purposes; and

S. 2122. An act to facilitate the admission into the United States of the alien fiancées or fiancés of members of the armed forces of the United States.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATON ACTS OF 1942—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consider the conference report on House bill 6042, to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the conference report.

(See conference report printed in full in the RECORD of June 25, 1946, pp. 7443–7447.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, mechanically the procedure will be that we will have an opportunity to vote for or against the conference report?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Then, if the report shall be agreed to, that will conclude its consideration, and if it shall not be agreed to, other motions can be made, for instructions to the conferees, and the like?

Mr. BARKLEY. Other motions can be made, including a motion to send the report back with instructions.

Mr. WHERRY. That is what I mean.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] is necessarily absent.

The Senators from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO and Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the Commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent on official business attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] is absent by leave of the Senate, being a member of a committee designated by the Senate to attend the atomic bombing at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] are absent on official business, being members of the Commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Chair will ask the Senator from Kentucky to yield for a moment, in order that the Chair may make a statement. A parliamentary inquiry was made a moment ago, and the Chair now wishes to state the parliamentary situation.

The question is on agreeing to the report, which question is debatable.

Inasmuch as the House has already agreed to the report, and its conferees thereby discharged, a motion to recommit the conference report is not in order. It cannot be amended, and must be accepted or rejected in its entirety.

If the report is agreed to, no further legislative step is required.

If it is rejected, a motion that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and ask a further conference with the House is in order.

A motion to instruct the conferees would be in order after the foregoing motion is agreed to, and before the conferees are actually named by the Presiding Officer.

The Chair feels that that statement of the parliamentary situation should be made to the Senate at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief factual statement concerning the conference report which is now before the Senate. Before discussing the report itself I wish to state that this legislation has received as studious and careful consideration by the two Houses of Congress and by the Banking and Currency Committees of the two Houses as any legislation which has been before Congress in a long time. Everyone recognized the complications, the difficulties and the annoyances growing out of controls and regulations affecting the lives and the business and the habits of 140,000,000 people. Everyone recognized that, with the war having terminated, impatience with these restrictions naturally increased, as well as the natural desire of our people, whether in business, or professions, or on farms, whether producers or consumers, to resume as soon as possible the natural methods by which business is normally transacted. Yet, I think the country as a whole recognized that we could not, without incurring great dangers, lift these regulations and restrictions all at once, and that there must, if possible, be worked out a tapering-off process by which we could finally reach the period when all controls might be eliminated without too great risk of danger to our economic system, without too great encouragement of inflationary increases in the price of products and without repeating, or insofar as possible without incurring the danger of repeating, the disastrous consequences that followed World War I.

Hearings began in the House Committee on Banking and Currency, I believe, back in February. They were very exhaustive hearings in which everyone was allowed to tell his story, not only for or against the continuation of these controls, but to tell his story with respect to how they had affected his own business or his own affairs.

The bill came over to the Senate, and hearings were begun in the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency on the second day of May. They were continued for more than 3 weeks, during which time no one was denied the right to be heard, no matter what his position was or what he advocated.

I stated a moment ago that I thought the hearings in the House began in February. The record of the hearings shows that the hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House began on the 18th of February and continued until the 19th of March. Hearings before the Senate committee began on April 15 and continued until the 10th of May. The Senate committee hearings comprise two volumes. I mention these facts to show the meticulous care and industry which were devoted to this legislation, regardless of what anyone may think of the result of the deliberations.

After the hearings were concluded some complaint was raised that Congress had delayed too long in bringing this legislation to a culmination. Perhaps so; but, inasmuch as the hearings in the House began in February and continued for a month so as to allow everyone his day in court, and the hearings before the Senate committee began as soon as the bill came to us and extended over a period of 3 weeks or more, so as to allow everyone his day in court before the Senate committee, it certainly shows that the Senate and the House, as well as the two responsible committees, were anxious to get at the facts as fairly and as accurately as it was humanly possible in a controversial situation which has aroused passions, emotions, hatred, and denunciation. The committees and the conferees have come through a maze of antagonism and controversy to the point where we now are. We present to the Senate a bill which does not altogether satisfy anyone, but which, in the democratic process of give and take, is the result of consideration of every viewpoint presented to the committees charged with responsibility to the Congress. I am prepared to say—and I say it with as much earnestness as I can command—that notwithstanding its imperfections, notwithstanding that no one would have written the bill just as it is if he had been commissioned to do it, in my judgment we have produced the best bill possible under the circumstances which existed, in the atmosphere in which we were compelled to legislate upon the subject.

With that preliminary statement, I wish briefly to describe what we have done. When the Senate passed the bill it struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted in lieu thereof an amendment which constituted an entirely new bill. There were many major differences, both as to form and substance, between the House bill and the Senate amendment. The conference report, of course, is based upon both the House bill and the Senate amendment. In a few cases substantially identical provisions were contained in the House bill and in the Senate amendment, and those provisions are now contained in the conference report. In those respects in which the Senate amendment differed from the House, the conference report for the most part follows the Senate amendment, both as to form and substance.

There are only about five differences of major importance between the bill as it passed the Senate and the conference report. Probably only one of those differences can be said to be of primary importance.

The Senate provisions relating to the removal of maximum prices were modified so as to eliminate the specific provision for the immediate removal of price control from meat, poultry, dairy products, tobacco, and petroleum. That is the major difference, I should say, between the Senate bill and the conference report, and it was the major difference between the House bill and the Senate amendment before the conference report was agreed to.

Secondly, the amount made available for subsidies was reduced from $1,100,000,000, provided under the Senate amendment, to an even $1,000,000,000; and the general termination date for subsidies was changed in the conference report from May 1, as in the Senate bill, to April 1, 1947.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. Is not the subsidy provided for stripper wells continued?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I shall come to that a little later.

Third, the provision of the Senate bill, usually referred to as the Wherry amendment, which required that maximum prices must be fixed so as to return to the distributors, wholesalers, and retailers their prewar discounts or mark-ups, was modified so as to provide that the discount or mark-up which must be allowed shall be that which prevailed on January 1, 1946, rather than that which prevailed before the war.

I may say in that connection that I believe it was demonstrated to the conference that many merchants and distributors, whether retailers or wholesalers, would find it difficult at this time to ascertain just what their mark-ups and discounts may have been prior to the war. Inasmuch as most of the increases in wages which have taken place have occurred since the 1st of January, the conferees felt that January 1 was the more equitable date, and one more easily administered, than to go back before the war and try to provide that the same conditions which prevailed then—in many cases unascertainable—should govern in fixing the formula for prices with respect to the subjects treated in the Wherry amendment.

Fourth, the provision of the Senate amendment, usually referred to as the Taft amendment, which established for manufacturers and processors a pricing formula based upon their October 1941 prices increased by the weighted average per unit increase in cost of production since October 1941, was extended so as to include producers along with manufacturers and processors. Senators will recall that under that amendment, which was adopted on the floor of the Senate, the words "manufacturers" and "processors" were used, but the word "producers" was not included. The conferees extended the provision to include producers, so as to make it certain that it would include farmers as well as manufacturers and processors, a farmer being technically neither a manufacturer nor a processor. It would include also producers of petroleum who may be neither manufacturers nor processors, and it would also cover coal as well as petroleum and agricultural products.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that the farmer would not be included, either as a manufacturer or processor?

Mr. BARKLEY. There was doubt whether the word "processor" would apply to a farmer. But when we added the word "producer" we made it certain that the provision would include a farmer.

Mr. WHERRY. So the farmer is now included.

Mr. BARKLEY. The farmer is included in the provisions of the amendment. That is practically the only extent to which the amendment was changed in the conference.

Fifth, the portion of the bill as passed by the Senate which provided that the Price Administrator could not institute any enforcement proceedings unless the institution of such proceedings was approved by the appropriate United States district attorney was eliminated in the conference. That amendment was offered on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], as will be recalled. The conferees felt that in view of the fact that the district attorney has his office at a central point in the district which he is serving, and in view of the fact that the amendment would apply as well to the institution of any civil process, as well as the institution of a criminal prosecution, it would handicap the enforcement of the price-control program to require every time, before any legal proceeding could be had, that the district attorney be consulted. The House conferees were very much against such a requirement, and the Senate conferees yielded on it.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I wish to express regret that that provision was removed, because I think one of the greatest abuses in the administration of the OPA, I say to the Senator from Kentucky, has been the prosecution end or the clause of the OPA Act which imposes a minimum fine of $25 upon any violator, regardless of whether the violation is willful, regardless of whether it is committed because of a mistake, and even though it occurs as the result of an absolute intent to comply with the law. The OPA still fines such persons that minimum amount. In my State recently, in Hardy County, three merchants who had acted in the utmost good faith were fined $25 minimum each, although it was admitted that they had not willfully broken the law.

If those cases could have gone into the hands of the district attorney he could have passed on them in an adequate and proper way, and would not have fined people who were not willful violators.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I appreciate that situation, and I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. Of course, the Senator from West Virginia realizes that when there is a complicated piece of legislation, such as that which is before us and when there are differences between the positions taken on it by the two Houses, neither House can always have its own way, and concessions must be made. This was one of the concessions we had to make. I say to the Senator that, on the whole, the theory of the Senate bill, with the exception of the specific decontrols with which all of us are familiar, and the philosophy and almost the text of the Senate bill are preserved in the conference report to as great an extent as in the case of any conference report with which I have been familiar in recent years.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Of course the amendment with regard to the $25 fine which the Senate added to the bill is retained on page 12, in section 12, where we find the following:

Provided, however, That such amount—

That is to say, the penalty—

shall be the amount of the overcharge or overcharges if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation, order, or price schedule in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation."

If he proves that, he is liable only for the amount of the overcharge.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was about to say that the House accepted the Senate language with respect to the matter discussed by the Senator from West Virginia, but would not accept the Senate provision that before anything could be done the district attorney would have to be consulted. I think, however, the language of the Senate provision amply protects the individual against abuse, because we have written a new standard by which these proceedings shall be instituted and conducted.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me once more?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I am indeed glad to know that the Senate amendment was kept in the measure in respect to protecting those who do not willfully violate the law. I am glad to have that provision included. But at the same time I think it is regrettable that the district attorney, a fixed Federal Government official, cannot pass upon the question whether the offense is such and is so willful that the person committing it should be prosecuted. I think the greatest abuses which have occurred in connection with the administration of the act have been particularly in respect to punishing innocent people and harassing them with fines. I hope that the language which was accepted by the conferees will relieve that situation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Ohio has called attention to the proviso in section 12. I now read it for the first time. It seems to me that it constitutes a complete reversal of the accepted procedure in proceedings against any defendant. The proviso requires the defendant to prove his innocence rather than to require the prosecutor to prove the defendant's guilt. It reads as follows:

Provided, however, That such amount shall be the amount of the overcharge or overcharges if the defendant proves that the violation of the regulation, order, or price schedule in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation.

It seems to me that the prosecutor should be required to prove the willful character of the overcharge.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the procedure has been that the Government must prove that there was a violation. Under the law as originally written when a violation, whether willful or otherwise, was proved, there could be assessed triple damages, and so forth, and a minimum fine of $50. We have modified that from time to time because of complaints which the committee and the Congress thought were justified. After the Government has proved the violation, then it is a defense, so far as this language is concerned, to show that the violation was not willful and that the person who is charged with the violation resorted to all practicable means to avoid a violation of the law. In my judgment, the provision does not really reverse the course of procedure.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to do so, I should like to make this comment: I find from my experience and from statements which have been made to me and from letters which I have received that one of the primary sources of criticism of the OPA has been the result of what might often be termed the unintelligent attempt of OPA to punish for violations which obviously were not willful. In case after case merchants who made mistakes in the marking of price tags upon commodities have been prosecuted and punished as a result. That sort of thing has been one of the principal sources of the accumulating criticism of OPA. I certainly hope that if this conference report is adopted, those who are in charge of the OPA in Washington and throughout the country will recognize the fact that wholesale prosecutions should not be undertaken, that no case should be taken into court, no assessment should be made, unless the OPA has definite evidence that the defendant charged was in fact a chiseler, not an innocent violator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's comment. All of us have received such complaints, and we have tried to deal with them. Naturally, in the institution of a new agency, such as the Office of Price Administration, which was a new venture, it is inevitable that inexperienced and overenthusiastic people be drawn together in connection with the enforcement. The truth is that we have never given the OPA a sufficient amount of money for enforcement to enable it adequately to cover the entire country with respect to such matters. It may be that on that account the OPA has been led into the error of seeking to make examples of individual cases, so as to have a deterrent effect upon others. But I hope that with this language in the bill for the remaining year of the operation of OPA, there will be no cause for any justified complaint upon that score.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I do not wish to dwell on the point; but because of the possible judicial interpretation which may flow from the measure which we are about to enact, I wish to say that I think the Senator from Wyoming has raised a very sound point. We should not overlook the fact that in this bill we are dealing with a proposed law that has criminal penalties within it. As I understand it, the conference report now proposes that a burden of proof in establishing the innocence of the defendant shall be placed upon the defendant. No longer shall he be entitled to the presumption of innocence until proved guilty by the Government. I admit that relieving the Government from proving the guilt of the defendant beyond a question of a doubt and the taking away from the defendant of the protection of the presumption of innocence is contrary to basic guaranties of American criminal jurisprudence. I assert that the language of the conference bill in respect to this problem cannot be reconciled with constitutional rights of American citizens when accused of crime.

I submit, as a matter of law, that once we take away the purely mala prohibita features of this act and say by statute that the punishment shall be based only on a willful violation of the act, under our law we cannot put the burden of proof on the defendant to establish his innocence. I believe that, unless the OPA follows the suggestion which the Senator from Wyoming has made, namely, that it will not proceed with prosecution or, rather, that it will itself assume the burden of proof of establishing guilt the courts of this land will be bound to declare at least this part of the enforcement section of the bill unconstitutional. I do not believe that under American law we can now include in the statute the requirement that there shall be placed upon the defendant the burden of proving that he was not guilty of a willful violation. I make these statements at this time because I think the courts are entitled to notice in this debate as to the intent of the Senate when it passes this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the suggestions, and I am sure the Administrator will take note of them in administering the new act.

Mr. President, one of the principal differences between the two Houses related to the length of time for which the Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act were to be extended. The House provided for an extension until March 31, 1947, and the Senate provided for an extension until June 30, 1947. The Senate date was approved by the conference.

In both bills there was a declaration of policy. Both the House bill and the Senate amendment added a new section 1A to the Price Control Act. This section, particularly in the Senate bill, was of considerable length and related to a number of matters concerning the purposes and policies with respect to stabilization and price control to be followed during the interim period. The first part of this section contained a declaration of policy. The declaration of policy agreed upon in conference is that which was contained in the Senate bill, practically without change. Decontrol provisions were provided in both bills.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I believe that it might be well to emphasize that the declaration of policy puts the emphasis upon production as the answer to inflation

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator speak a little louder?

Mr. MLLIKIN. I believe that most of us will agree that production is the answer to inflation, and that we double riveted it with what I believe is a very strong declaration of policy to that effect. We include in the declaration of policy the statement that adequate prices are essential to the securing of adequate production.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator for his statement. As I have already said, the declaration of policy contained in the Senate bill was accepted by the conferees on behalf of the House; and, if I may say so, with some admiration, they felt that we had written a better declaration of policy than was contained in the House bill. We did emphasize the essentiality of production, and in that declaration of policy we linked pricing with production so that they might go along together with whatever effect they might have on production, so that even before the year has expired, during which the law will operate, production may be so increased as to reach a point where decontrol will take place as rapidly as possible.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment contained provisions relating to the removal of price controls. The House bill provided, in the case of nonagricultural commodities, that price control should be removed when the production of the commodity for the past 12 months equals or exceeds the production of the same commodity for the period from July 1, 1940, to June 30, 1941.

In the case of agricultural commodities, the House bill contained a sort of double-barreled provision, to the effect that controls should be removed when the production of a commodity for the past 12 months equals or exceeds the production during the period from July 1, 1940, to June 30, 1941, and also provided that controls should be removed from an agricultural commodity whenever the supply of the commodity was equal to the domestic consumption.

Of course, that situation would always be true. It is true now. We can consume only as much as we supply. Therefore, if the decontrol of an agricultural product depended on consumption and producing balancing from day to day, that condition would exist. Obviously, we cannot consume any more than is supplied. In the Senate bill we provided, both as to agriculture and nonagricultural commodities, a general standard for removing controls so that controls will be eliminated when the supply of a commodity is in balance with the demand for the commodity.

Mr. President, there is a great deal of difference between demand and consumption, because demand may go far beyond consumption. It is true at the present time that demand is going far beyond consumption, because commodities are in short supply and, therefore, cannot be obtained. Notwithstanding the excess of demand over the ability to obtain and consume, the Senate amendment also provided that the controls should be removed before December 31, 1946, in case of all commodities which are not important in relation to the cost of living or business costs. The Senate amendment also contained requirements for the removal of price controls on or before June 30, 1946, in the case of specific commodities which were referred to earlier, such as meats, livestock, poultry, dairy, tobacco, and petroleum.

The Senate amendment also provided for the establishment of an independent Price Decontrol Board to review actions of the Price Administrator and the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to the removal of maximum prices in the case of particular commodities. The House bill contained no comparable provision. The agreement reached in conference follows the provisions of the Senate bill relating to decontrol in all respects, except as to the mandatory provisions for the immediate decontrol of certain specific commodities.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. I observe that in connection with petitions for the decontrol of commodities, it is provided that they shall be filed under regulations to be prescribed by the Administrator himself. So the Director would have to abide by his regulations in determining the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have provided that industry committees may make application not only to the Secretary of Agriculture, in regard to agricultural products, but to the Administrator in regard to nonagricultural products, and that the Administrator shall be required to act promptly upon the matter. If he does not act within a certain length of time—60 days, as I recall—the decontrol board may move in and, in cases where the Administrator does act, the committee will have the right to appeal to the decontrol board from the decision of the Administrator, or the decision of the Secretary of Agriculture, as the case may be. Of course, regulations would have to be established by the Administrator with respect to procedure after the matter had been brought to his attention. It would be utterly impossible to write those regulations into the law.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. We had a great deal of discussion about that subject in the committee. In fact, I myself was somewhat dubious as to whether that power to make regulations should exist. But it became apparent that there had to be certain forms to be followed which would not substantively affect the rights of the petitioner. I believe that we all agreed in the committee that the Price Administrator should not have the power by regulations to affect the substantive rights of the petitioner. Am I correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is absolutely correct, and inasmuch as the Senator from Colorado has made that contribution to the discussion of the decontrol board, I wish to say that no member of the Committee on Banking and Currency worked harder or more effectively in perfecting the process by which we set up this new board, in an effort to secure prompt action on the part of the Administrator and the Secretary, than the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I appreciate the compliment. I do not know whether it is quite in order, but I wish the distinguished majority leader would exercise his great abilities and influence in seeing that we have a real board. I think that if he would busy himself on that subject we would have a board which would be constructive. On the other hand, it is conceivable that we might have a board which would add nothing whatever to what we are trying to do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I have no idea whether I will be influential in any respect, either proximately or remotely, in regard to the setting up of the Board, but I certainly share the hope that it will be completely independent. We have provided that it shall be completely divorced from the Price Administration and the Secretary of Agriculture. The members of the Board are to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and that is as far as we can go in divorcing the Board from either agency and making it independent.

I should certainly think it most unfortunate if a Board were appointed to perform this important function which was not truly representative of the people but was subservient to any agency or department of the Government. I might add that I think the Congress would have been well advised if it had had the foresight in the beginning to create such a Board. We did not do it; we are doing it now, as the activity is tapering off, but I think it is worth while even in the closing days of the OPA to set up this Board.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I understand that while I was out of the Chamber the Senator discussed briefly the amendment I offered, which was deleted by the conferees.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I called attention to it as one of the provisions of the Senate bill on which the conferees of the Senate were compelled to yield. The House conferees felt that, in view of the fact that the district attorney has his office generally in a central location within the district he serves, and that most of the proceedings are required to be initiated in the various sections of such district, it would handicap the enforcement of the remaining powers of the Office of Price Administration to require in every case that the district attorney should give his consent before any sort of proceeding, either criminal or civil, should be instituted. Therefore, the House conferees would not recede from their opposition.

I also stated that the language of the Senate bill with respect to the modification of the penalties assessed in cases where there was a violation which was not willful, or where the person involved had exercised ordinary diligence in undertaking to adhere to the law, was retained in the bill, and would no doubt be helpful in minimizing any injustices that might occur during the remaining life of the act.

Mr. LUCAS. Did the Senate conferees struggle very hard for my amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. We "rassled" with Jacob considerably. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCAS. I rather gathered from the explanation of my good friend, the majority leader, that when the House conferees said they would not take the amendment, the Senate conferees just gave up.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has no right to assume, from my discussion of the matter, that the House conferees just said, "We won't agree," and that we caved in at once. It did not occur in that way at all.

Mr. LUCAS. I know how sincere and how convincing my able friend always is in anything about which he is vitally concerned, and of course I know he did the best he could with my amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB], during the colloquy, expressed his regret that that provision was eliminated, and in reply I stated that I had supported the amendment on the floor of the Senate and that it was a good amendment, and therefore the Senate conferees insisted as much as they could reasonably be expected to insist, recognizing the fact that we could not get everything in the bill that we were advocating on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate that fact, and I understand that in reaching conference agreements there always must be a considerable amount of compromise.

I merely wish to repeat what I said when the amendment was adopted by the Senate, when there did not appear to be very much opposition to it, and everyone to whom I talked about it seemed to believe it was a very good amendment. In my judgment, one of the real reasons why we are discussing OPA as we are today has been the faulty administration of the enforcement division of OPA. Had the Congress placed the enforcement policy in the hands of the United States district attorneys throughout the country in the beginning, I am satisfied in my own mind, from what I personally know of what has happened in my own State, that we would not have been having the trouble with the OPA we are having at this very moment. I regret very much that the amendment was deleted. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for doing what he could to keep it in.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's feeling about it.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield for a moment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I feel very much as the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from West Virginia have exressed themselves in regard to the loss of the amendment just discussed. I wish to ask the majority leader whether in conference the question was considered of putting the burden of proof on the prosecutor to prove that a violation was a willful violation, or resulted from the failure to take practical precautions, rather than leaving on the defendant the burden of proving himself innocent. I think it is quite important to know what the conference did in regard to that subject.

Mr. BARKLEY. That matter was discussed. Of course, there was no comparable provision on the subject in the bill as it passed the House. The matter was discussed thoroughly. Of course, we did not spend a full day on it.

Mr. HAWKES. The conferees could not do that, of course.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; but it was discussed, and the opinion was expressed not only on the part of the House conferees, but on the part of others who were in consultation with respect to it, that to require the Government to prove willful conduct, to prove positively and affirmatively that a merchant did not exercise ordinary diligence, would make enforcement impossible. Such things are matters of intent, and sometimes intent must be drawn from conduct. That is true in criminal prosecutions, as a rule. Some things are presumed to be willful. It depends on the circumstances.

We did not change the Senate provision in conference. Wherever a violation is shown, even under circumstances where willfulness might be assumed, where the defendant might prove that it it was not willful, or that he exercised ordinary diligence in trying to comply with the law, this provision would apply. It is not true that this language reverses the process of prosecutions or procedure against anyone.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may make an observation to the distinguished Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It was the theory of Congress, during the earlier years of OPA, that the penalty for violations should be automatic, in the same sense that if a man drives on the left-hand side of the street, no matter why he is doing it, he has committed an offense.

Mr. HAWKES. If I may interject there—even if he be an Englishman? [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKIN. Even if he be an Englishman. So it was thought that although the Radcliffe amendment to the bill, which gives the defendant a chance to show that his act was not willful, was not complete relief from the viewpoint of many of us, it did nevertheless represent a distinct improvement over the prior more or less automatic punishment theory.

Mr. BARKLEY. And, also, this language was the language of the Senate bill.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And it was retained as the Senate passed it.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, may I make just one remark?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. If what the conference has done and if what is being said on the floor of the Senate at the present time results in the OPA and the prosecutors understanding that we are not trying to ascertain how many people we can convict in the United States, but are trying to get results out of the law for the benefit of all the people, then I say the conference has done a good job—if that is the result.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would not undertake to be the spokesman for the OPA, but I think the intent of Congress is very clear.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. I merely wanted to comment on that unusual provision, that when a charge is made against a man with respect to violation of law, it is not necessary to charge a willful violation of the law. If so it would be incumbent on the prosecution to establish willfulness. A defendant has the chance to come in and show his action was not willful, but that it was the result of a mistake.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whatever may be its defects, it was the language of the Senate committee bill, and was not changed on the floor of the Senate, and the House accepted it.

Mr. MOORE. I should say the Senate was pretty careless when it accepted it.

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be. Now I wish to continue and conclude my remarks.

FUNCTIONS OF THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

This new section 1A as it was contained in the Senate bill included a number of provisions relating to the functions to be performed by the Secretary of Agriculture in connection with the administration of price control as to agricultural commodities. These provisions, in effect, gave the Secretary of Agriculture full responsibility as to price control in this field. These provisions are included in the conference report just as they were in the Senate bill.

In other words, the Secretary of Agriculture, under the Senate bill, has full control over whether there shall be decontrol of agricultural products—and agricultural products include livestock, poultry and dairy products—as well as tobacco, which, of course, by the Senate bill was also decontrolled specifically. It does not include, of course, petroleum. But personally I have no doubt in my mind that that matter will be promptly attended to so that there will be no injustice resulting by reason of its elimination from this bill.

I might at this point say that in regard to the subsidy on petroleum the conferees recognized that if the subsidy is completely removed at once from what are called stripper wells they would be required to rely upon the willingness of the purchasers of oil to increase their price sufficiently to absorb the subsidy, and therefore we provided that the subsidy on stripper wells may continue, even though price ceilings are removed, during the life of the subsidies, which is to the 1st of next April.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. That would mean, then, that if by chance the Administrator should decontrol oil, these subsidies could continue for a year?

Mr. BARKLEY. They might continue. Of course, the difficulty is, as the Senator, I am sure, knows——

Mr. MOORE. They would continue?

Mr. BARKLEY. They might continue as long as subsidies were paid generally—that is, to the first of next April. The reason for that, I will say to the Senator—and I am aware that he knows much more about the oil business than I do—that stripper wells, once they are closed, are rarely reopened. There are thousands of wells in the country which produce from 1 to 3 or 4 barrels of oil. If they cannot produce that oil at a price which would justify their operation, they close down, and when they are closed down they rarely reopen. In order that they might have this period within which to readjust their prices with the purchasers, which are usually the large oil companies, we felt that we were justified in saying that, notwithstanding price control might be withdrawn from the oil produced, there might be continued on stripper wells a subsidy which would give them a breathing spell in which the price of their oil could be adjusted.

Mr. MOORE. Was not quite an emphatic gesture made toward declaring a policy there for subsidy payments on wells—if we want to use the word "wells"—when they can no longer be economically operated?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think so at all. The purpose was simply to give the smaller wells, which have no control over their prices—for the price they receive for their oil is the price that is fixed by the large oil-purchasing companies—a breathng spell during which the price might be adjusted between them and the purchasers, so that they would not have the subsidies taken off at once and have to fall back on the price paid by the purchasers, less the subsidy. That is all we had in mind in doing this.

Mr. MOORE. As I read this language, then, assuming, as the Senator says, that oil might be decontrolled by the Administration, the price would be advanced or not as the buyer might determine, but the subsidy on so-called stripper wells, as defined now in the provision with respect to subsidy payment, continues. It continues right on for a full year. I cannot understand why that should be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is this difference, I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma: We provide in the legislation that where the Price Administrator or the Government itself lifts a subsidy but continues the price ceiling on the product, the price shall be raised to absorb the subsidy that is denied. In the matter of small stripper wells there is no power left in the Government to say that the purchaser shall increase the price so as to absorb the subsidy. Therefore, we felt that, in fairness to the small stripper wells, they should have this breathing spell, as I call it, in which the price structure as between them and the purchasers of oil might be worked out without injury to them.

Mr. MOORE. Does the Senator mean even beyond the time when the price of oil might be controlled?

Mr. BARKLEY. Even beyond the time when the ceiling was taken off; yes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to correct one statement?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. This provision does not authorize the continuation of stripper-well subsidies beyond April 1, 1947.

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. TAFT. There is a general termination of subsidies under section 4 on April 1, 1947. What this provision does is to say in effect, "Contrary to other subsidies, if you decontrol oil you may continue the subsidy on stripper wells until April 1, 1947." That is the reason for putting the language in the report. Otherwise, if petroleum were decontrolled tomorrow the subsidy on stripper wells would have to stop. It was felt by some at least that decontrol might become more possible if there were not the opposition from stripper-well operators against decontrol if the subsidy has to be cut off at the end of control.

Mr. MOORE. Do I understand the Senator to construe that language to mean that if petroleum were decontrolled the subsidy for stripper wells would expire on April 1, 1947?

Mr. TAFT. On April 1, 1947; yes. That is definite.

Mr. MOORE. I did not understand that.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true. I thought I had made that point clear to the Senator.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. In the conference report are any commodities decontrolled?

Mr. BARKLEY. There are none.

Mr. WILEY. None?

Mr. BARKLEY. There are none.

Mr. WILEY. So the jurisdiction of OPA is the same as it was before?

Mr. BARKLEY. The jurisdiction is modified, first, by putting control of all agricultural products in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. It is modified, also, by setting up the decontrol board which has the final say as to whether there should be decontrol under the terms of the bill.

I might say in that connection that the House conferees felt, with some degree of logic, that to set up a decontrol board with one hand and with the other take away a large portion of its functions by Congress itself saying that on next Saturday or Sunday there should be decontrol on certain specific products was an illogical thing, and that in view of the fact that we were setting up the decontrol board for nonagricultural products, as well as agricultural products if the Secretary of Agriculture did not act, and also putting in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture the power to control prices and decontrols with respect to agricultural products, that board might be well depended upon to function promptly and effectively in the field of decontrol.

Mr. WILEY. Am I to understand that under this arrangement the Secretary of Agriculture not only has the power to decontrol but he has control over the prices?

Mr. BARKLEY. No. He makes his recommendation. He is required to report to the Price Administrator agricultural products which are in short supply. He is required to make recommendations not only as to absolute decontrol but as to adjustment in prices, and he is authorized and directed from month to month to make a report and recommendations to the Price Administrator, and the Price Administrator is by the measure which we are now considering required to carry out the recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture. If he does not do it promptly, then the complainant may go to the decontrol board and there get prompt consideration.

Mr. WILEY. The jurisdiction of the board that is set up then simply goes to the one issue, and that is if the OPA Administrator, or if the Secretary of Agriculture, on petition, does not decontrol, the board has the final review?

Mr. BARKLEY. They have the final power to order the decontrol on any commodity or any product which is brought to their attention.

Mr. WILEY. But they have nothing to say in relation to adjustment of prices?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the decontrol board is not a price-fixing agency.

Mr. WILEY. If the Senator will yield further, I should like to say that my experience with OPA, and my constituents' experience with OPA, has not been very, let us say, healthy, because of what has been said heretofore to be, perhaps, a lack of administrative ability. First, as suggested by the Senator from Illinois, OPA agents have taken the attitude that when mistakes were made by citizens that immediately made them a species of criminal, and the OPA agents in a way take the sleuth attitude or persecution attitude. That was the one thing. There are numerous instances of that, as the Senator knows.

The other thing which to me is the big factor, is the absolute inability to get action from OPA in relation to adjustment of prices. Applications have been made, and month after month there was no action taken upon the applications. I could give the Senator innumerable instances of failure on the part of OPA to take action. I wonder if the machinery in that respect has been in any wise improved?

Mr. BARKLEY. Decidedly so. We have put in the measure limitations as to time in which the Administrator is required to act. If he refuses, or fails for any reason to act, the matter can be taken before the Decontrol Board, in some cases automatically, and in others by the industry committee that has made the application for decontrol, or for decontrol with respect to the commodity which the particular industry committee represents.

Mr. WILEY. That is only with relation to decontrol, the Senator says?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WILEY. I am talking about prices, about price adjustments.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have not, of course, given the Decontrol Board price adjustment functions. We have given that power practically to the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to all agricultural products. Naturaly we had to leave with the Administrator the function of price adjustments in nonagricultural products, and that still remains with him. But I think the Senator can depend upon it that the complaints which have been brought before the Congress in connection with the consideration of this legislation will have effect. I have made a very vigorous complaint myself at the delays which have occurred. I would not assume that they have been deliberate. I think the administration has been short-handed with respect to employees. This is a temporary agency. It is going out; and qualified and competent men naturally are looking around for places to land permanently. Many of them are naturally not enthusiastic about remaining until the whole thing ends and then taking a chance on obtaining permanent employment. Therefore there has been a constant sloughing off of some of the most efficient men in OPA.

During the hearings and during the consideration of the bill we have brought these questions to the attention of the Price Administrator, and we have the assurance of Mr. Paul Porter, the new Price Administrator, that he intends to do everything in his power to facilitate prompt consideration of all applications for price adjustments which may come before him. I have faith to believe that he is sincere, and that he will carry out that purpose.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Is there anything in the conference report which gives direction or guidance to OPA in relation to the rule which should be applied in fixing prices? Let me cite an example.

Some months ago I showed on the floor of the Senate what took place in relation to aluminum skillets. Two weeks ago I had in my office two representatives of the OPA. We had before us five chairs, which were apparently substantially the same. Some of them were made by old manufacturers. The old manufacturer was having a very difficult time getting an increase in his prices. He was given a price of $4.50, which was the prewar price. But there was another chair, which anyone could see was inferior in workmanship and material. The manufacturer of that chair was allowed a price of more than $9. The rule that I contend for is, that with respect to the same commodity, each manufacturer should be able to charge as any other manufacturer.

I ran up against the type of mind—and I speak advisedly with respect to these OPA representatives—which had figured out some mathematical formula. Those men, by their own particular rule—not of law, but of some mathematical calculus—had figured out that the old manufacturer should not get as much as the new manufacturer, though his costs were the same. I wondered if there was anything in the bill in the way of guidance or direction in price fixing that will do equity to old manufacturers.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is nothing in the bill which changes the intellectual processes of anyone in charge of enforcing the law. In the bill we have set a standard for pricing, based upon the prices which prevailed in October 1941, plus costs. But if someone is now making something which was not being made during the base period, of course the base period would not apply. The price for the new product must be computed under a process which takes into consideration a situation as nearly comparable as possible with that of manufacturers of similar products. But there is no way that we can actually write into the law what shall be done with respect to certain differentials.

Mr. WILEY. I appreciate that fact; but let me get back to the chairs again. One manufacturer made chairs in 1941. He then entered into the production of war materials. In the meantime his wages and material costs had gone up. Another manufacturer did not make chairs until after the war. He paid the same wages as did the first manufacturer. But because the first manufacturer had his capital invested in the chair business before the war, he had to be penalized, although when he returned to the manufacture of chairs his wages and material costs had increased. But the favorite son who began the business afterwards was allowed a price of $9.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would not attempt to pass on the equity of such a situation. I do not know enough about the particular instance. No doubt there are many others like it, in which there has been inequity as a result of the beginning of new manufacture, or because someone has gone into business who was not in business in 1941.

Mr. WILEY. They are the favored sons.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know about the favored sons. I do not believe that anyone has deliberately favored someone because he started in business after the war, or before the war, so far as that is concerned. We have done the best we could to write a formula by which the OPA can be guided. There is much objection to that formula, but I am supporting it because I believe that it is workable, notwithstanding assertions to the contrary. I believe that any ordinarily intelligent person with business experience can apply the formula which we have provided, and that it will be done. I know that it is not a perfect formula. No formula which Congress could write would be perfect. Administrators must take into consideration innumerable circumstances, phases, and approaches which perhaps we have not considered. But I believe that on the whole this formula will be administered fairly and with equity, and without intentional discrimination as among producers.

Mr. STANFILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. STANFILL. A little while ago I understood the Senator to say that the Secretary of Agriculture would recommend to the Price Administrator certain prices on agricultural products. What provision does the bill make with respect to whether or not the Price Administrator shall carry into effect such recommendations?

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill provides that he is required to do so.

Mr. STANFILL. I further understood the Senator to say that there would be an appeal to the Decontrol Board. Later the Senator said that the Decontrol Board would have no jurisdiction as to price fixing. I wish to have that point clear in my mind.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Secretary of Agriculture is charged with the duty of making recommendations to the Administrator with respect not only to decontrol but with respect to price adjustments. The Administrator is required to carry out the Secretary's recommendations. If he does not do so, the injured party may go into the Emergency Court of Appeals and obtain a mandamus to compel him to do so. If he does not decontrol on the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture that question may go promptly to the Decontrol Board, and it may take action. But I will say to the Senator that it is inconceivable that the Administrator, whoever he might be, would deliberately refuse to carry out the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture when Congress had deliberately and intentionally, and with its eyes open, given such power to the Secretary of Agriculture, and required that it should be mandatory on the Administrator to carry it into effect.

Mr. STANFILL. I am not so sure that it is inconceivable, because so many inconceivable things have been done.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of that question.

Mr. STANFILL. I should like to ask one further question. Is it the Senator's understanding that meats, dairy products, and poultry come within the definition of agricultural products?

Mr. BARKLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Section 14 of the bill as it passed the Senate was an amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by my colleague [Mr. BREWSTER]. That section, as the Senate approved it, authorized and directed the Secretary of Agriculture, or any other governmental agency having control of grain and feedstuffs for shipment overseas, to transfer such grain, under certain circumstances, to what we call deficit areas.

The conference report has dealt with the same subject matter in section 15 of the conference agreement. What I am interested to know is whether in the conference draft any greater assurance has been given that grain and feedstuffs will be moved to the deficit areas, or whether the chances of the deficit areas receiving such grain and feedstuffs are lessened. The Senator will note that section 14 of the bill as it passed the Senate refers to grain or feedstuffs for shipment overseas. Under that section, apparently that is the only grain which might be diverted to the so-called deficit areas. Under section 15 of the conference report there is a very substantial rewriting of the language, but I am looking to the effect. Section 15 in the conference report reads as follows:

> The Secretary of Agriculture, through the Commodity Credit Corporation or otherwise, is hereby authorized to allocate feed which he controls to feeders of livestock and poultry in domestic areas which he may determine to be in an emergency shortage condition with respect to animal and poultry feed.

I am interested to know whether under this section there is a larger bulk of grain and feedstuffs with which the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to deal than under section 14 of the Senate amendment, which relates only to grain marked for export.

Mr. BARKLEY. That section was discussed very thoroughly by the conferees, and it was recognized that some effort ought to be made to provide relief for section in which feed was scarce. The language was rather carefully drawn. It gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority to allocate any feed which he controls, no matter in what manner he obtains control of it, whereas the provision in the Senate amendment required him to do so only with respect to feed grains which were destined for shipment overseas.

Mr. WHITE. So the Senator's answer to my question as to whether there would be a larger volume of grain to which the Secretary of Agriculture might resort for transfer or diversion to the deficit areas, under the conference report than under the provisions of the Senate amendment, is that a larger amount of grain would be made available under the terms of the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. But there is no absolute direction in the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it is not a direction. But we also provide that the Secretary shall act through the Commodity Corporation, which for years has been dealing with matters of this kind. I think that is an improvement.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand the Senator, the general and over-all answer to my question is that section 15 in the conference report gives greater assurance than did section 14 of the bill as it passed the Senate, that the deficit areas will receive grain and feedstuffs.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think so.

Mr. President, let me say just a word in regard to subsidies, and then I shall be through. The House bill provided a total of $585,000,000 for subsidies, and provided for their termination on December 31, 1946. It also provided for the immediate elimination of meat subsidies.

The bill, as passed by the Senate, provided for a total of $1,100,000,000 for subsidies and further provided that subsidies generally should terminate not later than next May 1. Provision was made for continuing beyond that date subsidies relating to copper, lead, zinc, and sugar. Such a provision was contained in the bill as passed by the Senate because the situation in regard to copper, lead, and zinc is peculiar, and the sugar situation is one in which we have to extend subsidies beyond May 1, because the crop of sugar raised in 1946 is not marketed until 1947. So we had to make a special provision with respect to sugar.

The provisions in the conference report relating to subsidies follow very closely the Senate provisions on that subject. The amount provided for subsidies in the bill as passed by the Senate has been reduced by $100,000,000. The Senate voted to continue subsidies for 11 months, and voted a total amount for subsidies of $1,100,000,000, which was $100,000,000 a month. The conferees voted to shorten the period to April 1, to reduce the amount by $100,000,000, and also to require that all subsidies be terminated by the first day of next April. The authority to pay subsidies is modified with respect to subsidies for petroleum. I have already explained that with respect to stripper wells.

In all other respects the subsidy provisions of the conference report are practically the same as those of the bill as passed by the Senate.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS WHICH ARE THE SAME IN THE CONFERENCE REPORT AS THEY WERE IN THE SENATE BILL

There are a number of provisions which were in the Senate bill and are now included in the conference report in the same form as they appeared in the Senate bill. Since no change was made in these provisions it is hardly necessary to explain them. However, it might be indicated briefly what these provisions are.

First. The provision relating to the classification of hotels as between transient hotels, residentials and apartment hotels, and tourist courts, rooming houses, and boarding houses.

Second. The provision for treating fish and other sea foods as agricultural commodities.

Third. The provision prohibiting the Price Administrator from fixing a quantity or percentage of any product which any seller may sell to any buyer.

Fourth. The provision which extends the prohibition now contained in existing law against maintaining a "highest price line" requirement for sellers of goods at retail, so that such prohibition will now also be applicable with respect to service establishments. A clerical change is made in the conference report in connection with this provision. But there is no change in substance.

Fifth. The provision relating to maximum prices in restaurants for commodities which are not under control when purchased by the restaurants.

Sixth. The provision eliminating the maximum-average-price plan. This provision was also the same in the House bill.

Seventh. The provisions requiring that established discounts, mark-ups, and dealer-handling charges be allowed in the case of certain commodities, such as automobiles. These provisions were substantially the same in the House and Senate bills.

Eighth. The provision in the Senate bill which was designed to require that established peacetime discounts and mark-ups be allowed for dealers in farm implements.

Ninth. The amendments to the enforcement provisions contained in section 205 (e) and 205 (f) of the Emergency Price Control Act.

Tenth. The provisions relating to the purchase of wheat in cases where the Government requires producers to sell their wheat. Under this provision producers will not be required to accept the market price prevailing when they deliver their wheat, but may elect a date between the date of delivery and March 31, 1947, and receive the price prevailing on the date so elected.

NEW COMMODITIES

The conference agreement includes one provision from the House bill which was not included in the Senate bill. This provision provides that maximum prices shall not be applicable to certain new commodities which are used in the production of other commodities and increase the life or reduce the cost of such other commodities.

THE GENERAL PROVISION RELATING TO DEALERS' MARGINS

As has been stated before, the provision—known as the Wherry amendment—requiring that distributors, wholesalers, and retailers, must be allowed their prewar discounts or mark-ups, has been modified so that it now requires that they be allowed the percentage discount or percentage mark-up in effect on January 1, 1946.

PRICE FORMULA FOR PRODUCERS, MANUFACTURERS, AND PROCESSORS

The provision of the Senate bill which established a pricing formula for manufacturers and processors, based upon their October 1941 prices increased by an amount equal to the increase in the weighted average of the per unit cost since October 1941, is included in the conference report and has been extended so as to apply to producers. A number of other changes of a technical nature were made in this provision in conference, but the other changes do not represent any important difference in the policy of the provision.

PRICING OF COTTON AND WOOLEN TEXTILES

Both the House bill and the Senate bill included a provision relating to the pricing of products made in whole or major part from cotton or cotton yarn or wool or wool yarn. The House bill required that the maximum prices for such products must be not less than the sum of the cotton or wool cost, plus the weighted average of mill conversion costs, plus a reasonable profit. The Senate bill retained these provisions and added a definition of reasonable profit as not less than the average profit per unit prevailing during the period 1939 through 1941. The conference agreement includes the change made by the Senate bill.

Another provision relating to the pricing of cotton textiles, which was included in the Senate bill, is omitted from the conference agreement. This is the provision which provided for a 5-percent increase in maximum prices as an incentive for increased production in certain cases.

FEED SHORTAGE AREAS

The provisions of the Senate bill which related to the diversion of grain and feedstuffs to areas where feed shortages prevail has been modified to provide that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to dispose of feed which he controls to feeders of livestock and poultry in domestic areas which he determines to be in an emergency shortage condition with respect to animal and poultry feed. As it is included in the conference report, this provision is permissive rather than being mandatory as it was in the Senate bill.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The conference agreement also includes a provision which will allow the Price Administrator 30 days within which he may make the changes in maximum prices which are required by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. President, I earnestly urge that the conference report be agreed to. In my judgment, if it is rejected, the chances of having any price control beyond next Sunday are extremely dim. If this conference report is rejected, it will throw the whole matter back to where it was before the conferees met, assuming that there would be any further conference at all.

I realize that there is dissatisfaction regarding the elimination of the specific decontrols on the part of livestock, meat, poultry, and dairy products. I think the elimination of those specific decontrols is largely minimized and nullified by the fact that we have set up a decontrol board, in the first place, and by reason of the fact that we have given to the Secretary of Agriculture the initiation and the responsibility with respect to these matters, all of which include the things which we ourselves, by specific action of the Senate, voted to decontrol. So when that point was reached in the conference, the House conferees were practically unanimous in standing out against the specific decontrols—all of them, without regard to their type.

When the bill was before the House originally, a motion was made for the decontrol specifically of meat. That motion was overwhelmingly defeated in the House of Representatives. After the conferees wrote the conference report, it went back to the House yesterday. A motion was made in the House to recommit the conference report to the conferees with instructions to agree to the decontrol of livestock, meat, poultry, and dairy products.

There was a yea-and-nay vote on that proposal in the House of Representatives, and it was defeated by a vote of 221 to 150—a majority of 71. So the House has twice gone on record in opposition to the specific singling out of any product for decontrol by action of Congress. So, yesterday, when the House voted on the conference report, after defeating that motion, the conference report was adopted by the House by a vote of 265 to 105.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. It is my understanding that the Department of Agriculture or the Secretary of Agriculture now is responsible for the decontrol of meat, poultry, and dairy products. Is that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. Those commodities are under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture to the same extent that any other agricultural product is under his jurisdiction with respect to making recommendations, because we have placed in the law a definition which includes livestock and meats and dairy products. Whether that definition would apply to the ultimate manufacturer of cheese or other article of that kind, I am not prepared to say. But milk and butter and meats and poultry are agricultural products by definition, and therefore they are included.

Mr. BUCK. Does the Secretary of Agriculture have the final word in regard to decontrols? If he wishes to decontrol, is not his word final?

Mr. BARKLEY. His word is final if he decides to decontrol. If he does not decontrol, then application can be made to the Decontrol Board, and action may be obtained from it. But the Secretary of Agriculture has the power to decontrol.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. The Senator from Kentucky will remember that in the measure continuing the Price Control Act, last year, there was a provision known as the Bankhead amendment which required, probably as applied to cotton, and perhaps as applied to other agricultural products, that before such a change could be made, the consent of the Secretary of Agriculture would have to be procured.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Oklahoma is speaking of a previous amendment of the law; is he not?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; and I refer to the conduct of the OPA in connection with it. According to my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Secretary of Agriculture repeatedly refused to give consent to reducing the price of cotton. Finally, he was directed by the Stabilization Director to give consent, and he did so. Of course that is a matter of administration.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have provided in this measure that no appointive officer under the Government of the United States shall have power to control the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to any of the functions we have legislated upon his shoulders. So no one below the President of the United States could do so, and I doubt very much whether the President could direct the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to these matters, although he could advise him. But certainly no one else could.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask a question regarding section 8 of the conference report, which reads as follows:

SEC. 8. Section 2 (j) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as emended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following: "or (5) as authorizing any regulation or order of the Administrator to fix a quantity or percentage of any product which any seller may sell to any buyer."

Does that mean that the authority to ration is rescinded by that provision?

Mr. BARKLEY. That amendment grew out of the following situation: The OPA issued a certain order providing that the manufacturers of nylon hose should channel that product into certain retail hands, and thereby bypass wholesalers and jobbers and other distributors. If that could be done with respect to nylon hose, it could be done with respect to sheets and any other kind of drygoods, or even clothing or anything else.

Mr. AIKEN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. In my mind there was grave doubt whether the OPA had any authority to do so, and that doubt was also expressed in the conference and in the committee by the general counsel of the OPA. It might be entirely possible for the Civilian Production Administration to do that by allotments and allocations, but there was always a doubt whether the OPA could do it. So we included the provision, so that the OPA could not, by issuing an order, say to a manufacturer, "You have to bypass the wholesaler, and the jobber, and everyone else," and thus require him to send his product directly to a retailer in some community in the United States.

Mr. AIKEN. This provision is not intended is it, to deprive the Administrator of the authority to ration butter or coffee or any other commodity in case there is not enough to go around?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it has no relationship to that.

Really its primary purpose is to make sure that the distribution of goods shall go through the ordinary channels, and that someone who has been in business for a long time shall not be set out on the side of the road by an order which would prevent him from buying and selling goods.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator from Kentucky will recall that at an early day the OPA channeled fresh fruits and vegetables in such a manner as to set up certain middle men who did not operate before.

Mr. BARKLEY. However, that may be, Mr. President, I hope the conference report will be agreed to. Although it is not a perfect measure, it is the best we have been able to obtain. In my humble and honest judgment, the rejection of this conference report will mean that when the present law expires next Sunday, there will be no effective price control in the United States. What would happen with regard to that, I do not know. All sorts of predictions are made as to runaway inflation and wild prices.

They may be the consequence of taking off all controls. I do not want the Senate of the United States to accept the responsibility of making such a situation possible. Therefore I urge that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I should like very much, and as briefly as possible, to compliment the majority leader for his clear explanation of the conference report. I am one of those who voted sincerely for the Senate version of the bill. I believed that the line which we took was a sound one in an endeavor to take care of the price situation. I have always maintained that production was the key to the inflation problem. I know that the question of how to prevent inflation is a debatable one, and none of us can be sure that he is right. I think we should approach the subject, after all the various studies and conferences which have been made and held with regard to the matter, from the point of view of what is best for the country. If we vote down the conference report we are in danger of having no price controls whatever. I am not willing to take that responsibility.

Mr. President, while I do not agree entirely with the conference report and would have preferred more rapid decontrols, I may say to the majority leader that I believe it is my duty to support the report, and give to him my vote of confidence for the work which he has so earnestly performed with regard to the matter, and the work which was performed by the committees of both Houses. I believe that we should say to the country that we have done what, in our consciences, we believe to be right in connection with the adjustment of this difficult matter. I am glad to support the majority leader in his able presentation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the statement which has been made by the able Senator from New Jersey.

I wish to make one additional statement. Within 3 days we shall be confronted with the question of terminating this law. We need not go into tirades as to why consideration of the matter has been delayed. The entire subject has received the most careful and industrious consideration, both day and night, of those who have been dealing with it. However, we are now confronted with the choice of voting for the conference report or voting it down. I, myself, am not willing to say to the American people that this bill, with all its imperfections, is not better than nothing, and therefore I support it. I hope that it will become law, and that the process of gradually working out from under controls will be sufficiently orderly so as to prevent any serious dislocation in the American economy or in the welfare of the American people.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but briefly. I wish to state at the beginning that, in accordance with the desire of our majority leader, I personally shall cast my vote for the conference report, although I do so most unhappily and with a deep sense of reluctance. In the first place, I feel that agreement to the conference report may result in a rapid and marked inflation, and secondly may result in establishing a system for OPA to operate which will be entirely unworkable and impracticable.

I desire first to invite attention to this fact: Under the proposed law, if passed, we will establish a base period from October 1 to October 14, 1941, by which we will measure the right of American business to prices and profit. We will give them the same profits and costs which they had in October 1941, and to that, we will add all the accumulating costs.

I ask any Senator, why do we take the base period of October 1941? Is it because, as of that time corporate profits were the greatest they had been in the history of the United States?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOWNEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. We took that date which I wrote into the bill because that was the date which had been fixed in the Price Control Act. The Price Control Administrator has been supposed, from the beginning, to base his prices on October 1, 1941, prices, plus increases in cost. The Administrator has never done that. He has never paid attention to it, I agree, but that is where the date came from.

Mr. DOWNEY. Very well, Mr. President. I am glad to accept the statement of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, for whom I have the highest respect. But nevertheless the results which were indicated in my remarks are as I have stated them. We passed into the war period with rapidly rising prices and shortages of commodities. During 1940 and 1941 there was an everascending spiral of costs and profits. So, while October 1941 may have been selected for the reason indicated by the Senator from Ohio, we have selected a date which would give to the great corporate businesses of America, under the proposed formula, profits and incomes far beyond anything ever before accruing.

Mr. President, in order to show you how extremely generous is the base which we have selected, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD in its entirety, without reading, a table which was introduced by the distinguished Senator from Ohio into the committee hearings. The table may be found on page 42 of the committee hearings. It is marked "Exhibit C," and is entitled, "Table Showing Net Corporation Profits After Taxes, and the Percentage of National Income Represented Thereby From 1929 to 1945."

Mr. President, I ask that the table be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXHIBIT C.—Table showing net corporation profits after taxes, and the percentage of national income represented thereby from 1929 to 1945

[Department of Commerce Statistical Abstract]

	National income	Corporation profits	Percentage
1929	$83, 326, 000, 000	$7, 194, 000, 000	8.6
1930	68, 858, 000, 000	1, 723, 000, 000	2.6
1931	54, 479, 000, 000	−1, 614, 000, 000	−3.0
1932	39, 963, 000, 000	−3, 646, 000, 000	−9.1
1933	42, 322, 000, 000	−625, 000, 000	−1.5
1934	49, 455, 000, 000	549, 000, 000	1.1
1935	55, 719, 000, 000	1, 668, 000, 000	2.9
1936	64, 924, 000, 000	3, 767, 000, 000	5.8
1937	71, 513, 000, 000	3, 943, 000, 000	5.5
1938	64, 200, 000, 000	1, 658, 000, 000	2.5
1939	70, 829, 000, 000	4, 228, 000, 000	6.0
1940	77, 809, 000, 000	5, 844, 000, 000	7.5
1941	95, 618, 000, 000	7, 668, 000, 000	8.0
1942	119, 791, 000, 000	7, 600, 000, 000	6.3
1943	149, 400, 000, 000	9, 800, 000, 000	6.5
1944	160, 700, 000, 000	9, 900, 000, 000	6.2
1945	157, 000, 000, 000	9, 300, 000, 000	5.9

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, that table reveals that the percentage of corporation profits compared with the national income in 1941 was greater than in any other year from 1929 to 1945, with the exception of the year 1929. But it should be noted that the figures show corporate profits after the payment of taxes. In 1941 we had the heaviest excess-profits tax of all time. In 1929 we had comparatively small taxes on corporations. Nevertheless, taking corporate profits after payment of the taxes in both years, even then in 1941 and 1929 the percentage of profits of corporations compared with the national income was practically the same. And let me repeat, as I have already said, in 1941 the profits of corporations, when measured by that standard, exceeded those in any other year save and except 1929 only.

Mr. President, what is even more noteworthy is this fact: In 1941 there was a constant increase of prices and profits, so that the base period of October 1941 was substantially abcve the average for the whole year.

The table to which I have referred shows that there was a marked drop in the profits per dollar sales of American corporations in 1942, 1943, 1944, 1945, and 1946.

So we are here establishing a rule under which the great businesses of America will be enabled to go back to a much higher standard than they are now operating under, a standard so improvidently generous that I do not think it can be justified.

Mr. President, consider this situation: Assume a corporation was manufacturing a hundred thousand articles in 1941 and making, as I have said, almost unparalleled profits per unit. We are now going to give him the same price for those articles plus all the accumulating costs, even though the number of units being produced will rapidly increase over the number produced in 1941. Therefore, the profits of corporations will undoubtedly swell tremendously under two factors, namely, the high profits measure of 1941 and the great increase in the volume of business.

And here, Mr. President, I want to emphasize that the huge corporate profits of 1941 were materially reduced by the excess-profits tax. But the excess-profits tax has now been repealed.

Mr. President, I would not undertake to prophesy, because I have no idea how much will be the exact increase in profits and prices as a result of the pending measure. Whether it will be 10 percent or 20 percent or 30 percent, I think no one has very much of an idea. The whole field is so vast, the segments are so many, the factors are so complicated, that what will occur can only be determined by the passage of time. But I am sure at least that prices and profits will most materially increase.

Mr. President, I desire now to give a brief analysis of the factors which lead me to believe that the bill does not present a workable plan which can be administered by the OPA.

Under the amendment, the Office of Price Administration is required to determine the costs of producing different products during the period between October 1 and 15, 1941. No companies keep their books on the basis of this period, or have any costs relating to this base period. Where costs are available, they usually are computed on an annual basis. It is highly doubtful if OPA would have the legal authority to accept 1941 costs as those obtaining in October 1 to 15, 1941.

Even if this were permitted, however, many industries are so seriously lacking in adequate cost data that it is impossible to determine the costs of producing many individual products. Let us look at three examples.

BRICK AND TILE

There are between 400 and 500 producers of brick and tile in the country. Less than 5 percent have any cost systems. No company, so far as is known, allocates costs between different kinds of brick or different kinds of tile, or between brick generally and tile generally. Getting any adequate cost figures for this industry within the time limits imposed, or a period of many months, would be impossible.

LUMBER

There are 40,000 producers of lumber in the United States operating on all kinds of species and under widely varying production conditions. Only 10 percent of the total number have any costs systems at all. All known cost systems are based on the cost of carrying on different processes and are not applied to the production of different types of lumber. It would be possible from available figures, through many months of study, to determine the cost of individual species and types of lumber; but it would be impossible to get such figures within the time limitations set up in the bill.

MEAT

There are approximately 12,000 firms, other than farmers, producing meat. The great majority of them are very small firms. Although 12 large companies pretty much dominate the industry, their costs are in no sense representative of those of the whole industry. Existing cost systems are built up on a process basis, and no company, so far as is known, is able to determine the individual costs of rib roasts, pork chops, hamburger, or sausage. It would take a large force of highly skilled accountants many months to apply available figures to a calculation of the costs of individual cuts of various types of meats. It could not, under any conditions, be done within a 60-day period.

It is true that the bill authorizes the Price Administrator, in the absence of satisfactory data, to reach his conclusions on the best data available. Under normal working conditions it might be possible out of existing figures to develop reasonably satisfactory data. However, it seems certain that as soon as this amendment is enacted into law, if that happens, OPA will be deluged with applications from hundreds of industries and will find it utterly impossible to reduce inadequate existing information to a reasonably sound foundation for action. The only recourse under those circumstances would be to accept the often wholly inadequate data supplied by the industries, the use of which would have highly inflationary effects.

MULTIPLE READJUSTMENTS

Not only does the absence of adequate cost data make the administration of this amendment highly impracticable; it will be difficult of administration because of the pyramiding of price increases granted under the amendment. Within 60 days from the time an adjusted price is asked, for example, the Office of Price Administration will be required to adjust washing machine prices on the basis of prices obtaining from October 1 to 15, 1941, plus increased costs since that date. In determining those prices, within the 60-day period, OPA, obviously, cannot wait for adjustment in the prices of parts and materials out of which washing machines are made. It will have to make its determination on the basis of present costs in the industry. The same policy will have to be applied in the case of the manufacturers of washing machine parts. It will also have to be applied in the manufacture of steel, copper, brass, and other basic fabricated materials out of which the parts are manufactured. Finally, there would have to be an application of the policy to the production of basic metals and other raw materials. After washing machine prices were readjusted on the basis of present costs, a second adjustment would have to be made to take care of the initial adjustment in the prices of washing machine parts. Later on, two additional adjustments would have to be made to take care of the additional adjustments that would have to be made in washing machine parts to take care of cost increases further down the production line.

In fact, increases in the prices of steel, copper, zinc, brass, and other basic materials might often be reflected in two adjustments in the prices of washing machine manufacturers; once because of the increases in the price of such materials when sold direct to the washing machine manufacturers; a second time due to adjustments in the prices of parts manufacturers, growing out of increases in the prices of such materials. Thus, one price increase would be pyramided upon another. It would take several months before the increases in raw materials, basic fabricated materials, and parts all were reflected in increases in the prices of washing machines. However, when these increases generally were made, the chances are that labor would have made wage demands and industry generally would be subjected to new cost increases that would call for a whole series of new price increases. Under this amendment prices can never settle down to a stable basis, but will constantly be on the march until ultimately they collapse. Certainly that is not in the interests either of business, farmers, or the consumers of the Nation.

A second feature of this bill which should not escape attention, is the fact that at a time when inflationary pressures are intense, and we need to use every effort to keep our economy steady, it is proposed to revise prices upward, by assuring producers the profits they earned in the most profitable part of the most profitable year in the history of American business. Industry's profits in 1944, for example, were twice 1940 profits; three times 1939 profits. They were substantially higher even than profits in the boom year 1929. Certainly there is no element of stability in legislating prices upward to yield business the highest profits it ever earned per unit of production, and to base those profits on a volume of output that already exceeds 1941 output and is certain to go far above it before the end of the present year. With the excess-profits tax eliminated, this bill will yield profits so fantastically great that the inevitable result will be widespread criticism of business and demands for the end of profiteering.

If there is any idea in the minds of any Members of this body that this amendment is designed to aid production, it should be dispelled at once. Our recent experiences have clearly shown us that goods will be hoarded and not delivered for use when a price increase is anticipated. This creates serious shortages when the goods remaining undelivered are for consumer use. The difficulties are intensified many times when those goods are basic fabricated materials or parts needed for the manufacture of finished products. When such goods are withheld from the market, assembly lines break down, inefficiencies of manufacture develop, and costs of production still further increase. By subjecting the industries of the Nation to a continuous series of increases in prices, this amendment cannot fail to have most serious consequences in curtailing industrial output. It will result in withholding of goods from the market and a serious interference with production.

In another way too, constantly rising prices hamper production. They invite producers with an inside track on supplies to fill their warehouses to the doors with raw materials and parts. This inevitably leads to a dislocation of available supplies. The sufferers seldom are the large producers of the country. It is the little boys who find their production handicapped by a shortage of materials.

Instead of being an aid to production, the Taft-Wolcott amendment will be a serious impediment to large-scale output and removal of shortages at the earliest possible moment.

I repeat what I said at the beginning. This amendment is a monstrosity from the standpoint of administration. It will be explosive in its effect upon the economic stability of the country. If it becomes law, the value of the dollar will steadily decline; disabled veterans and other veterans living on fixed allowances; dependents of men still in the armed services; pensioners, and all other persons on fixed incomes, will be put in a terrific squeeze. The American people who were persuaded to invest millions of dollars in war bonds on the assumption that they would, at maturity, get back a dollar for every 75 cents invested, will be swindled by the action of the United States Government that sold them the bonds.

Mr. President, I say again, I shall vote for the conference report, but I do so with a sense of insecurity. I am not sure that the American economy would not be better without any bill whatsoever, but I do believe that under the legislative condition existing it is either this bill or nothing, and I for one am not willing to take the responsibility and vote for nothing.

Mr. President, it is sometimes said that the lot of a would-be statesman is not a happy one because a public official is seldom called upon to select the good from the evil. The choice is almost always between the lesser of two evils. Anyone can easily say that war is the greatest evil we can have, but there is one greater evil, and that is to have an enemy conquer and occupy one's country. So we take the lesser evil in choosing war than the greater evil in allowing conquest.

I think that is almost always true. We seldom have the happy condition of choosing between a positive good and a positive bad. I feel very much in that state of mind in voting upon the conference report. So far as I am concerned, I think we are confronted with a possibility of having this bill, which I consider most unfortunate, or no bill at all, and I am guessing that the lesser evil would be to have some bill, however defective.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am going to vote for the conference report, but, as I have said, I do so reluctantly, in spite of the fact that I fear it will tend to inflation; to hoarding and delayed production; and to a complete break-down of OPA administration. It is my own belief that the OPA has done a notable and most valuable service for our people. I wish I could vote for a measure to support its vital duties rather than for one that may completely destroy it. But such is not the case. And I can only vote for the report weak and defective though I consider it.

PERSONAL STATEMENT

Mr. WHERRY obtained the floor.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement, and I request the Senator from Wyoming to ask for a quorum.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, on May 23, I asked the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to yield to me, which he courteously did, and I then spoke briefly in behalf of New Hampshire and New England poultrymen, who were facing a direful situation because of the famine in grain and the disaster threatening their flocks and herds unless immediate relief was given. I had received hundreds of telephone calls, telegrams, and letters, urging my assistance, and with other New England representatives I had approached different sources in Washington without much success, and it seemed to me the only recourse was to petition the President to use the power of his great office to afford a measure of relief. I concluded my remarks by reading a telegram to the President which I had sent him on that day.

On May 29, 6 days later, the President replied to this message of mine. The letter amazed me and troubled me, because it was not the type of letter which a Senator would expect to receive from one holding the high office of President of the United States, and who had communicated with him as part of his duties as a Senator, seeking relief for constituents. I showed this letter to three or four friends in the Senate, in whose judgment I had confidence, and decided not to make the matter public. Apparently, the contents of this letter came to the attention of some members of the press, and since yesterday several articles have been written thereon. Some of these articles have not given an accurate picture of the matter, and therefore, in the interest of the record, and since I feel sure that no President of the United States would be unwilling, or embarrassed, to have anything he wrote a Senator of the United States made public, I have reluctantly decided to give out the contents of this letter.

Mr. President, I now read my remarks and the telegram sent to the President on May 23. I first asked the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] to yield, which he did most courteously, and my remarks follow:

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I have a duty to perform, and I rise to do the best I can toward that great objective. I speak in behalf of hundreds of poultrymen of the State of New Hampshire, whom I have the honor to represent here tonight and who find themselves in a tragic situation. What I am about to say is by the evidence which has come to me in the form of letters, telegrams, and telephone calls, which set forth the dire situation now existing in my State. The emergency is extreme and immediate relief must be had. Growing stock is dying on range and flocks have been reduced to a sad extent because grain cannot be obtained for their food. I have in my hand a copy of a telegram which I have sent the President, which I read to the Senate:

This is the telegram:

MAY 23, 1946.

The PRESIDENT,
White House, Washington, D. C.:

This is a Macedonian cry.

I appeal to you in behalf of our New Hampshire poultrymen, who are sick at heart and discouraged at the tragedy which confronts them. Their entire and exclusive business is the production of poultry and eggs for food and breeding stock. They are without grain for their flocks. Growing stock on range are dying of starvation. Laying and breeding fowl have been thrown on the market in great numbers, because grain cannot be obtained to feed them. A certain result of this will be scarcity of poultry and eggs this fall and winter.

The tragic situation has been accentuated by the Government's raising the price it is paying for grain for foreign shipment. Let the Government purchase grain to save our farmers, the while it does this for the needy abroad. The situation demands heroic action.

Will you not issue a proclamation citing the dire situation confronting poultrymen and call upon those withholding grain from market for anticipated speculative profits to meet this need, and create a reservoir of grain supply to be prorated according to needs? Our people have the right to expect of and to plea to their President to exercise the great powers of his office under the War Powers Acts and to instruct the proper officials in the Government to take this immediate and unusual step to alleviate the most serious situation which ever confronted our poultry raisers.

I suggest the raising of the ceiling on grain at once to help care for the needs of the emergency.

Sincerely yours,

Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY.

I now read the letter I received from the President. It was not marked "Personal" or "Confidential," and it came to my office in the ordinary course of business and was opened by my secretary:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 29, 1946.

Hon. CHARLES W. TOBEY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TOBEY: Replying to your telegram of May 23, in which you say you are making a Macedonian cry, it seems to me that you have been making Macedonian cries or yells ever since I have been in the White House. For what reason I never could understand.

Your unwarranted attacks on Mr. Pauley almost ruined a good public servant. Between you and Mr. Ickes, you have made it exceedingly difficult for me to get good men to fill the necessary places in the Government. You are still continuing your Macedonian cries and I hope you will get a lot of pleasure out of them.

As far as your food situation is concerned, the Secretary of Agriculture has been instructed to meet the situation as well as he possibly can both in New England and the far Northwest, where the situation is exactly the same. It is a matter of chickens or people, and if it comes to the decision as to which should be kept from starving, naturally, if I make the decision, it will be the people. I don't know whether that will please you or not, but I hope it will.

Sometime when you have reached a cooling-off period, I'd be glad to talk with you about the whole situation.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY.

And written in handwriting on the side are the words: "Come and see me." [Laughter.]

I might point out and interpolate that that was not a "Mae West" invitation, either. [Laughter.]

The comments of the President on my use of the phrase, "This is a Macedonian cry," I will only touch upon, pointing out that the Biblical explanation of that is explained in the words, "Come over and help us." It is a scriptural phrase that has often been used to depict a serious situation.

But it is the second paragraph of the letter which I think was unfortunate on the part of the President. Therein, he refers to the investigation into the qualifications of Edwin W. Pauley to be Under Secretary of the Navy, to which post he was nominated by the President last February. The Constitution gives the Senate the power of confirmation. It is the duty of the Senate to exercise this power, and the only place in which the nominees can be screened, and their fitness or lack of fitness for the posts to which they are nominated can be determined, is in the appropriate committee to which the nomination is referred. In this case it was the Naval Affairs Committee, of which I am a member. Certainly the President cannot expect Senators to become rubber stamps for any appointment he makes. I had heard many things about Mr. Pauley and his past activities which made me feel that his appointment should not be confirmed at once without being looked into, so I asked the chairman, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], to hold hearings, which he consented to do. The hearings lasted for 5 or 6 weeks and the record speaks for itself. Mr. Pauley repudiated his testimony at least five times, while under oath, on different occasions, and his testimony on that record constituted, in my judgment, an indictment of Mr. Pauley as being unfit for the post of Under Secretary of the Navy; and again the record speaks for itself. As a matter of fact, there was never a time, after the appointment was challenged, that Mr. Pauley could have been confirmed, either in committee or on the floor, and those close to the administration so advised me, not once but twice during the course of the hearings. Realizing that he could not be confirmed, Mr. Pauley asked that his nomination be withdrawn, to which the President acquiesced.

I assumed the matter had been closed, but the President, replying to a Senator who was seeking help for his constituents, saw fit to make that the motivation of his reply. That is regrettable; and for him to charge in his letter that because Mr. Pauley could not be confirmed and was turned down, he has been unable to get men who were competent and worthy to fill other high positions, seems to me to be a statement that will not stand inspection. In my judgment as a Senator, the effect of the Pauley episode should be to cause the President to realize that in sending appointments to the Senate they must be on a plane so high that confirmation would be assured before the appointment is sent down. I look upon the Pauley episode as a healthy sign in our American political life. But that is merely my own personal opinion.

But the President, rather unkindly I think, says that if it is a question of feeding chickens or people, if he makes the decision, it will be people who will be fed. I point out that that is not a fair remark, because in my telegram I had specifically asked him to purchase grain for our famine-stricken areas the while he was doing this for the starving people abroad—in other words, coincidentally and at the same time, and in addition thereto.

The President suggested in his letter that some time when I have reached a cooling-off period, he would be glad to talk with me about the whole situation. I submit to fair men that they can examine as carefully as they will the telegram I sent to the President and they will fail to find anything therein which indicates that the telegram was sent in a feeling of heat or rancor, but only because of an honest and appropriate solicitude for my constituents' needs.

I shall let the readers of my telegram and the President's reply decide for themselves who needs a cooling-off period.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, coming back from scriptural philosophy to the hard, cold facts of price control, I invite the attention of Members of the Senate to the fact that just before the speech of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] made the statement that he was for the bill, but he was for it because he was making a choice between two evils—the evil of having no price control whatever or having this bill, which he described as far from perfection in carrying out the Price Stabilization Act. He stated that he was for the bill because he thought it would be better to have some price control than no price control.

Mr. President, I submit—and I say it from the bottom of my heart—that we do not have price control today. In its place we have chaos; and we have chaos because we do not control all the factors which enter into prices. Unless all the factors which enter into prices are controlled, there can be no real price control. That is why the so-called price control—I call it fiction control—has got completely out of hand.

Not only do we not control all the factors, but in addition we do not control black-market prices. In the meat industry 80 percent of the meat which is being sold is being sold at black-market prices. We do not control 80 percent of the prices in the case of meats for we do not control black-market prices. So I say to the distinguished Senator from California, and to every other Member of the Senate, that today we do not have price control. The reason we do not have price control is that the administration has lost control of the factors which enter into price control. Moreover, it has permitted to grow up in all industries a black market which today is sapping the buying power of our low-bracket income citizens who need a system which will permit them to buy in keeping with what they earn.

There are other factors entering into price control; but let me say in passing that if the present administration wishes to control inflation it is overlooking one element to which it should be giving its attention. I refer to the termination of deficit spending. We have more than $27,000,000,000 in Federal bank notes in circulation. We have more than $150,000,000,000 of time and demand deposits which represent pent-up spending power with which to buy things. Furthermore, the people have their own borrowing credit, which they can use to buy. What are we doing about it? As was so forcibly pointed out by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] the other day, this Congress is grinding out appropriation bills which will run us further into debt. My prediction is that the deficit this year will be in excess of $10,000,000,000. That is to be added to the present debt. That money will go into the avenues of purchasing power.

Yet what are we doing about it? We are continuing to enlarge bureaus. The Senate is putting back into practically every appropriation bill the estimates of the agencies themselves, and we are losing control of the one great factor, namely, deficit spending, which is preventing us from getting back to a balanced budget and to a point where we can start to stabilize the dollar. Unless that is done the laboring people will not get price control. Their checks will buy less and less of the materials they need. There will be a continued fight with respect to prices. There will be a fight with respect to strikes, as was stated by Mr. Bowles, resulting in a vicious cycle.

We are losing control of the element of deficit spending, which is plunging the country deeper and deeper into debt. Yet we continue to bring out demagogic and social legislation which is extending the deficit by many billions of dollars, and we are doing nothing to stem the trend. The time has come, when we are giving attention to price control, to give, as well, a great deal of thought and attention to the deficit-spending program, which is being continued on a wholesale basis by this administration.

Getting back to prices alone, it is said that price control will do the job. The first speech I made on the floor of the Senate was in behalf of production. That was in 1943. I have said the same things ever since. At that time I said, "We are in a war. Let us take off the shackles. Let us get production. We need it in the war, and we shall need it in the postwar period."

Production is the only answer, in the catalog of prices, to inflation. It is one of the factors which goes along with deficit spending. Unless we can get production we cannot hope to control prices. I have made the statement before, and I make it again, that production is paramount to prices. Chester Bowles does not believe in that philosophy. He never has believed in it, and that is the reason why we do not have production today.

What good does it do to have a ceiling price on beefsteak if we cannot get any meat? What good does it do to have a legal price on nylon hosiery if we cannot get the hosiery? We must get production. If we do not get production, it does not make any difference what the legal price is. In the case of a scarce commodity the price is the black-market price. The people of the country are buying in the black market, and not at legal prices, with respect to most things produced by industry today. Why cannot the people who today because of their limited incomes are pleading that we control prices see the philosophy that what is needed is production and more production if we are ever to control prices? They string along with Chester Bowles and his propaganda artists. Today there is only 20-percent control of meat prices. The black market is expanding day by day, until we no longer have price control. Prices are in a chaotic condition, and are leading the people of the country down the road to bankruptcy.

Production brings higher wages. Why do those who wish to obtain relief from high prices object to production regardless of prices? If we can get production, production will result in higher wages and lower prices. I can prove it.

Let us consider the Ford Motor Co. In 1917 the Ford Motor Co. paid its employees higher wages than were paid by any other automobile company then in existence. It produced more automobiles and it sold an automobile for $390. It was not a bad automobile, either; and we need good low-priced automobiles today. That is a concrete example. That example can be followed by all our industries, if they are able to operate on a production basis. Production is what is needed.

Mr. Bowles and those who favor the conference report feel as I do, I believe, in regard to that premise. But the proponents of the conference report take the position that under Mr. Bowles' administration we shall be able to obtain production, and that we cannot take off controls without disrupting our economy. My answer to that is—and I shall refer to meat, because Mr. Bowles always preaches about meat—that after 4 years we certainly do not have production of meat. Anyone who thinks there is production of meat should try to buy a pound of it. It does not take any fancy figures or Mr. Bowles' charts to demonstrate the actual situation. Try to buy a pound of meat. We have been under the Bowles plan for 4 years now. The conferees say, "Let us extend the Bowles plan for another year." That, Mr. President, is what the conference report amounts to.

Mr. STANFILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUFFMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. STANFILL. In connection with what the Senator from Nebraska has been saying, I should like to read at this point a headline from one of the Kentucky newspapers:

Famine threatened in eastern Kentucky mine fields.

The miners are faced with famine because of a shortage of meat and a shortage of bread. The miners are threatening to quit work. They say they cannot work unless they have meat and bread. That is proof of the point, certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator very much for his contribution, which is of inestimable value at this point in connection with my remarks. It definitely proves what I have said, namely, that there is a meat famine and a bread famine in this country.

The other day, when I was on my way to the Capitol, I drove through the little settlement in Virginia where I live. Automobiles were lined up for nearly a mile. I asked, "Has there been an accident?" The reply was, "No. We are just standing in line, trying to get some bread!"

Mr. President, we have bread famines and meat famines and famines in regard to practically everything else. I do not know any industry which is up to full production. It is claimed that some industries are, but we are unable to learn of any that really are. The conference report would extend the present Price Control Act for another year on the same basis as the present act, except for one or two amendments.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I think what the Senator from Nebraska has been saying is tremendously important. I think that the misunderstanding existing in the minds of the people of the United States regarding the effect of the OPA is most unfortunate. For instance, millions of people think it is only necessary to have a ceiling placed on the price of various commodities. The Senator from Nebraska is saying that the imposition of a price ceiling does not bring the goods into existence.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course.

Mr. HAWKES. The Senator remembers that the other day, during the debate, I produced evidence from the history of the great nation of France showing that during the French Revolution there was a "law of the maximum," but it did not produce the goods.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. HAWKES. What the Senator from Nebraska is saying is most important. I wish the people of the country would understand the situation, so that they would not criticize him or me or others who are deeply interested in seeing that the people get what they need, at the best price at which the needed goods can be produced in the United States. I wish the people of the country would not think, when they hear the Senator from Nebraska talk as he has been, that he is trying to keep them from getting what they really need, namely, production.

Mr. President, what made possible the $390 automobile? It was production.

Mr. WHERRY. That is precisely the point.

Mr. HAWKES. I wish to reinforce what the Senator from Nebraska has been saying, and I wish to stress the point that in our great society and industrial and business organization in the United States we never can reach the point which we are seeking to reach unless we have voluntary cooperation between all groups, as unselfishly as possible. In such voluntary cooperation we must find a fair balance in equity between all groups.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. HAWKES. We cannot set one group in front of the others and pay to the members of that group everything they want, and say to a member of another group, a man who has his hand on a lever which makes a machine work, "We are not going to give you any increase," for, in that event, then his arm will get very tired pulling the lever, and the needed production will not be obtained.

The people of the United States must remember that there is only one way to solve our problems, and that is to get back to full production. The only way in the world to get back to full production is to be fair in stimulating by means of giving fair rewards to every man who is a party to or a part of the great system which brings about production.

I compliment the distinguished Senator from Nebraska for what he has been saying and for what he is trying to do. Again I express the hope that everyone who hears him or who reads his remarks will understand that there is no Member of the Senate who is more interested in the welfare of the people of the Nation, all the way along the line, than is the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from New Jersey for his contribution. He bespeaks my position with more force than I can. Not only does he speak because he believes what he says, but he speaks from practical experience. I deeply appreciate having at this point in the RECORD the remarks of the distinguished Senator from New Jersey, and I am glad they will be printed at this point, because I know that he believes, as I do, that what we wish to do is to help 140,000,000 American citizens to get decent prices. I am pleading for that as I have never pleaded before. I submit to the Senate that, after 4 years, what we must do is obtain production. As to anything that hinders production, we should have the courage and the leadership to remove such impediments, and see to it that we obtain the production we need, and obtain it in what I call the American way.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANFILL] for his references to the article in the Ashland, Ky., newspaper, and I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FAMINE THREATENED IN E-K MINE FIELDS—APPEAL MADE TO WASHINGTON FOR HELP

(By C. E. Forgey)

Hunger stalked eastern Kentucky mine fields today as Big Sandy coal operators frantically sought help from Government officials.

H. S. Homan, secretary of the Big Sandy Elkhorn Operators Association, said he would leave today to seek a conference with Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson in the hope of averting a serious situation.

Homan said a careful survey revealed that hundreds of families would go without Sunday dinner. There is no beef, lard, bread, beans, corn meal, and flour to be purchased in the mining fields' company stores.

"The bakeries which normally serve us notified us at noon today that no deliveries of bread would be made to Big Sandy points next week," Homan declared.

"Unless something is done at once, either the mines will be forced to close—because men cannot work without food—or we will see some serious food riots," the secretary declared.

L. D. Feuchtenberger, head of the Feuchtenberger Bakeries, and J. R. Haislip, of the Norton, Va., bakery, sent the following messages to Homan Saturday:

"H. S. HOMAN,

"Executive Secretary, Big Sandy Elkhorn Coal Operators Association:

"Regret to advise you that our coal-field bakeries at Williamson, W. Va., and at Pikeville and Paintsville, Ky., and Grundy, Va., furnishing the Big Sandy coal-field area almost exclusively with bread, will be closed after today and remain closed until flour is received with which to resume baking. Our largest bakery at Bluefield, W. Va., has been closed this entire week and will also remain closed this coming week. We have commitments on shipments which, if fulfilled, will enable us to start baking July 1. However, these promises do not indicate continued operation. We voluntarily curtailed usage of flour 25 percent as requested by the Government and I have naturally exhausted all possible sources, including the purchase of family flour from retail stores. Any assistance or relief will be appreciated. This situation has been brought to the attention of American Bakers' Association representatives at Washington and others by wire June 5.

"L. D. FEUCHTENBERGER."

"BIG SANDY COAL OPERATORS ASSOCIATION,

"Norton, Va.:

"Unable to operate our bakery after July 2; mill cannot furnish flour due to wheat shortage. We serve the miners in five counties of southwest Virginia and eastern Kentucky.

"J. M. BARKER,

"Manager, Haislip Baking Co., Inc."

Homan said that he had appealed to Commander Gordon King, naval administrator of the coal fields since the Government seizure. King when questioned by the Independent Saturday said he was worried but beyond this would make no comment.

"I am up to my neck in this stuff," King declared.

A survey of 22 stores associated with the Big Sandy organization revea'ed the following situation:

In the last 2 weeks 2,174 pounds of beef had been received in these stores—today there was no beef on hand; 18,026 pounds of pork was shipped into the Big Sandy region in the last 2 weeks; today there was only 50 pounds of pork available and this was at the Koppers Coal Co. store. There was 6,162 pounds of lard shipped into the region from June 3 to June 15—today no lard was available at any of the company stores; the Elkhorn Coal Co. was the only place where lard could be purchased. There was 400 pounds available. No lard could be purchased elsewhere. The Elkhorn Co. was the only store to report corn meal on hand. They had 60 pounds on hand. Three stores reported beans for sale, but the supply was such a small amount that it was hardly noticeable; the Southeast Coal Co. store was the only place where bread was for sale and this store offered 50 loaves for sale. This was to take care of 350 families.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have received thousands and thousands of telegrams similar to one which I received just as I rose to speak in this Chamber. The one which has just come to me is from the little town of Arapahoe, Nebr., which is in the South Platte district of the State, where the farmers are trying to produce enough grain so that supplies will be sufficient both at home and across the seas.

The telegram reads as follows:

ARAPAHOE, NEBR.

Congratulations on your OPA stand today. Texas trucks boldly offering $2.60 per bushel today according to reliable farmers. Local ceiling is $1.33. Complaints filed with Omaha OPA office totally ignored for past 2 months. Situation is terrible.

BILL RANKIN ELEVATORS.

Mr. President, that telegram comes from an elevator operator at Arapahoe, Nebr. I would read thousands of similar telegrams except for the fact that they would clutter up the RECORD.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the reference to "per bushel" in the telegram?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in reply to the question of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, let me say that the reference is to a bushel of corn. The telegram shows that the farmers there are offered higher than legal prices for their corn, by truckers who try to buy the corn and haul it away to the black market.

The telegram again proves conclusively that we do not have price control, that price control has gotten out of hand, that there is chaos in this country. I do not seek to scare anyone or to make an extravagant statement; but I predict that, unless this situation is cured, unless we get back to a respect for law, if we continue price control, so-called, for another year, acts of violence will be committed in this country.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. MOORE. I wish to call the Senator's attention to something of which I know he is already aware. In the debate it has been said that we do not have price control. We simply do not have price control, of course; and it is well known in the Senator's State and in my State that not a truckload of corn or of cottonseed meal or of any other feed which is used for cattle or hogs can be had, except in the black market.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. MOORE. As the Senator has said, today corn is being sold in the black market. Truckers are buying corn from the farms and are taking it to the black market, and it is being sold in the black market. So there is no regular market for corn.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for his contribution. The point he has made is the one I am trying to prove. I take the position that the American people do not now have price control. There is no price control. The black markets are setting the prices. I have said that to the American people time and time again. What is true in regard to meat is true in regard to wheat, and what is true in regard to wheat is true in regard to corn.

Mr. President, how are we going to get the commodities we need? The only way a livestock feeder can continue in operation today is by buying corn at the black-market price. He cannot get it in any other way. That is what the livestock feeder is confronted with. The legal price is $1.33. But to feed steers he has to pay up to $1.75 or even $2.60 a bushel, and the only market is the black market.

So the present situation is causing wholesale disrespect for law, and it has broken down any semblance of price control which we did have. The people of the United States know that today there is no price control.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I agree in general with everything the Senator from Nebraska has said. One thing which he has mentioned is of particular significance, it seems to me, and that is the general break-down of respect for law which has occurred as a result of the wholesale operation of black markets in the United States. It is leaving on the young people of the Nation a definite imprint which will last for the next generation.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I wish to say that the other evening I was invited to take part in a little family dinner. My wife is in Nebraska at this time, and I am getting along alone as best I can. Because of the present shortages, I am having a terrible time. At the dinner we were talking about the food situation. One wife said, "I got some meat today." Another wife said, "I got some meat, too." And they would whisper to each other and say, "I will tell you where I got mine if you will tell me where you got yours." [Laughter.] Thus, winking at the law has been brought right into the household. In the days of bootlegging liquor we looked with disrespect upon one who was a black-market operator or bought in the black market. Today every housewife in the country, if she obtains meat or bread, must be on her toes, because most of it is being sold through the black-market operators.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. We have reached a pretty low level in America if we must violate the law in order to get a loaf of bread.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. His statement is absolutely correct, and what he has stated is what is happening today.

The distinguished majority leader said that when the conferees went into this matter they studied it thoroughly and with a great deal of industry. He stated further that there were emotional feelings and hatreds of minority groups because of the issues involved in the OPA. I agree with the distinguished majority leader, and I may say that no one is more capable than is he of pouring oil on troubled waters and ironing out a difficult situation.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber? Some Members of the Senate wish to listen to the Senator from Nebraska. I think we should have order in the Chamber and in the galleries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I had referred to the statement of the distinguished majority leader that there had been hatreds. I should like to say to the membership of the Senate, and to the people of America, that there is certainly no hatred in my heart. What I believe to be true I am willing to say, and do say from the bottom of my heart. I have no ulterior motives of any kind. Any Senator who believes that it is possible to obtain production under the Bowles program has the right to believe so; and I would say that if that is the way he feels about it he would be a coward if he did not vote to support the bill.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, a point of order. The Chamber is out of order, and I suggest that the Presiding Officer take appropriate action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). The Senator is correct. There must be order in the Chamber.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, are we to have an extra session of the Senate over on the other side of the Chamber, or shall we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We will try to maintain order.

Mr. WHERRY. I know that the Senator is for the bill and that he is not interested in anything I may say relative to production and prices. That is all right. But I want to tell the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senators who vote to agree to the conference report will be doing so after 4 years of faith that production would be obtained. Some of the telegrams which I have received today, and some of the letters which I have received in the Small Business Committee, have come from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. GUFFEY. How does the Senator know that I am going to vote for the conference report? From where did he get that information? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the present indication of the Senator is that he is in favor of the bill and that he is not interested in what I wish to do about it. Moreover, if the past is an indication of future events, the Senator will vote for the conference report, because he votes for every administration measure that comes to the Senate. In that connection, in my opinion, he is a rubber stamp. [Laughter.]

Mr. GUFFEY. I have walked out several times before when the Senator was talking. He is opposed to every bill offered by the administration, and has been ever since he has been a Member of the Senate. I am for the administration.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have the floor. I voted for the extension of the Price Stabilization Act the last time it came before the Senate. I voted for every appropriation asked for by the Office of Price Administration in order to enforce the OPA law. Of course, the Senator from Pennsylvania is just as wrong now in his accusation as he is always wrong on the floor of the Senate.

The statement was made by the distinguished majority leader—and I think he has the right to his opinion—that if the conference report is not agreed to we will not have price control. I believe that the distinguished Senator meant that it would be useless to send the conference report back to the conferees for them to try to iron out more than has already been ironed out. In that respect I agree perfectly with the distinguished majority leader. However, my opinion is that the mechanics of the situation make it imperative that those of us who do not agree with any provision of the conference report must vote against the whole report. We cannot amend it as we do with other forms of legislation. That should be clearly understood, although apparently some Senators do not understand it. We do not have a rule for recommitting the conference report. Our rule, as it was explained earlier in the day by the distinguished President pro tempore when he said that all we can do, if we do not agree with any provisions of the report, is to vote to agree to or vote to disagree to it. That is all that can be done. If the conference report is agreed to, there is nothing else to be done about it. If the report is disagreed to, we can move to return it to the conferees on the part of the Senate with instructions.

Mr. President, what I should like to have the Senate do is to disagree to the conference report. I do not wish that to be done in order to kill the bill. But I have in mind the overwhelming vote of 2 to 1—to take a figure out of the air—on the question of decontrolling livestock, milk, butter, poultry, poultry products, petroleum, and tobacco. As I recall, that vote was 2 to 1. I do not have the figures before me, but I am satisfied that what I have stated is substantially accurate. I should like to have our conferees go back and say, "Here are the votes on each of the commodity amendments. We think you should accept those amendments." That has not yet been done, but it would be customary to do so. Members of the Senate who have been Senators longer than I know that such procedure has been followed time and again.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator believe any man, woman, or child in America can stand on his feet and honestly say that the price control of meat has been successful?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall try to answer for the American people. I believe that no one can say that the price of meat has been successfully controlled. It has been admitted in all the testimony before the committee—and I believe the distinguished majority leader will so admit—that price control on meat has gotten completely out of hand. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has probably spent more time on that subject than has any other Member of the Senate. The Thomas report shows that the price of meat has gone completely out of control. If that statement is not correct, I ask the Senator to give his own version as to whether the price of meat has gone out of control.

Mr. BRIDGES. If the OPA control of meat has been unsuccessful—and I think that the meat situation throughout the country has become a national scandal and that there have been widespread black-market operations in meat—what could be more logical than to remove meat from OPA control?

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. I believe that we will all remember that the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], just before he went to Paris to attend a peace conference—I hope it will be a peace conference—made the statement that he thought that we should try decontrols on meat and see what would result.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I thought there was an implication in something which the Senator said a while ago to the effect that the conferees did not support the Senate version of the bill. I merely wish to say to the Senator that we made a hard fight for the Senate version of the bill, and two of the Senators, including myself, were so disappointed with the results that we refused to sign the conference report. I would not want the RECORD to be silent, at least so far as I am concerned, and indicate that there was any softness in the approach of the Senate conferees in maintaining the Senate version of the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. I certainly did not want the RECORD to contain any implication at all to the effect that the Senate conferees did not fight for the Senate amendments. Especially is that true of the distinguished Senator from Colorado, who I know has been one of the outstanding Senators going along, during these 3 years, with those of us who are interested in decontrol. I would call the Senator the spearhead of those who believe in it, and I certainly would not want to leave any other implication in the RECORD.

I did say—and I hope the distinguished Senator will agree with me in my statement—that in view of the vote taken on the Senate amendments, especially on that having to do with the decontrol of meat, I thought we should resist the conference report, send the conferees back to another conference, and that they should not recede, if possible, from the Senate amendments.

Mr. HAWKES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am still yielding to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. What the Senator has said was also my own view, which was a minority view. As a result of what happened the matter had to go back to the House. The House vote was so overwhelmingly against the very thing we are discussing here now that it has seemed to me—and I have complete respect for any contrary opinion—that it would be a futile thing, resulting in nothing but an impasse, to go over the same road again.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. I wish at this time to ask a question of the Senator from Colorado who has worked faithfully and long and arduously on this subject. Is he of the opinion now that if the conference report is sent back, as I understood the majority leader to state, there would be no chance to get price control? My question is, so what? Have we had any price control anyway? I ask the Senator from Colorado or any other Senator who has informed himself in this subject, what good would it do to have a price-control law, when the only thing it could possibly do would be to oppress the people in every shape, form, and manner, and give those in charge more money and give them more opportunity to act for political purposes, and build up a bureaucracy and regimentation that can have no other effect than be conducive to the people of the country violating the law, for which they have no respect, a law which cannot be enforced. I am not, like the Senator from Nebraska, for any price control, because I think it is all wrong. None of it can be enforced, and it should be completely lifted from the backs of the American people.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Taking the first part first, I am thoroughly convinced that if we rejected the conference report in the Senate and sent it back for further conference, we would come to nothing but an impasse, and the responsibility would then be on us for the death of price control. That brings me to the second part.

I think there is an honest field of opinion that it would be a blessing to this country if price controls were completely stopped, and the sooner the better. There is also an opinion—and I share the opinion—that if we can continue price controls, and if we can end them progressively and as soon as possible, we can cushion the shocks of complete and sudden decontrol, which in my opinion, respectfully asserted, with all due respect to the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma, might have a cataclysmic result.

With all the inefficiencies of OPA—and no one has been more energetic in denouncing them than I have been—I believe that the bill as we have it has much good in it, is constructive in many respects, and if those in authority will follow it, or follow it approximately, the result will be better than a complete and absolute termination overnight.

There can be an honest difference of opinion on that, but so far as I am concerned, I do not intend to get myself hooked on any part of the responsibility for complete and immediate decontrol.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I wish to make one more observation, if I may. The Senator from Oklahoma has suggested that there is no control.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator let me ask him a question before he makes another observation?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the Senator for decontrolling meat, milk, butter, and other dairy products, as proposed by the Senate?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am completely for it.

Mr. WHERRY. Then does the Senator think those of us who still believe in that, and who believe that no controls are better than these fixed controls we are discussing, should ask the conferees to go back once again and see if they can get the amendment through as the Senate voted it?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think the Senator's position is a perfectly legitimate one, which can be held in perfect good faith. I share with him every feeling he has that meat and allied products should be decontrolled. But we fought that out, and we now find ourselves in the situation where we might bring price control to a precipitous end if we sent this report back for further conference.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator does not mean that if the Senate conferees have to go into further discussion of this one amendment, we are voting down price control?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think that would be the precise result. I certainly cannot complain of anyone who wants that result, because, as I have said, a pretty good argument can be made for it, but I do not agree.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator brought the question up, and I wish to ask him a further question. Is there any way, except by voting down the conference report, by which those of us who believe we should have decontrol, under the Senate amendment, of livestock, milk, poultry, and poultry products, can attain that objective?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I do not know of any other way.

Mr. WHERRY. Can the Senator suggest any other way?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Will the Senator permit me to make an observation?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly, but before the distinguished Senator makes the observation, I should like to say to him that I am not one who is going to condone black-market price operations in meat. I should like very much to help to make the bill as good as I can, and the only way in the world that can be done is to vote down the conference report, and vote for another conference, with instructions.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. If I thought we could vote the conference report down and get the result which the Senator wants, I would give it my heartiest approval and my utmost energy. I have already made that fight.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator can make it again.

Mr. MILLIKIN. We have failed, and we cannot repeat it because of what happened in the House yesterday. I am in complete agreement with the Senator that there is no control of meat and allied products at the present time.

Mr. WHERRY. It seems strange to me that after getting 2 to 1 votes on four or five Senate amendments, the Senate conferees come back with the Senate amendments deleted from the bill. That is the point I am making. I think we have a right to ask that the conference report not be accepted, and that it be sent back, and that the Senators who represent us, in whom I have implicit faith, try once again to see if they can not get the House to recede from its position. That is the way we can do it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Of course, the Senator has the right to take the position he has taken. He and I are in complete agreement so far as the specific decontrols are concerned; but that fight has been made. It was made with such intensity on my part that I refused to accept an adverse result, and had there been a vote in the House which would have given the slightest encouragement to a final, ultimate, successful result in achieving specific decontrols, I would have been in the forefront of those making the fight.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me to ask the Senator from Colorado a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. With all due respect to the Senator from Colorado, in whose political judgment and fairness I have the highest confidence, is the Senator from Colorado unwilling to take the responsibility of sending this report back to another conference, when he now admits that the decontrol provision contained in the Senate amendment was in the interest of a proper administration of price control? Then, if it should fail, if it should turn out that it would defeat price control, entirely, how much worse off would the country be than it is today with price control as is?

Mr. MILLIKIN. It is my judgment that if this matter went back to conference we could not agree, we could not bring back any result other than the one we have now; that ultimately we would come to the same pass where we are now, and therefore I think there is no point to it. We might also bring the two Houses to a complete impasse, which would find us on the 1st of the month with no control, not even the semblance of control, and, as I have said, I am unwilling to take a part of that responsibility.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I should like to make one suggeston while the matter is on my mind. There has been a total failure of the administration of price control in the past, when the price control administration had full sway, when they were free of all legal restraints, though there were some congressional restraints, to which they paid not the slightest attention. We have imposed some restraints on them today, but the Senator from Colorado and every other well-informed man knows that under the philosophy of control of prices they will pay no attention to any legal restraints placed upon them, and that the only opportunity we have is for Congress to decontrol those things which are in full supply, which the OPA officials refuse to do.

I will say to the Senator at the same time that just as certainly as that I am now standing here price control as it exists at the present time is perfectly satisfactory to the OPA, is perfectly satisfactory to the President of the United States, is perfectly satisfactory to those who want an opportunity to go ahead with the character of control we have had in the past.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I merely wanted to say that I share somewhat the sentiments of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] regarding the legislative situation, but I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question with regard to meat particularly, and some other agricultural products. Would we not be in a better position, or would not those who feel that there should be some decontrol of these particular products be in a better position with the passage of this bill in view of the provision contained in it, as follows:

That in case of agricultural commodities the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to make a determination as to whether the supply of the commodity is equal to the domestic consumption thereof, and when the supply is equal to the domestic consumption, the Secretary is directed to certify that determination to the Price Administrator, and within 10 days the Price Administrator must remove all price ceilings.

As I recall the testimony given in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on the meat situation, it was practically unanimous, on the part of the meat packers and on down through to those who raise cattle, that the supply was equal to the domestic consumption, and under the provisions of this bill it seems to me, if those facts are correct, it would only be a short time when what the Senator from Nebraska wishes would be accomplished.

I ask the Senator from Nebraska if he does not think that is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to answer the distinguished Senator from Washington. I was going to discuss that very provision a little later on in my remarks, but I might as well take it up now. It is true, as shown in the explanation afforded by the distinguished majority leader, that a decontrol body has been set up, and that the products in question are placed under the control of the Department of Agriculture. Now we come back to the question, Will they take any action looking to decontrol? I simply do not know, Mr. President. I will say that I have a great deal of faith in the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MAGNUSON. He is a cattle man and he ought to know the problems of the cattle growers.

Mr. WHERRY. I think possibly if the Secretary were not overriden in his opinion, if he could always do what he thought best and be free from any pressure, as I hope he will be if this measure is passed—at least we can all hope for it—the bill sets up machinery by which he could decontrol.

I now want to ask the Senator a question. Did the Office of Price Administration, under Chester Bowles, interpret the Barkley-Bates amendment as the Congress intended it should be interpreted?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think in some cases it probably did.

Mr. WHERRY. In some cases? Let me say to my dear friend from Washington, the reason why nearly 26,000 little black-market operators are in the meat business today is because the OPA did not interpret the amendment as the distinguished majority leader wrote it and as it was put into the law. That is why we have a great many black-market operators, as I am satisfied the distinguished Senator from Washington knows.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let me ask the Senator from Nebraska a further question.

Mr. WHERRY. Let me first ask the Senator from Washington a question. We tried to help the late Senator Bankhead in what he sought to accomplish. He was a man for whom I had the highest respect. He has now gone to his reward. Because of his fight to help cotton he will always be the "cotton man" to my mind. He pleaded with tears in his eyes that the Senate write an amendment into the act giving the Secretary of Agriculture authority in reality over anybody else relative to orders issued. That is, others would have to come to him first. We tried to help the late Senator from Alabama in what he sought to accomplish. But did the administration keep faith with him in connection with the provision which he was instrumental in having placed in the act?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I am not familiar with that situation.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator is, surely. The Senator knows that Senator Bankhead time after time on the floor of the Senate complained that the administration did not keep faith with him. He made two or three speeches on that subject. And, out of respect for the late Senator from Alabama, the Senator from Washington will recall now that he heard him make such speeches in which he said that the Secretary did not keep faith with that provision.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let me ask the Senator a further question.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly, the Senator is going to admit it. He is a good sport.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I did hear the speech, but that was the claim made by the late Senator from Alabama and the claim made by many other Senators on that point. As I understood, however, there were some disputed facts in regard to making the decisions which some Senators claimed violated the law.

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. But as I recall the testimony, there was no dispute regarding the supply of meat in this country as compared with domestic consumption.

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, yes; Mr. President, we claim we have more meat animals on hand than needed for domestic consumption.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is what I say. There is no dispute about it.

Mr. WHERRY. We think the supply is greater than the domestic consumption, and that there should be decontrol. That is what we are talking about. The Senator from Washington is in favor of that, is he not?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Every witness who appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, from the meat packer clear on down to the producer of the cattle, the cattle raiser, testified to that effect.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes, that is correct. Then why not decontrol?

Mr. MAGNUSON. It seems to me that the Secretary would have no other alternative.

Mr. WHERRY. Why not have Congress decontrol, and not take any chance on any Government agency doing it?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I have faith in the Secretary of Agriculture. He knows the facts.

Mr. WHERRY. So have I faith in him. In the bill I see that the machinery is set up. I agree with the distinguished Senator that it is set up, as is shown by the explanation given by the majority leader. It comes down to a question of whether the machinery is adequate to bring about decontrol. I am hopeful that it is. I am told that the Secretary will decontrol without any strings attached. I hope he can accomplish it, because I certainly think that the meat and poultry and milk and butter should be decontrolled. I hope the majority leader, in whom we have so much faith, will use his influence in line with the interpretation that he has made so that there will be decontrol of livestock and milk and butter and poultry in the immediate future, and by "immediate" I mean right away.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose the Senator knows, as we on the committee know, that the Secretary of Agriculture did not want this authority.

Mr. WHERRY. I think that is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. He not only did not want it, but he does not relish it. But I have every confidence in the Secretary and in his good faith, in his knowledge of the situation. I recall very vividly his description of it when he appeared 2 months ago before the Committee on Banking and Currency. Although the Secretary did not seek this authority, and did not want it conferred upon him, I have no doubt whatever that he will exercise it and administer it to the best of his ability, in good faith, as Congress intended for him to do.

Mr. WHERRY. I want to thank the distinguished Senator for once again stating what he has already told us earlier today. But I want as forcefully and yet as kindly as I can to call the attention of the Members of the Senate to the fact that in times gone by—and I think I can have this statement verified by the chairman of the complaints subcommittee of the Small Business Committee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], with whom I have worked side by side in hearing after hearing—that there have been violations of the Barkley-Bates amendment; there have been violations by Chester Bowles of what Congress intended. I will say to the majority leader I think that is one of the chief reasons why we find ourselves in the condition we are in today.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator permit me to make a statement about that, inasmuch as it was the so-called Barkley-Bates amendment which I offered here, and it was adopted on the floor a year ago when we had under consideration the extension of OPA?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was a dispute or disagreement between the OPA and the meat industry, the packers, as to really what that amendment meant. They sought a conference with me early this year to obtain my interpretation of the language which I had written myself, and a representative of OPA and a representative of the meat industry came to my office, and we had a long conference about it. I reiterated the interpretation of the amendment that I had given when it was offered, and I told the OPA and the packing representatives that that was my interpretation, that was my intention, and that was the intention of Congress. Following that they did improve the administration of that amendment compared to what it had been up to that time, because the amendment had not been interpreted as I felt it should have been. I gave my very frank opinion to the representatives of both sides, and from that time on there was an improvement. I would not say it was a perfect administration, but it was a better administration of the subject than it had been.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader for that contribution, and I hope that his opinion that the provision has been better administered is correct. I should like to say to the distinguished Senator that certainly the records of the kills at the principal packing plants last week was the worst it has been at any time since price stabilization went into effect.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think that is altogether attributable to any misinterpretation of the amendment I offered. It grows in part out of other conditions which are independent of that.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask a question and then make an observation. Since the Barkley-Bates amendment has been brought in question, as I recall that amendment which was offered in the Senate by the majority leader a year ago and discussed here at considerable length, it was offered as a substitute for what many of us thought was a much stronger provision along the same lines. I do not recall at the moment who offered the language for which the Senator's amendment was substituted.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was quite a lively controversy in the Senate over a pending amendment with respect to the division of livestock meats into categories.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And in an effort to compose the differences, I offered the amendment, which required that a basis be fixed with respect to different categories of meat, so as not to put sheep and mutton and lamb all into one pot and put a price on it all, but to separate the meats into categories. That was the object of the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. The amendment was to prevent stew then, as I get it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, it has not prevented a stew. We are still in it so far as that is concerned. But it was to prevent a general over-all ceiling on all kinds of meats regardless of the kind of meat.

Mr. STEWART. I recall the debate. I thought at the time the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky, our majority leader, had the sanction and approval of OPA as a substitute for the more drastic amendment which it replaced.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not recall from memory whether it had OPA approval. I do not think OPA approved it as much as OPA approved the one for which it was a substitute.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky one other question. It has been said here—I have heard it said two or three times, and other Senators I am sure have heard it said—that Mr. Bowles stated, as I recall before the Banking and Currency Committee, that he would not enforce the Barkley-Bates amendment; that it was not enforceable, and that therefore he would not allow OPA to enforce it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If he ever made such a statement as that, I did not hear it, and I have never heard of it.

Mr. STEWART. I have heard it stated several times.

Mr. WHERRY. I am quite satisfied that it is in the evidence.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not believe that Mr. Bowles made such a statement before the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. He might not have made it before the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not attend every hour of the hearings, which continued over a period of 3 or 4 weeks.

Mr. STEWART. The statement may have been made elsewhere.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have never heard Mr. Bowles make such a statement, and I doubt very much that he did.

Mr. STEWART. I hope he did not; but to be frank, I am rather suspicious.

I should like to ask the Senator a question. Referring to the language read by the Senator from Washington, with particular emphasis on the part which provides that when the supply is equal to the domestic consumption the Secretary—meaning the Secretary of Agriculture—is directed to certify that determination to the Price Administrator, and within 10 days the Price Administrator must remove all price ceilings with respect to the commodity, suppose that the Secretary of Agriculture makes a certification that there is an ample supply, that it has caught up with consumption, and so forth. Is that determination by the Secretary of Agriculture reviewable by Mr. Bowles in his position as czar?

Mr. WHERRY. Not as I understand.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The word used is "must."

Mr. BARKLEY. That certification is not reviewable by Mr. Bowles. He is required to carry it out. If he should refuse to do so, he could be compelled to do so by a mandatory injunction.

Mr. WHERRY. So long as the Senator from Tennessee has brought up this question, I refer to page 3, subparagraph (C) under subsection (2). First, let me read subparagraph (B):

> The Secretary of Agriculture by December 31, 1946, shall recommend to the Price Administrator the removal of maximum prices on all agricultural commodities, whether or not in short supply, not important in relation to business costs or living costs, and prior to that date shall make such recommendations as rapidly as, in his judgment, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect.

Subparagraph (C) read as follows:

> Within 10 days after the receipt of any recommendation under this subsection for the adjustment of maximum prices applicable to any agricultural commodity, or for the removal of maximum prices on agricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs, the Price Administrator shall adjust or remove such maximum prices in accordance with such recommendations.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I wish to learn if the majority leader can throw a little light on this subject. Who is to determine whether these commodities are important or unimportant in relation to business costs or living costs? That is the essence of the whole thing. If one man has the right to say that a particular commodity is important or is not important, we shall still be in the hands of a bureaucrat, no matter how highly he may be regarded. We shall still be in the hands of one man. Can the majority leader throw any light on that question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there are two categories with respect to agricultural commodities. One is those which are in short supply. Not later than the first of the calendar month following the adoption of this act the Secretary of Agriculture is required to report to the Price Administrator agricultural commodities which are in short supply. That is one category.

Subsection (2) (A) reads as follows:

> Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture determines that maximum prices applicable to any agricultural commodity which is in short supply are impeding the necessaray production of such commodity, he may recommend to the Price Administrator such adjustments in such maximum prices as the Secretary determines to be necessary to obtain the necessary production of such commodity.

The Secretary decides when commodities are in short supply. No one else decides it. No one else has any authority over him.

Mr. WHERRY. But he operates under certain limitations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Subparagraph (B) reads as follows:

The Secretary of Agriculture by December 31, 1946, shall recommend to the Price Administrator the removal of maximum prices on all agricultural commodities, whether or not in short supply, not important in relation to business costs or living costs, and prior to that date shall make such recommendations as rapidly as, in his judgment, will be consistent with the avoidance of a cumulative and dangerous unstabilizing effect.

In other words, under the first paragraph which I have read the Secretary of Agriculture decides what products are in short supply.

Mr. WHERRY. Does not subparagraph (C) nullify subparagraphs (A) and (B)?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; it does.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will permit me to finish my answer—

Mr. WHERRY. I have the floor, but I am glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Secretary decides what agricultural product is in short supply. He reports to the Price Administrator. Under the next paragraph, the Secretary of Agriculture decides also what agricultural products are not important with respect to the cost of living or the cost of business, whether or not they are in short supply. He makes that determination, and reports it to the Price Administrator; and the controls are to be removed as rapidly as possible during the period between now and December 31, and entirely removed by that date, under his recommendation.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I thank the majority leader for his explanation; but it brings me back to the only conclusion I can reach, and that is that the whole thing is in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BARKLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. HAWKES. In other words, if he fails to do the right thing the Nation suffers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course. That is true of any officer who has jurisdiction over anything.

Mr. HAWKES. That is one reason why I do not believe that any one man should have jurisdiction over this subject. That is one reason why I felt that the decontrol of meats was important. I may say to the majority leader that a moment ago I was called to the telephone. I talked with one of the most distinguished men in the Government service. I wanted to make an engagement to meet him a little after 5 o'clock, and he told me that he was very sorry, but he had to leave at half past 4 because his butcher had 2 pounds of round steak for him, and unless he got there at 4:30 he would not get it. That shows that meat ought to be decontrolled, from my point of view. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator give me the name of his friend?

Mr. HAWKES. No; I am going to keep it quiet. [Laughter.]

Let me say that the very fact that I will not give the Senator the name of my friend or the name of the butcher is the reason why the black market is thriving so successfully.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want the name of the Senator's friend or the name of the butcher in order to prosecute. I wish to go with the Senator from New Jersey and help him to eat the steak.

Mr. HAWKES. I should like very much to have the majority leader join me.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish again to invite the attention of the majority leader to subparagraph (C) on page 3. I should like to see if his interpretation is the same as mine. The language is as follows:

Within 10 days after the receipt of any recommendation under this subsection for the adjustment of maximum prices applicable to any agricultural commodity—

That recommendation would be the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture to the Price Administrator—or for the removal of maximum prices on agricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs, the Price Administrator shall adjust or remove such maximum prices in accordance with such recommendations.

How does the majority leader answer that?

Mr. BARKLEY. How do I answer what?

Mr. WHERRY. The Price Administrator has the final determination.

Mr. BARKLEY. The language is mandatory. It provides that the Price Administrator shall adjust prices in accordance with the Secretary's recommendation.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Or he shall remove such commodities from price control, according to the recommendation of the Secretary.

Mr. WHERRY. On what basis?

Mr. BARKLEY. On the basis of the Secretary's recommendation.

Mr. WHERRY. The language is:

or for the removal of maximum prices on agricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a matter to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, and not by the Price Administrator. When the Secretary of Agriculture makes his recommendation to the Price Administrator, stating that any agricultural product is not important, either in relation to the cost of living or the cost of business, and recommends removal of maximum prices, it is mandatory upon the Administrator to remove them. Or if the Secretary in his certificate says that additional prices are needed in the interest of greater production, the Administrator is required to establish such prices. He is not authorized to exercise any independent judgment as to how much the prices shall be increased.

Mr. WHERRY. As I read the bill, subparagraph (B) has to do with the recommendation made by the Secretary of Agriculture after he makes his determination. It goes to the Price Administrator, and it becomes mandatory that he do what the recommendation calls for, provided the commodities which he decontrols are not important in relation to business costs or living costs. That language is in the bill, and I think the Price Administrator would be justified in not carrying out the recommendations if in his opinion such commodities should not be decontrolled.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not agree with the Senator, but I should like to read this sentence, which probably has been overlooked. I refer to subparagraph (e) of subsection (3):

No maximum price shall be applicable with respect to any agricultural commodity during any calendar month which begins more than 30 days after the date of enactment of this section, unless such commodity is certified to the Price Administrator under this paragraph as being in short supply.

In other words, under that language agricultural ceilings will come off all agricultural products within 30 days after the effective date of this act unless the certification has come from the Secretary of Agriculture that a product is in short supply.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest that the purpose which was very clearly in the minds of those who considered the subject in the committee was to compel a monthly review of every agricultural product. By the mechanics which have been described by the distinguished majority leader, there would be compelled a monthly certification of that which is in short supply and that which is not in short supply.

I believe it would be helpful to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska if he understood the reason for bringing that direction to decontrol back to the Office of Price Administration. First, we thought it advisable that there be one place where the citizen could find out what the price was, and that it would be confusing if the Price Administrator had a list of prices and the Secretary of Agriculture had another list of prices. By the mechanics provided in the conference report, there is one place where the citizen can find out what the maximum price is.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator refer me to one place in the bill which provides that a citizen can find out what the maximum price is?

Mr. MILLIKIN. All that a citizen needs to do——

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator from Colorado refer to the black-market price or the legal price?

Mr. MILLIKIN. A citizen can ascertain the black-market price by paying it.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. And he can find out the imaginary price by asking the Price Administrator.

One of the reasons why we have the Price Administrator perform the mechanical service of declaring the agricultural commodity to be decontrolled is that the agricultural advisory committees are now serving under the Price Administrator. We thought that to move those over and to set up a whole new system of agricultural advisory committees and put them under the Secretary of Agriculture would be too complicated. That is the main reason why it is provided that the Secretary of Agriculture is to bring the decontrol determination back to the Office of the Price Administrator, who then must, as the report provides, decontrol.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator for his explanation. I suppose if we were to go through each one of the paragraphs and each sentence of the conference report and if we were to obtain the interpretations of those who worked so faithfully in the conference committee, it would be very enlightening. But when we start to read and interpret the conference report as it comes to us now on such short notice, it seems that the Price Administrator must have a definite part to play in interpreting that section. Certainly there should be no doubt about the matter. One of the great troubles we have today is that the statutes have not been interpreted as the Congress wishes them to be interpreted. I say that with all due respect to differences of opinion. We are having differences of opinion here in connection with the pending measure. Certainly no Senator will stand on the floor of the Senate and say that we have not had differences of interpretation in regard to the numerous orders which have been issued by the OPA.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I may draw an analogy in relation to the Price Administrator's function of carrying out the recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to agricultural products, I think it would be a clear analogy to say that his function would be the same as or similar to that of the clerk of a court whose duty it is to record the judgment of the court which is handed down from the bench. I think that is a fair analogy.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the remarks I have made thus far are preliminary to what I would like to tell the Senate in regard to the meat situation. I told the distinguished majority leader that I would take only 30 or 40 minutes; but numerous colloquies have intervened, and I have not been able to present all the arguments which I should like to present in regard to the decontrol of meat, livestock, milk, dairy products, and butter.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I think the Senator from Nebraska is making an excellent record in regard to the meat situation, but I think it would help the RECORD to have inserted in it the statement that for the last 3 years there have been approximately 7,000,000 more cattle in the United States than ever before in the history of our country.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Wyoming. I had intended to include that statement as a part of my remarks, but I am glad to have it come from the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, because it comes from one who is a practical cattleman. If he had written the orders which the OPA has issued in regard to the cattle industry, we would not be involved in the confusion in which we find ourselves today, because the Senator from Wyoming understands the cattle situation both as a cattle producer and a cattle feeder. One criticism of OPA which I know is justified is that too many orders have been written by men in the OPA who did not know the difference between a male critter and a female critter. I have in my files an order in which they asked for the discontinuance for 60 days of the slaughtering of female steers. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I wish to read for the information of the Senator from Nebraska and of the Senate an extract from a statement I made to the Senate a few days ago, before the vote was taken on the OPA bill. At that time I read a statement which comes from the records of history. I should like to read one paragraph of it now, because it bears upon what the Senator from Nebraska has been mentioning:

Many were crushed in the scramble at the bakers' shops.

Earlier today the Senator from Nebraska referred to the great lines of people who were waiting to buy bread.

Many, especially the children, were literally starved. After the fall of Robespierre (July 1794) the law was openly broken. Fortunately, it had neglected to take into cognizance live cattle and sheep—

In other words, they had neglected to control meat—and, consequently, though bread was scarce, meat became tolerably plentiful when it could be sold at a fair price.

So we learn that it was meat, which was not controlled and which became available, that saved the lives of the people.

Agriculture and manufacturing began to revive, especially after the maximum law—

Which was the same as our OPA—had been formally repealed (December 1794).

Mr. President, when that law was repealed and when the people were allowed to resume their normal pursuits, when fair rewards were offered for the production of goods, then France began to produce the things which her people needed, the people began to come back to life, and the nation began to get back upon its feet.

If the distinguished Senator from Nebraska will permit me to do so, I should like to say that I know some of the ablest men in the United States will agree with what the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] said a few minutes ago, when he suggested that this whole thing should be wiped off the slate. As I said the other day, I have not been able to bring myself to vote to do it abruptly. I may be wrong; but I have not been able to bring myself to vote for the total elimination of all price controls instantly. I have not been able to bring myself to believe that I should vote to cut off all price controls at once.

I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that the conference committee should have had a little more regard for the things as to which the Senate has put itself on record as favoring.

I say to the Senator, in connection with a somewhat different matter, that if there had been on the conference committee enough men of the courage and understanding of our distinguished friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], the conferees might have brought back to us a report which would have been totally acceptable.

But I say to the Senator from Nebraska that I am one of those who believe that there are certain controls which must be let down easily and gradually. However, I should like to know that they are going to be let down easily, and I should like to know that the question of when they are to be removed and how they are to be removed will not be left to the whim or idea of one particular man, no matter who he may be, because in the United States 140,000,000 people are waiting to see this matter adjusted to the point, not where they can get all they want, but where they can get all they need, and can get it on time.

I thank the Senator from Nebraska for yielding to me.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from New Jersey for his contribution at this point. I hope he will have the entire speech to which he has referred printed at this point in the RECORD, if he has it before him.

Mr. HAWKES. It is already in the RECORD.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well. I thank the Senator for his remarks.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey brought up a point which I think should be thoroughly understood. Reference has been made to the fact that the House overwhelmingly defeated the decontrol amendment during its consideration of the conference report. Once again I have to speak from memory, because I do not have the record before me. Am I not correct when I state that once prior to this time the question of the decontrol of meat, livestock, poultry, milk, cream, and butter was brought to a vote in the House of Representatives? As I recall—and I think I am not mistaken—there was a difference of only 5 or 6 votes on the question whether they should be decontrolled. I am not positive about that, but I should like to have the record regarding it introduced at this point.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, what happened about that was that when the bill was originally in the House of Representatives, Mr. WADSWORTH, of New York, offered an amendment for the decontrol of meats. I do not think the amendment included the decontrol of dairy products, poultry, and so forth.

Mr. WHERRY. Perhaps not.

Mr. BARKLEY. But he offered an amendment for the decontrol of meats, and it was defeated in the House.

Mr. WHERRY. Was it defeated by a majority of more than 5 or 6 votes?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think so.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have the RECORD introduced here. I am quite satisfied that the vote was very close.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of that, the amendment was defeated. Yesterday the House by a majority of 71 defeated a motion which was broader in its aspects than the Wadsworth amendment, and would have included dairy and poultry products, in addition to meat.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to get to that matter. I thank the majority leader for bringing up the point, but first I should like to refer to the first vote the Senate took. I wish to have these matters placed in the RECORD. I may be mistaken; but the vote was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH in the House of Representatives, and I am quite satisfied that the vote was very close.

The second time when this matter came up was in the Senate of the United States. Unfortunately we did not have a straight out-and-out vote on the question of the decontrol of meat, livestock, poultry, and dairy products. If the conference report is rejected at this time, I shall move that the Senate instruct its conferees to stand by that Senate amendment. I shall do so in order to have a record vote on the question.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator might strengthen the line of the argument which he is now making by recalling that the House voted for the Gossett amendment, which would have decontrolled practically everything.

Mr. WHERRY. That was next; was it not?

Mr. MILLIKIN. That was in the bill which came to the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; it was. So we have a record of the vote on the Gossett amendment, which carried in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the Gossett amendment did not particularize anything. It simply provided a formula which would have resulted in the decontrol of many things. But it did not mention anything by name.

Mr. WHERRY. But was it not argued on the floor of the House that it would accomplish the very purpose we have in mind in regard to the decontrol of meat?

Mr. BARKLEY. Those who opposed the Gossett amendment argued that it would have decontrolled practically everything.

Mr. WHERRY. Particularly meat.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it would have decontrolled a thousand things in addition to meat.

Mr. WHERRY. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky, but the emphasis there was placed on meat. When the Senate voted on the question of the final passage of the bill those who voted for the Senate version of price control had in mind primarily, I think, the decontrol of meat and of milk and of butter and of poultry products. I believe that I am correct in making that statement. I believe that every Senator will agree that the vote on the passage of the bill was in support, primarily, of decontrolling meat and dairy products.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. As I have followed the argument, I gathered the inference that the other House has not yet voted on the decontrol of meat alone.

Mr. WHERRY. No.

Mr. BUCK. Why cannot they be prevailed upon to decontrol meat? Slaughter houses in my State are all closed down. No meat is being purchased and no cattle are being slaughtered.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. He has made a timely suggestion.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I wish to say that that question also came up in the conference. I do not wish to emphasize any partisan matters, but two of the Republican Senators who were members of the conference committee made certain surveys of Republican sentiment on this side of the Chamber, and I understand that similar surveys were made on the other side of the Chamber, the end point of which was that we could not have carried within the Senate the decontrol of meat separated from its allied commodities.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, once again I appreciate the judgment and the opinions of the distinguished Senator from Colorado. This record is piling up, point by point, and I believe that it proves the conclusion which we could all reach, namely, that we should vote down the conference report, and again try to have presented a more satisfactory measure. Why cannot we vote down the conference report? What is wrong about it? Is not that the American way, if we choose it? Is it not good sportsmanship? We have not had an opportunity to accomplish all that may possibly be accomplished. It has been said that if we vote against the conference report and disagree to it, we will kill price control. That might be the opinion of some, but it is not a fact. The fact is that the only way we can cure the situation is to vote down the conference report and then move to instruct the conferees. I believe that every Member of the Senate has the obligation to try. If we cannot get all commodities decontrolled, let us see what commodities we can get decontrolled.

Mr. President, I reiterate what was said by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming. He gave a figure of 7,000,000. I cannot now quote the exact figure, but it seems to me, from statistics which I have seen, that the population of cattle in this country as of the last census ran more than 81,000,000 head. We now have nearly 10,000,000 more head of cattle than we had as an annual average during the 10-year period prior to World War II. Think of that, Mr. President! We have grain. We have the largest agricultural crops ever produced. Yet, because of these price impediments, because of the interpretations of the OPA, because of the idea on the part of some that in czaristic fashion Mr. Bowles can write the economy for 140,000,000 people, we do not have meat today. The only way to obtain it is through the black market where 80 percent of it is being handled. Some say that the question of price is not involved. I say that we have the cattle, and we can get the meat if we do not have impediments thrown in our way. Mr. President, what is the answer to that statement? We cannot write legislation which will cure our difficulties so long as Congress is willing that Mr. Bowles shall interpret in his own way everything that is written into price-control laws.

Last week I was in Nebraska for 4 days. We may talk about charts and statistics, but on the farm south of Pawnee City, Nebr., which was operated by my father for 50 years before I undertook to operate it, we have always fed cattle, and there are 27 cattle feeders between our farm and the Kansas State line. Ordinarily, at this time of the year, we are getting white faces on that farm ready for the market in August, which is one of the best markets of the year. Yet there is not a cattle feeder who has one hoof in those feed lots today. Why? Because the price directive of Mr. Vinson does not permit feeding cattle at a profit. Why? Because the feeders cannot buy corn, the ceiling for which has been fixed at $1.33, while the Vinson price directive legalizes corn at $1.03 a bushel. If we obtain corn at all, we must pay at least $1.75 a bushel for it. We must pay almost double what the price was formerly. When the Vinson directive was issued we had a top price of $17.50 a hundred for cattle. How many feeders will feed cattle when the top price is such a figure as that? Mr. President, the price extension of the Price Control Act as provided in the conference report will not help the feeder in any way whatever. It will not enable consumers to obtain meat. What I have said has come from a man who has fed cattle and knows what he is talking about. We cannot eat statistics or charts. We must eat beefsteak. The only way to obtain beefsteak is to obtain production.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if, when comparing the House bill and the Senate version, he does not believe the conference report results in weakening both versions.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly. But I shall not go into that question. I do not want to be placed in a position of unnecessarily consuming time which I should use in presenting my arguments. What I am saying today is being said from the bottom of my heart. I am telling the Members of the Senate what I believe to be true.

Mr. President, something has been said about the question of politics. My goodness! politics should be thrown to the wind, because this country, in many localities, is faced with chaos as a result of a wholesale disrespect for law because of black-market operations not only in meat, but, as some Senators know, in other commodities such as lumber. Can any Senator who comes from a lumber-producing region say there are no black-market operations in lumber? No. What about textiles and automobiles? We talk about production. We cannot get meat, we cannot get milk, and we cannot get textiles without going to the black market and paying exorbitant prices, or standing in line for hours and hours in an attempt to obtain a very meager amount.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. If the figures which the Senator from Nebraska gave are correct with reference to the number of cattle on the hoof, would it not be his opinion that, under the section of the bill pertaining to decontrol, the Secretary of Agriculture would have to release the controls?

Mr. WHERRY. No, I do not believe so. I will tell the Senator why. The Senator has asked several such questions this afternoon, and I think they are very proper questions. Allow me to state what I believe with reference to the subject of supply and demand. I had provided for the subject in my speech, but I have not yet had an opportunity to reach my speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAGNUSON. I am sorry.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not mean at all to be discourteous. I have the highest regard for the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Does the Senator know where his speech ended before I interrupted him?

Mr. WHERRY. I will call it a set speech, if it will make any difference to the Senator.

The bill calls for the decontrol of agricultural products which are not in short supply. Thus, it is seen that, as a practical matter, the conference report contains no decontrol formula. What is or is not in short supply would be within the control and discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture and the decontrol board. No complainant could ever prove there was not a short supply of an agricultural commodity. That is the position which I take. Meat is a good illustration. Notwithstanding the great surpluses of livestock on the ranges and farms, all that would be necessary in order to bring about an apparent short supply would be for a Government agency to claim the need for a large quantity of meat for relief, or some similar purpose. That is exactly what is being done now. Such a demand would be reflected in our domestic supply.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Senator referred to our domestic supply.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. We are scraping the bottom of the barrel today because we are sending abroad a great quantity of our fats and oils. Fats and oils are going to Russia. During the last quarter we exported 317,000,000 pounds of fats and oils, some of which went into the Ukraine and into White Russia. We sent eight boatloads of corn to Europe. The people there did not know what it looked like or what to do with it when it got there.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator has brought up the matter, we might make clear the legislative picture of Russia's position so far as food is concerned. Russia has refused to contribute her quota to UNRRA. Certainly, she has requested relief from UNRRA, and UNRRA relief has gone to two Russian states, namely, the Ukraine and White Russia, as the Senator has said. Russia has requested and accepted from UNRRA relief in foodstuffs for two of the principal Russian states. Then she proceeded to sell to France 500,000 tons of grain, and announced her action through the head of the Communist Party there prior to the elections, all of which was done for political purposes. That is the record.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. A few minutes ago I was called to the telephone. I had received a long distance call from the junior Senator of North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG]. Today he feels that he has received a fresh mandate from the people in that he has polled 29 percent more votes than did his two opponents together. He feels that such vote is a mandate directed at the meat situation as affected by the conference report. He has asked me, in view of that fact, and in view of the confidence expressed in him, to arrange a pair for him to see that he is recorded as voting for the decontrol of meat and foods.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I just came into the Chamber, but I thought I understood that there was some comment about our having sent foods and oils to the Ukraine and White Russia.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. I am sure the able Senator from Nebraska recalls the testimony of Mayor LaGuardia, the head of UNRRA, recently before the Committee on Small Business, in which statement he made it clear that fats and oils were being sent to the Ukraine and White Russia because the UNRRA authorities found that the people there did not have them. We were not sending wheat, but were sending fats and oils, because they did not have them. Mayor LaGuardia also told us that his organizaiton were following up with their own personnel the distribution of everything that was sent by UNRRA to those countries.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me point out also that if the people in two of the Russian states fail to have fats and oils, so do the people of most of the United States fail to have them. I think that is a very important point.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I do not know how——

Mr. WHERRY. I have the floor. Does the Senator want me to yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I was going to ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not know how the Senator can make a comparison between the shortage or apparent shortage in White Russia and the Ukraine and the United States.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have made a comparison. I know that Russia has refused to contribute to UNRRA, and I know that UNRRA, in turn, has furnished substantial quantities of food to two of the Russian states. I also know that Russia has sold 500,000 tons of grain to France, a fact which was announced by the head of the Communist Party of France. That is the record.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. This will be the last question.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not know where the Senator from New Hampshire obtains his information, but I got an entirely different picture of Russia's part in UNRRA from Mayor LaGuardia's testimony before our committee—and the able Senator from Nebraska was present and heard the testimony—than I got from the statement made by the able Senator from New Hampshire, and I think that Mayor LaGuardia is in a position to be exceedingly well informed about the matter.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me point out, too, that the countries which are in discussion here are also the countries which have refused the press access to their territory, even at the request of the President of the United States.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire and also the distinguished Senator from Florida for their colloquy. I should be glad to furnish the testimony of Mayor LaGuardia, if the Senator would like to have it. It was in the same hearing when I propounded the question about the transportation of wheat to France, and LaGuardia stated they were furnishing bottoms for the transportation of wheat.

I had just come to the point in my remarks where I was answering the distinguished Senator from Washington to the effect that it would be difficult ever to prove when the supply would catch up with the demand. I am satisfied that those of us who have been close to the food situation realize that UNRRA, the Commodity Credit Corporation, the military, and other Government organizations, go right out into the market. They have priorities, and they buy what they need, and we take what is left. That is the way it is operated. When commitments are made by the Allied Food Control Board through our Department of State they are definite, and it is those definite commitments today which are causing us our domestic trouble. It is having an impact upon our domestic economy.

I should like to have the RECORD show that I believe in all our citizens under the American flag having all the food they need, no matter where they may live. The time has come when we have to go into these commitments and find out where the food has gone, because if things continue the way they are going, we are not only going to have to scrape the bottom of the barrel but we will have trouble in this country before a year passes.

So I say to the distinguished Senator from Washington, it is going to be very difficult to know when the supply equals the demand. I do not know how the Secretary of Agriculture, with conditions as they are today, could say that he could decontrol meat because of the commitments made even though there are 10,000,000 head of cattle more than in prewar years. I do not see how he could say that. He does not know. His testimony was to the effect that he does not know what the commitments are, even though he sits on the board.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Senator from Nebraska and I apparently have a different version. As I understand the report of the conferees, it says when the supply of a commodity is equal to the domestic consumption. It would not have anything to do with foreign commitments.

Mr. WHERRY. Domestic consumption is concerned with foreign consumption, and we can never tell when we will decontrol meats, so long as such commitments exist.

I appreciate the Senator bringing that to my attention, and I think it proves conclusively that we should send the conference report back and see if we cannot decontrol meat. The people are looking for Congress to take the leadership. The controls have fallen down, and they are looking to Congress to take the leadership and write meaning into the statute and not leave it to an administrative official in OPA.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me point out to the Senator, along the line of what he was discussing as to the international food situation, that I know the Senator from Nebraska and other Senators are anxious and willing and extremely desirous of sharing America's food with the starving in other lands. But what we object to is, first, having the food we send and the money we contribute utilized to promote the selfish ends of dictators; or, secondly, to promote political intrigue in some foreign nation, and in a way stultify the principles for which we fought the war, and result in oppression of people we sought to bring freedom to in other lands. That is exactly what a part of the food is going for today, and I predict here on the floor of the Senate now that the time will come when we will see developed some of the greatest scandals we have ever seen, international in character, concerning the use or misuse of American food.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire for his observation. After being present at the food hearing for many months, I know there is certainly much justification for the statement just made by him.

Therefore, Mr. President, for the reasons I have stated, I think no one has the right to believe that, with OPA functioning as it does now, supply will ever come into balance with demand.

Almost the last thing Mr. Paul Porter, of the Office of Price Administration, said before the Committee on Banking and Currency was:

> I would say that we are in the business of keeping the law of supply and demand from working. There is no question about that.

Those were the words of the Administrator. He does not intend to bring them into balance, he intends to write orders to keep them out of balance. That is what he meant.

Now let me tell the Senate what Mr. A. L. Erickson, in charge of the Meat Division, said before the Banking and Currency Committee on May 10 in response to questions by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. First I quote the question of the Senator from Colorado:

> So that in this field—

He was talking about livestock and meat—

> So that in this field you gig back from the proposition that when supply and demand are in balance you still will not decontrol.

I want the Members of the Senate to get that. He said that was what they were doing. They first said they were for supply and demand, and this is the question from the Senator from Colorado:

> In other words, you say that in this instance supply and demand can be in balance, but you will not permit it to be in balance, because if you do permit it to be in balance the price would rise?

That is the question of the Senator from Colorado. This is Mr. Erickson's answer:

> I think that is true of any commodity, sir.
>
> Senator MILLIKIN. I just want to understand if that is your theory?
>
> Mr. ERICKSON. Yes, sir.
>
> Mr. PORTER. It is the same situation as if a manufacturer were withholding goods.
> Senator MILLIKIN. And it is perfectly apparent to you that you will never decontrol if you do not allow enough supply to balance demand.

What do Senators think of that? In the face of that statement, we are not going to get decontrol of livestock or milk, or butter, or poultry products, so long as Mr. Porter and Mr. Bowles operate the Office of Price Administration. I do not care what we write into the statute to the contrary, we are just never going to get it. That is what they mean. We are giving one man authority to run our domestic economy.

Let me say something else. Mr. Bowles is an advertising man, and now he has in the State Department a partner by the name of Benton who is going to have considerable to say about our foreign policy. So we have a partnership of two men running the domestic policy and much of the foreign policy of the United States of America. I think this is deliberate, premeditated notice to the Senate and to other legislative representatives of the people, that OPA is cognizant of its ability to sabotage the decontrol provisions of the conference bill, and it is its announced policy that it will do so. I say it intends to do so, and that it is serving notice on the Senate that that is what it will do, regardless of what we do here. It should be clear to all Members of this body that unless Congress decontrols meats and all other agricultural products which are now in the black market, they will not be decontrolled.

Mr. President, I have prepared a 30-page document which gives the history of the black market from 1943. I do not want to take any more of the time of the Senate, so I shall place it in the RECORD. It presents the livestock and meat situation from month to month; it presents the situation as it exists with respect to the feeders, the producers, the processors, and the distributors.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARVILLE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

LIVESTOCK AND MEAT AND THE OPA

Four years of OPA failure in livestock and meat controls are responsible for the most critical meat situation we have ever known in this country. There is no close parallel. It would be unbelievable if the record were not so convincing. It is a national scandal and disgrace.

Few industries in our country are as large or as important to us as livestock and meat. It provides the meat we want and need, the raw materials for much of our raiment, fats to give us energy, soap to keep us clean, medicines to aid our health, and a livelihood to millions of our people. We cannot let this great industry be further sacrificed, if not wholly ruined, by the self-perpetuating policies and demonstrated failures of the OPA.

Strange as it may seem, the OPA itself was responsible for the beginning of the black market in meat. It commenced when the OPA instituted profit control as an integral part of price control in 1942.

OPA was not satisfied to establish meat price ceilings at existing levels. It rolled them back to levels of the low-demand lenten period of 1942. It froze meat prices at levels out of line with existing livestock prices and thereby immediately placed the legitimate operator in a price squeeze and at the mercy of the unscrupulous buyer who knew very well that there was no plan or program for effective meat price ceiling enforcement. No serious meat enforcement campaign was even commenced until December 1942.[1]

Packers whose sole income depended upon a reasonable operating margin on meat were promptly faced with the alternatives of going broke or going black. Other meat processors, with large sidelines of business, had the choice of curtailing their meat operations to minimize their losses, or also going black.

From the beginning of price control there has been a price squeeze on some species of livestock and a consequent inviting opportunity for the black marketeer in meat.

---

[1] Ninth Quarterly Report of OPA, March 31, 1944.

As early as March 1943 the OPA acknowledged the meat black market. Administrator Brown told the Special Committee on Small Business (Doc. No. 84369):

"I believe the black market (in meat) is at the bottom of this situation where demand and supply are in bad condition."

Again in March 1943 the OPA, the Department of Agriculture, and Office of War Information, in Book VII, Campaign Against the Black Market in Meats, said:

"Anyone who has gone to a butcher shop within the last 3 months knows all is not well in the meat business * * *."

"The conditions are the result of a huge black market in meats—a black market so extensive it has disrupted the normal meat supply and meat distribution machinery of the United States."

This was the situation after less than a year of OPA.

After 4 years of OPA, we might summarize the current black-market meat situation by saying, "It is at least four times as bad as after 1 year of OPA."

The "price squeeze" that OPA placed and has maintained on meat packers was only one of the ways in which OPA contributed to the conditions that made meat black marketeering profitable and uncontrollable. The roll-back subsidy program in June 1943, obviously added pressure to the meat price line. Ceilings were reduced 10 percent on meat in the face of rapid increases in purchasing power. Meat consumption was thereby encouraged by a 10-percent price reduction in the face of a serious black market already out of control.

In June 1943, almost half of the Chicago cattle receipts were being shipped away from the market for slaughter elsewhere—or nearly twice the pre-OPA proportion—because black-market slaughterers were paying more for these cattle than legitimate packers at Chicago could afford to pay and sell beef at ceiling prices.

What did the OPA decide to do? Enforce its meat price ceilings, which clearly was the problem? No, no, as usual, it issued another regulation; one to supposedly control live-cattle prices. Three features of the cattle stabilization program are worth noting because they illustrate OPA policies and operations.

1. Live cattle maximum and minimum prices were set at levels so that even if cattle could be purchased at the minimum of the range, the legitimate slaughterer would incur heavy losses. The industry protested vigorously but OPA made the regulation effective, and "froze" the "squeeze" on the legitimate beef business.

2. OPA embarked at the same time on a course of using subsidies as instruments of price-control enforcement, price juggling, and discrimination rather than merely as a price roll-back compensation.

3. Finally, in the Cattle Stabilization Order, OPA definitely and admittedly commenced its policy of meat production control, which has never ended. Cattle feeding and efficient finishing were clearly discouraged by the live cattle prices which were established and, in the face of a large supply of feeder cattle and a shortage of beef, production was curtailed.

In many ways the OPA has discouraged maximum meat production and thereby contributed to the shortage of meat and the opportunity and growth of the black market. The OPA propaganda that our meat troubles are all due to increased demand is far from the facts. We have not had maximum meat production, large as it has been, and the black market in meat has resulted in untold waste of good, edible meats and meat food products.

OPA regulations, directives, orders, and propaganda—have caused no end of confusion and uncertainty in the minds and plans of our livestock producers. It takes time—a long time—to produce meat on the hoof. Livestock producers have always been willing to make long-time plans on their judgment of market prospects. But they will not, and cannot, be expected to plan and push full production when it depends upon the changing notions and ill-conceived ideas of a Government agency like the OPA as to what production and prices should be—and worse yet—what the black market demand might be, months ahead.

Nobody knows what meat production might have been except for the confusion and uncertainty arising from price and subsidy controls and changes, and the black market. Certain facts, however, provide good reason to be sure it could have been much higher and very much better distributed seasonally.

The slaughter of nearly 14,000,000 veal calves in 1944, compared with only 9,000,000 in 1940, shows how beef calves were liquidated due to uncertainty in the cattle outlook. They were slaughtered to produce but little meat instead of being grown on grass and roughage for a year, and fed out last winter and this spring with a little grain to augment our beef supply right when it has been most needed. You cannot blame producers for not growing and feeding those calves over a period of 18 months with the uncertainty there was in the situation of price control, subsidies, and the black market.

Nor can you blame cattle feeders for not putting light-weight cattle into their feed lots for the past three falls and planning to keep them 3 to 9 months to make a large tonnage of beef with the efficient use of some grain and lots of roughage. No—they have done the only safe thing. They let the light-weight cattle go to the cattle kill and bought heavy weight feeders which could be fed heavily on grain for a 30- to 60-day period for a fast gain and quick sale before the OPA had a chance to change the rules.

Our beef supply in the spring depends on fed cattle. With the whole cattle feeding picture hazardous and discouraging to feeders, and with short feeding the rule insofar as feeding was done, there is little wonder that supplies of beef have been curtailed each spring and especially limited more than necessary in the late spring—April, May, June—after the short-fed cattle were already mostly marketed.

Public spirited, experienced men in the livestock and meat industry always wondered whether any system of price control could work in such a complex industry. In wartime they felt a serious and sane attempt should be made, and notwithstanding the attitude and policies of the OPA, these cattle feeders, and industry leaders cooperated wholeheartedly. They encouraged and aided enforcement as the keystone of price control success. The most serious enforcement they got out of OPA was constant surveillance of themselves—the very ones who were trying to be helpful. Show me a racketeer that has been punished.

Meat rationing was supported by the industry. Its observance beyond that depended on voluntary cooperation—never on serious enforcement efforts by OPA.

Whether OPA regulations could have been enforced is a moot question. There never was more than a token effort a enforcement, and now the black market in meat has thoroughly whipped the OPA. Any possibility of enforcement has long since vanished.

More and more regulations have always been OPA's answer to lack of control. Certainly no one can accuse OPA of being lax in their "regulation manufacturing departments" or in so-called "informational" activities. Just imagine—since May 11, 1942, 112 regulations and directives and more than 1,100 amendments had been issued affecting the beef and veal division of the industry alone, at the last count. No single operator could possibly understand all of these regulations, much less comply with all of them if understood.

These regulations constitute the evidence of OPA efforts to control livestock and meat. There are more words in these regulations than there are dollars in fines assessed against meat black marketeers—more pages of regulations than suits filed—and more regulations and amendments, many times over, than persons put in jail for all meat control violations together. I am confident that the man-hours spent by the OPA on regulations and publicity would exceed by great odds all the hours of thought, as well as work, done on meat-price enforcement.

And the program of OPA in the most serious situation yet, is the same old story—another regulation, the slaughter control order, and another impotent threat of enforcement. OPA pleads for another chance for another regulation—this time for one that was tried and failed miserably a year ago.

Over 50 percent of the cattle receipts in Chicago in July 1945 were shipped out as slaughter cattle at prices which only the black-market slaughterer could recover. That is how slaughter control didn't work last year.

Furthermore, the OPA has not explained why 10 legitimate national packers who slaughtered 70 to 75 percent of all federally inspected cattle, prewar, were down to less than 30 percent in the last week of April 1946 and still were less than 30 percent of the total in the last 3 weeks of May 1946.

While discussing federally inspected cattle slaughter, I wish to call attention to how the OPA has time and again misled us to believe that Federal inspection is synonymous with OPA compliance. The OPA has inferred this both in its publications and in testimony before committees of the House and Senate. The facts simply do not bear this out. Noninspected black-market slaughter is undoubtedly most rampant and dangerous to the public health, but it is clear that a substantial amount of federally inspected meat also is being sold at over-ceiling wholesale prices.

But the OPA has not yet explained why 10 representative national packers, who are doing all the beef business they can on a legitimate basis, slaughtered 44 percent less cattle in March 1946 than in March 1945, 58 percent less in April 1946 than in the year before and, again, 58 percent less in May 1946 under the control order than in May 1945. In the same periods, compared with a year earlier, total federally inspected cattle slaughter was down only 25 percent in March, only 27 percent in April, and only 24 percent in May.

The only explanation yet offered by the OPA to these facts has been the accusation that these national packers were on a buying strike to wreck the OPA, when the OPA must well know that cattle are selling well above compliance prices except only for a few animals and a few lots that can be purchased here and there in compliance.

Secretary Anderson made it clear that there is no cattle buyers' strike in these companies, in his testimony before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, May 1, 1946:

"Mr. ANDERSON. I think that it is absolutely true that the large, well integrated packers have not been able to go into the market and buy cattle. I realize that there has been a belief that they are on a buyers' strike, but we have tried to check, in the times that we were running the plants, and we found it impossible for those firms to go into the market and buy cattle within the compliance range. The difficulty is that they are large.

"Mr. BARKLEY. They are what?

"Mr. ANDERSON. They are large; that they are well recognized; that they are reliable, and they are not willing to gamble with buying cattle at improper prices; and therefore, if the ceiling is $17, they must stay within the compliance range and they do try to stay within that range. They try to buy within it. But they are up against the competition of people who are not in the slightest interested in staying in the compliance range, and who take it away from them as fast as they can."

Certainly nobody questions the existence of a widespread black market in meat today. OPA admits it—but of course is loathe to admit how serious it really is. It is not new for the OPA to admit the meat black market. As a matter of fact, the OPA record shows the admission of the problem throughout the period.

Price Administrator Brown bemoaned the meat black market in 1943. OPA quarterly reports in March and September 1944, recognized the problem and threatened again to do something about it. On March 6, 1945, Administrator Bowles said:

"We estimate above ceilings on food cost American families above $1,000,000,000 a year."

Congressional committees have likewise recognized and deplored the meat black market. The report on May 1, 1945, of the Special Committee to Investigate Food Shortages for the House of Representatives, of which Secretary Anderson was then chairman, discussed "Black market expansion" at length on page 10 and then said under the heading, Inflation in black market prices:

"This surely indicates the inflationary spiral that quickly moves into the black market operation, and indicates as well the cost to the American public of not being able to control the price of meat and hold the line on that important part of the American diet.

"The best evidence of the dislocation that has taken place in our meat distribution system is the fact that legitimate processors of meat and legitimate wholesale and retail distributors of meat find it increasingly difficult to secure supplies to meet the civilian requirements while those engaged in black market operations seem to have an abundance of supplies both at wholesale and retail levels.

"Many legitimate dealers both in processing, wholesaling, and retailing, are being forced out of business because they are trying to hold the line and comply with Government regulations."

Shortly thereafter the Special Subcommittee on Agriculture and Forestry submitted its Interim Report pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 92, finding that one of the important causes contributir - to the shortage of meat for civilian consumption was:

"The diversion of livestock from normal channels of slaughter and distribution into the black market and the failure of the Office of Price Administration to take effective enforcement measures."

Everybody talked about the black market in meat and deplored it month after month, but not until this spring were actual facts developed on a broad basis to really show how widespread and serious it was.

In testimony during the past several weeks, before the three committees of this Congress—the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate—the black market in meat has been finally measured and labeled for what it is—or was, early this year. I am positive the situation is much worse than it was then.

Mr. President, we do not have price control on meat—we only have an OPA fiction of price control. Worse than this, we have a national scandal and disgrace with ramifications too great to imagine and too dire to be tolerated any longer.

Even under the black market of 3 months ago, the American public was paying more than $2,000,000,000 a year over ceiling prices for meat, including subsidies. Perhaps they can stand this bill, but this is only the out-of-pocket cost. It does not measure the many indirect losses nor some of the more sinister and dangerous effects of the black market on our people and our country.

Disregard for meat price control is breeding contempt for our laws and, I am afraid, already doing harm to the moral fiber of many of our once self-respecting citizens.

The meat black market is very definitely imperiling the public health through the unbelievable insanitary conditions of slaughter and distribution. As we now come into the warm summer season, slaughterhouses and trucks and consumer outlets without adequate refrigeration, or any at all, are shocking to contemplate as a health hazard.

In the face of the need to conserve every possible pound of meat and animal products, millions of head of livestock have been diverted from established packinghouses with a wide reputation for saving "everything but the squeal" and shipped over long distances to a rampant black market which is neither equipped for nor interested in saving the byproducts.

In testimony before committees of this Senate, representatives of the legitimate beef slaughtering industry estimated conservatively an actual loss of 95,000,000 pounds of beef in 1945 due alone to tissue shrink in excessive shipping of cattle compared with normal. I would estimate it is running at twice that amount now.

It was estimated that byproduct losses as a result of black-market cattle slaughter in 1945 amounted to 118,000,000 pounds, with a value of $33,000,000. This covered only the losses of edible fat, inedible fat, grease, hoof meal, dried blood, tankage and meat scrap, tripe, casings, diaphragm meat, cheek and head meat, beef brains, melts, oxtail, and the 15 percent of the hides which is lost for leather on the average country hide.

Nobody, to my knowledge, has even tried to estimate the amount of these products that are being lost at the present, giving consideration to the grealy increased level of black-market slaughtering compared with 1945.

The black market waste of glands and other byproducts essential to the preparation of vital pharmaceuticals is perhaps the most sinister result of this black market situation. During the hearings before the Committees on Agriculture and Forestry, and Banking and Currency, reports were received from the various national pharmaceutical laboratories stating that the situation was critical with them, even at that time, because they could not obtain necessary raw materials due to the black market diversion of livestock from legitimate slaughterers.

Mr. President, human lives are endangered as a result of the declining production of essential pharmaceuticals. Several vital medicines are derived solely from livestock, for example:

Insulin for the treatment of diabetes can only be made from pancreas glands.

Pituitary glands from cattle produce two important medicines one of which is used in childbirth and the other in most surgical cases and for shock.

Adrenalin for the treatment of asthmatic conditions as well as a heart stimulant is produced from beef suprarenal glands.

Adrenal cortex extract for the treatment of Addison's disease is also produced from the suprarenal glands and is the only known treatment for this disease and must be administered daily much like insulin for diabetes.

Dehydrocholic acid, made from ox bile, is a very effective treatment for certain liver, gall bladder, and intestinal disturbances.

Liver extract made from calves' and other livers is used for treatment of pernicious anemia.

The black market in meat is rapidly destroying the source of these vital pharmaceutical materials and unless the black market is eliminated forthwith millions of people are going to suffer extremely. For example, over 1,000,000 diabetic people depend upon insulin solely to alleviate their suffering.

To be more specific, let me call your attention to the following telegram dated at Chicago, Ill., Thursday, June 5, 1946, from one of the leading pharmaceutical companies in the country, the Wilson Laboratories:

"Senator KENNETH WHERRY,
"Senate Office Building,
"Washington, D. C.:

"Present inability of legitimate packers to get livestock causing serious medicinal situation through lack of raw glands to make insulin for diabetics, adrenals for adrenal cortext extract for Addison's disease, pituitaries for posterior pituitary solution for childbirth and surgery, ox gall for bile products for liver and gall-bladder ailments.

"To illustrate, Addison's disease patients must take daily injections of adrenal cortex extract to keep alive. In crisis large quantities must be given to revive the patients. Our present supplies of extract are insufficient to take care of needs of these unfortunate individuals with Addison's disease. Unless something is done immediately to make it possible to get necessary raw glands, there is grave danger of death in many cases of Addison's disease, some of which have been maintained on our extract for more than 9 years. Other firms making similar products are in same situation."

The black-market diversion of livestock has further made it necessary for legal slaughterers to lay off thousands of employees with many years of experience and valuable skills. Thousands more have suffered serious reductions in their weekly hours of work because of the reduced volume of slaughter.

For example, a survey of 10 legitimate national packers showed that from January 12, 1946, to March 30, 1946, they had to lay off 11,765 employees and that there was a loss of 1,747,814 man-hours of work by their packing-plant employees. They actually had a 54-percent decrease in man-hours in the cattle-killing departments from the week ending January 12 to the week ending March 30, 1946. Of course the situation has become much more serious and acute since the end of March.

This employment situation affecting alike large, medium, and small legitimate processors of meat explains why the president and secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, AFL, the long-time established union in the meat industry, very realistically sent a telegram to President Truman, Secretary Anderson, and Messrs. Bowles and Porter on April 5, 1946, demanding that meat be decontrolled. It said, in part:

"We are firmly convinced that present Government regulations in the meat-packing industry are unenforceable. These inoperable prohibitions have already resulted in thousands of men and women in packing plants being unemployed. They have resulted in scores of meat-packing plants closing their doors. Unless something is done quickly hundreds more will do likewise. * * *

"These regulations only result in a terrific increase in the cost of meat to the consumer, and the Government and the OPA is responsible for the situation. It is responsible for the loss of the thousands of jobs of our membership and responsible for the present inability of hundreds of legitimate slaughterers to continue their business.

"We feel sincerely that if these restrictions were eliminated the prices of meat to the consumer would within a very short time level off, which would result in cheaper purchases of the product.

"Why not give these men who have been in the meat business all of their lives an opportunity to prove what they can do and release the controls. * * * At least the men who know the industry ought to have a chance to operate it so the consumer may have lower prices and so that the thousands of men and women who earn their livelihood in the industry might have the opportunity to do so."

These are some of the more tangible reasons for calling the meat black market a national scandal, to which must be added whatever may be the financial loss and, in many cases irreparable harm, that has been done to scores of long-established, efficient meat processors who have elected not to go "black."

A meat packer must have a reasonable volume in order to operate economically or efficiently. The figures on the number of cattle slaughtered this year, and especially in recent weeks, by 10 representative, legitimate national packers show without question that they are practically out of cattle killing—are just on a stand-by, waiting basis.

Mr. President, this is the record of the number of cattle killed by these ten packers who did 70 to 75 percent of all federally inspected cattle slaughter in pre-OPA times, but who are now down to less than 30 percent. I have their number from the beginning of 1946 through the week ending June 8, and the corresponding number in 1945, or last year, and in the more normal year of 1941. There was also a serious black market in meat a year ago which adversely affected their operations; nevertheless their slaughter for the week ending June 8 was only 25 percent of a year ago:

Cattle slaughter of 10 representative national packers

Mr. President, there were 7,243,000 steers on farms and ranches in this country on January 1, 1946, compared with only 5,939,000 on January 1, 1941, an increase of 22 percent. From January 1, 1941, to January 1, 1946, official Government data shows, furthermore, that the total number of all beef cattle increased by 20 percent and the total number of all kinds of cattle, including milk cows, increased by 9 percent.

Yet, Mr. President, the cattle slaughter of these 10 companies, who bought every head they could find at compliance prices—and they have the best cattle buyers in the country—decreased in the first 5 months of 1946 by 44 percent compared with the same period in 1941.

Let me emphasize this—they had a 44 percent decrease in their slaughter compared with a 22 percent larger supply of steers and 20 percent more total beef cattle on farms in 1946 than in 1941.

Now, obviously, our total beef supply in these 5 months, with all these cattle on our farms, must have been substantially larger than in 1941. But clearly it has not been slaughtered by those efficient, established operators who would protect the public health, be satisfied with a small profit, and distribute the product equitably wherever it was most needed, as they always did before OPA.

The situation has become so upset that nobody knows how very large our total meat supply really is. Marketing channels are so changed that even the receipts of livestock at our great public markets no longer provide a reliable indication of the marketing of meat animals.

Hogs, cattle, sheep, lamb, and calves are bought in great and increasing volume by the vicious black marketeer or his agent right at the producers' feed lot, pig pen, or pasture gate.

All the evidence points to a large potential and actual supply of meat in the United States. The problem is not: How much? The question is: Where?

We need to keep up a reasonably high level of meat production. It cannot be done under the policies of OPA. If OPA cannot control meat prices, then full production consistent with feed supplies is the only answer to reasonable meat prices.

We have, according to all reports, a record supply of cattle on our farms and ranches. We have untold amounts of grass and roughage to grow these cattle into beef on the hoof. With excellent prospects for another bumper feed-grain crop this year, we should be letting cattle feeders have encouragement to buy these feeders, when they come from the range, and give them an efficient finishing on the small amount of grain it will take, along with large amounts of hay and pasture, so that a year from now we may eat away as finished beef some of our surplus beef-cattle numbers.

There is no prospect for this being accomplished under OPA confusion and uncertainty. All experience is sadly to the contrary.

Producers have reason to be frightened by the subsidy program of OPA. They well know it will be the producers who will stand to lose the inventory value of the subsidy if it is not removed until supply and demand are in balance or overbalanced at ceiling prices. They say, take off the subsidy while the price will absorb it, or very nearly so, as indicated by black-market meat prices, and while we know the consumers have the purchasing power to pay what the large supply of meat we now have is worth in terms of what it cost to produce.

Our livestock producers are unwilling to wait for a depression to see OPA finally agree to take off subsidies on livestock and meat.

Mr. President, I can well understand how livestock producers feel about this crazy scheme where the Government is borrowing money to pay part of the meat bill of consumers, and at the same time crying, "Keep OPA; there is too much consumer-purchasing power." This kind of "business" is more than confusing; it is most disturbing to livestock men who must do business on a sound, long-time basis or sink.

Mr. President, I have eight points to give in conclusion. I am convinced that:

1. We do not have price control on livestock and meat. I think it is a pure fiction and a travesty on the American people.

2. There is no possible chance now, if ever, of having effective price controls on livestock and meat.

3. The morality and health of our Nation are endangered by the black market in meat.

4. There is a tremendous waste of vital foods and raw materials going on in the meat industry as it is today being conducted.

5. There is an ample supply of meat, present and potential, in our country if only its production can be stabilized, its processing done efficiently and economically, and its distribution be handled equitably.

6. People are already paying as much as they are willing to pay for meat which includes the extortion and waste of the black-market profiteer, that might as well be saved for our people.

There is only one remedy to this scandalous situation, and it is up to Congress to take that action.

Mr. President, this remedy is the immediate and final removal of all price controls and subsidies from livestock and meats and all products which are produced in whole or substantial part from livestock or meat.

The black market in livestock and meat has whipped the OPA—the war is over—this Congress as elected representatives of the people must protect these people and we must not permit this great livestock and meat industry to be ruined because of an unrealistic and self-perpetuating bureaucracy.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, one more statement and I am through. I am sure the Senators all know that a black market in meat has existed, and has gotten completely out of control. Therefore I urge on Members of the Senate that the report be sent back for further consideration, because at this time I think we should do our level best to do away with black marketing so that the people of our country may again have respect for law, rather than disrespect for law.

I am sure all Senators will agree with me that there is an enormous black market in meat. I am sure the majority leader will agree that the meat situation has gotten completely out of control. Secretary Anderson stated that he was willing to have meat quotas established for a period of 6 weeks, beginning the latter part of April, and if after 6 weeks the situation did not improve, then something else would have to be done, and he stated that that something else was to remove controls from meat.

I say again that we should send the report back if for no other reason than to decontrol meat. That should be done because meat has gotten completely out of control. There is no control over meat. Eighty percent of it is in the black market. The receipts on the legitimate markets are so small that soon we are going to have meat famines throughout the country.

Mr. President, I feel that we should send the report back to conference because I believe that one way to obtain respect for law is to decontrol meat. That is the first thing we ought to do in our campaign to bring about respect for law. If we succeed in obtaining maximum production, by making it possible for the feeders to feed their cattle and for the cattle to flow into the market through the legitimate channels, we shall take a great step forward in obtaining a plentiful supply of meat, and also in obtaining the byproducts which are so necessary in the production of pharmaceuticals needed in hospitals and by individuals and which are not obtainable now because the greater number of cattle are slaughtered in illegitimate operations. Millions of dollars' worth of products are wasted because so large a proportion of the cattle are going into the illegitimate markets.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Has the Senator dealt with the situation which now exists with respect to the shortage of pharmaceuticals resulting from the black-market operations in meat? The shortage of pharmaceuticals is becoming alarming. It is going to be a very critical problem. Hundreds of thousands of individuals are facing death from diabetes and other diseases because they cannot get the insulin and other products which are made from certain byproducts of meat. We have reached an intolerable condition in the United States in that respect. Not only are our citizens hungry for meat which they cannot obtain, but the morale of our people is dangerously affected by the illegal operations that everyone knows are taking place in connection with the meat supply. Moreover hundreds of thousands of our people are actually facing death because of the growing shortage in needed pharmaceuticals, due to black-market operations in meat.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire for his contribution. The statement which I have had inserted in the RECORD deals also with that situation. Not only do we have a shortage of needed pharmaceuticals, but tremendous waste results from the illegal operations in meat. Animals are being killed in nonfederally inspected plants by black market operators who do not depend upon a subsidy, and are therefore foreclosed from making use of the byproducts of meat which should go into the manufacture of pharmaceutical products. Therefore there is this growing shortage of insulin, adrenalin, and other pharmaceutical products.

Mr. President, I should like to say in conclusion that if we adopt the conference report we give sanction to and condone everything that Chester Bowles has done with respect to meat during the past 4 years. Adoption by the Senate of the conference report would mean that we condone a program which has resulted in 80 percent of the meat going into the black market.

I shall not support the conference report. I shall vote against it. I beseech, I plead with other Senators not to adopt the conference report. If Senators want to reestablish law and order in this country, if they want to establish once again our own American way and our own American traditions, let us send the report back for further study by the conferees. Let us instruct our conferees to insist upon the decontrol of meats, and thus give us a start in the decontrol program. The people of the United States expect us to do that. The administration has failed in its leadership in this respect, and the people are now looking to the Congress of the United States to furnish the leadership. I beseech the Senate not to accept the report.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I should like to call the Senator's attention to a telegram I have received from my own town of Chippewa Falls, Wis., which reads as follows:

> The Peter Fox Sons Co., Chippewa Falls, Wis., contemplate closing packing plant account black market operators paying prices on livestock which prevents sale of dressed carcasses at dressed ceiling prices except at a tremendous loss. We urge the OPA decontrol meat.

That is signed "The Employees of the Peter Fox Sons Co."

I should like to ask the Senator if the way this whole matter is operated does not put out of employment thousands of men in the meat industry who want to make an honest living at honest wages, and, on the other hand, if it is not creating a group of racketeers who are making millions of dollars out of black market operations at the expense of the public?

Mr. WHERRY. That is true.

Mr. WILEY. The result is somewhat analogous to what occurred in prohibition times, when bootleggers campaigned against repealing prohibition. Is it not true that there are now those who are making illegitimate profits who are vitally interested in seeing that OPA is not decontrolled?

Mr. WHERRY. That is true. I want to thank the Senator for bringing that matter to our attention. I dealt with that situation in the statement which I presented for printing in the RECORD.

In 1945 the 10 principal markets killed more than 150,000 head of cattle in the week corresponding to the week just ending. In 1941 the number of cattle killed in the corresponding week was much greater. In the 10 principal markets less than 14,000 head of cattle were slaughtered last week. Last week less than 14,000 head of cattle went through the legitimate channels. That means that thousands and thousands of employees in those markets lost their jobs. Back in 1941 there were 1,425 legitimate packers. How many slaughterers, Mr. President, do you think are operating now? More than 26,000. Their plants are not federally inspected. The serious-minded people of this country know that the meat situation is out of all control, and that the only thing for us to do is to try to get it back in control. So I again plead earnestly with the Senate not to accept the conference report. Let us send it back for further deliberation. The conferees have 3 days in which to deliberate on it. They can bring back a new report and we can vote on it. We in the Senate owe that much to the people of the United States.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. In confirmation of the last statement made by the Senator, I have a telegram from William J. Mason, general manager, Central West Food Stores, Madison, Wis., the capital of my State, in which he says:

> Unless OPA regulations on meats and dairy products are suspended June 30, we will have to resort to black markets for these products.

The manager of that chain of stores now indicates that if they want to supply the consumers, they have to become law violators and have to resort to the black marketeers.

I have another telegram from the Wisconsin Retail Food Dealers Association, Arthur E. Gesch, secretary, which reads as follows:

> Unless all price control on meats and dairy products is removed immediately every dealer will be forced to buy on black market to provide consumers with meat.

It appears that if the meat dealers are to continue operations, they have to become violators of the law; they have to join up with the racketeers who violate the law.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. WILEY. That means that the legitimate merchant then must join the hordes of the law violators.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; that is true. If they are to supply their customers, under conditions now existing, they must become violators of the law. On that point let me call attention to the fact that the black marketeers do business in cash. They do not pay any taxes to the United States Government. They are free from that necessity. Everything is done sub rosa. Therefore, we are not only losing the tax money which the racketeers should pay but we also lose what we would get from legitimate business if it could operate profitably.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I want to add to the testimony already submitted the fact that the Morrell Packing Co., the largest packing company in South Dakota, closed its doors today because it was not able to obtain meat.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I wish to bring out a point to reinforce what the Senator from Nebraska is saying. Last Saturday I made it my business to talk with 10 workingmen. I asked them this question: "Which would you rather have, a price ceiling of 50 cents a pound on meat when you could not get the meat and had to go into the black market and pay a dollar and a quarter a pound for a very poor grade of meat, or the removal of price control so that you could get meat by paying 25 or 30 cents a pound more for it, knowing that you could get it honestly, that you could go through the front door as an honest man and come out as an honest man, and that the merchant was maintaining his self-respect? Which would you rather have?"

These were not rich men. They were men who worked in overalls. Every one of them said the same thing, "We would rather know where we can get meat honestly and pay the necessary price than do what we are doing."

Let me say one further thing. There was not one of those 10 fine, honest American workingmen who did not admit to me that he was buying in the black market in order to obtain the food which was needed for his table. They are buying butter, meat, and other things in the black market.

To me it is pathetic when fine American citizens must admit that they are violating the law. Life is dearer than the law. Senators may not think it is, but when it comes to the choice between getting the things which one's family must have to eat in order to live, or obeying a law in which he does not believe, I think that the choice of 95 percent of the people of the United States would be to take care of living.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator.

THE STATE OF WORLD AFFAIRS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I beg leave to make some frank observations on the state of world affairs today and the challenge it presents to American idealism, American national self-interest, and American common sense.

I speak in full awareness that our spokesmen, along with those of Great Britain, Soviet Russia, and France, are now meeting in Paris. They are engaged in another of a series of desperate efforts to solve complex and tragic problems affecting directly the destiny of 400,000,000 Europeans and indirectly the fate of all humankind.

No one with a conscience and a sense of responsibility would wish in any way to prejudice the negotiations. So long as there is a marginal chance of ending the stalemate and opening the road to a just and wholesome settlement, it must be encouraged and supported. If it all ends in failure, let there be no doubt that it was not for lack of trying on our part.

I submit, however, that neither silence nor diplomatic double-talk constitutes support of the effort now under way in Paris. On the contrary, it will be misunderstood in some quarters as indifference—or worse, as a willingness to countenance unprincipled compromises. Our silence can only fortify the position of those who, for reasons of their own, prefer to prolong the uncertainties and confusions of this period.

We need more candid and more vigorous statement of American viewpoints and feelings and resentments at this juncture, in the press, on the radio, and on the floor of this Congress. Of that I am thoroughly convinced. There should be no room for doubt abroad about our opinions and our preferences. The American negotiators, being human, are under constant pressure and temptation to make new appeasements, to yield to new tactics of postponement or evasion. Their hand should be strengthened by unmistakable expressions of public sentiment at home.

We must help the statesmen in Paris, and especially their superiors in the home capitals, to grasp the fact that the long cycle of face-saving expedients and one-sided concessions is over. They must be helped to understand that all Americans, whatever their politics or their differences on domestic issues, are united in the determination to achieve an enduring peace firmly grounded on law, order, justice, to small as well as large nations.

The hour is much too late for tact and circumlocution. To the ordinary people of all countries the fine sentiments and clear promises embodied in documents like the Atlantic Charter and the first Moscow declaration, reaffirmed in meeting after meeting of the top Allied leaders, are not scraps of paper. The men and women who did the fighting and made the sacrifices for victory accepted them in good faith at face value, and looked to the victors to redeem them. The sophisticated cynicism of political supermen is below their comprehension. Those documents were sacred covenants with millions who gave their lives or risked their lives in the fervor of those sentiments, to make good those promises. None of the secret agreements made or anything said in Teheran or Yalta or Potsdam could alter this fact.

It is my belief that had the American people and the democratic peoples elsewhere been taken more generously into confidence by their wartime leaders, some of the toughest problems now confronting the Paris negotiators would not have arisen at all. It calls for no exceptional political insight to recognize that the four foreign ministers are wrestling with the unhappy consequences of shabby bargains entered into in secrecy—bargains that could not have been consummated in the light of day. In my own view, it was at bottom the fear of popular disapproval, a troubled conscience about the unholy bargains, that was the real reason for excessive secrecy on a long array of decisions.

Today an alert and enlightened American public opinion is the best guarantee that there shall be no more such cynical compromises—no more face-saving formulas to camouflage surrenders to pressure. Idealism aside, the experience of these years has amply demonstrated that a bad settlement is worse than no settlement; that compromise on principle, far from solving problems, creates new problems. Unless I am seriously mistaken, the American people want an end to underwriting injustice, even where we cannot prevent injustice.

We all pray that the contradictions among the great victorious nations will be resolved and that a modus vivendi can be found. But we could not face the God to whom the prayers are directed if the solutions were based on the enslavement of weaker nations, the bankruptcy of democratic aspirations, the perpetuation of chaos and suffering in large segments of this globe.

The alternative to a settlement subscribed to by all the Great Powers is a world permanently cut into two self-contained and hostile compartments. Admittedly it is a terrifying prospect. No one wants it. No one in his senses would deliberately plan it. I count myself among those who seek a basis for sensible understanding between the Western democracies and Russia.

But there is a price in self-respect and human freedom too big to be paid even for such an understanding. Unpleasant as the prospect of a dual world may be, we must not permit it to terrify us into abandoning our democratic heritage and betraying the obligations of our material strength and our moral leadership. We must not accept the counsels of despair.

The time has come—indeed, it is long overdue—to insist on peace. Not any peace, but a peace with honor, a peace that is not an uneasy prelude to another war. The time has come to insist on the development and implementation of machinery for heading off aggression and defending the hard-won victory. The reluctance of any one nation to cooperate, whatever its size or its motives, cannot indefinitely be allowed to block the process.

Agreement among all nations is desirable. We have spared no efforts to attain it. The next best hope is agreement among the great majority of nations, provided the doors are left wide open for all others to join when they see fit.

I believe that I echo the basic American sentiment in urging that peace settlements be made with all enemy and satellite nations by all those willing to do so, once it becomes clear that a unanimous settlement is impossible. A genuine peace conference of all countries which fought and won the war against the Axis can no longer be delayed.

I am no less certain that I speak for the vast majority of Americans in urging that Europe, and therefore the world, be given the opportunity to restore its economy and rebuild its ancient civilization. Policies of sheer vengeance or greed must make way, wherever possible, for the dictates of humanity and of economic sense. Exploitation by armies of occupation must be branded as vandalism and outlawed.

A writer in the current issue of the magazine Nation's Business complains that in the general reconversion from war to peace one vital item has been overlooked. He recommends that in dealing with foreign affairs we reconvert to truth. Whatever justification there may have been for distorting the facts and evading unpleasant realities during the war, it can no longer hold good. The fear that we might give aid and comfort to the enemy by telling some embarrassing truths no longer applies.

I second the recommendation. Let us muster the boldness to admit that one of the great powers—Soviet Russia—seems to have a vested interest in prolonging the disorder, the confusion, the economic catastrophe, the demoralization of Europe. Apparently it seeks time to consolidate its unilateral seizures of territory and its political impositions on neighboring countries before submitting its actions and claims to the arbitrage of a genuine peace conference.

Yet, let us reconvert to truth. Then we shall no longer be squeamish about acknowledging that one political party and doctrine—communism—prospers on chaos and mass suffering, and consequently has a vested interest in delaying firm peace settlements.

The western democracies have no alternative but to repudiate such purposes and such methods. Unless the whole world is to relapse into a grab-as-grab-can barbarism, there must be a return to principle and decency and humaneness. We must revive confidence in the pledged word of governments. We must find the moral stamina to recognize and admit our own share of responsibility for the fact that half of Europe, in the hour of its liberation, lives under regimes imposed by foreign bayonets and kept in power by millions of occupation troops quartered on the countries involved.

Unless Europe, from the Soviet frontiers to the English Channel, is given the opportunity to restore its basic economy, to determine its own forms of government, to normalize life in general, it will remain an ugly open sore. The rest of the world will be in mortal danger of infection. The wounds of that tortured continent must be healed, and the establishment of a durable pattern of peace is the first and indispensable step.

Except for stringent limitations on war industries in the former Axis areas, industry and agriculture must be restored. There must be jobs and goods. There must be exports and imports. The channels of trade and commerce must be opened wide. Arbitrary barriers to navigation of international rivers must be removed. Hindrances to rail and air transport must be eliminated. The terrible economic burden represented by millions of foreign troops living off famished nations must be sharply reduced immediately, and a date must be set for their total evacuation.

Until these things are done, there can be no chance for true European recovery. Until these things are done, the continent will remain a drain on the resources of other nations, and of the United States in particular. Until these things are done, the gifts and the loans we provide will continue to be poured into a bottomless pit.

I am under no illusions that such a restoration of normal or near-normal life can be achieved in full without the consent and collaboration of Russia. It seems to me, however, that the ambitions or obsessions or stubbornness of one nation cannot be made the pretext for indefinite delay. We dare not turn a populous and potentially self-sustaining continent into a demoralized slum for the exploitation of political adventurers. After our experience with Hitlerism we know too intimately the risks to our civilization involved in social break-down in Europe. Another failure of the great powers to agree will leave the majority of them no alternative but to take any and all steps possible to stabilize life on that continent, to extend the area of peace, and to improve the machinery for the prevention of new wars.

Whatever we do, we shall of course be accused by the Moscow Pravda and Communists all over the world—including the Communist fifth column in our own country—of "imperialism." A noisy campaign of vituperation on this score has, in fact, been under way for months. The magnitude of the calumny and its bitterness could hardly be stepped up any further, no matter what we do or fail to do.

American imperialism! What a bizarre charge, coming from the partisans of the nation that since September 1939 has annexed territories with a population of 24,000,000 and has imposed its political domination, in varying degrees, on at least 12 nations with a total population of 165,000,000; coming from the partisans of a nation which has about completed the political conquest of Iran, is conducting a war of nerves in the Near and Middle East, and is enforcing its will on large areas of China.

We Americans know the absurdity of the Communist charge. We know that our national instinct, product of generations of isolation from world affairs, is to withdraw, rather than to extend our external lines of power and influence. Unfortunately, a large part of our population is still far from the realization that the epoch of natural isolation is ended, that whether we like it or not we must shoulder the responsibilities and the risks of leadership in a shrunken world. The Communist outcries against American imperialism, I must say, sound to me suspiciously like the "Stop thief!" shouts in the familiar story.

Only political illiterates ignore the extent and the effectiveness of the world-wide network of Communist fifth columns. If we are serious about reconverting to truth, we cannot overlook the obvious fact that the network is controlled from one center. The unanimity and alacrity with which anti-American and anti-British slogans of abuse launched in Moscow are grabbed up and barked forth by Communists and their fellow travelers on all continents and in all countries can hardly be accidental. Whether the Communist International has or has not been dissolved is an academic question. In practical fact, it is functioning in more strikingly disciplined fashion than ever before.

Mr. Herbert Hoover, whose stature as a great moral force in the world grows with every day of his distinguished career, found the Communist pressures everywhere he went in Latin America. There is ample evidence from other sources that the network is being extended and fortified in the Western Hemisphere. South of the Rio Grande the Communist propaganda has resumed the violently anti-Yanqui line which it peddled there until the day when Hitler attacked the Soviet Union.

Now that Latin-American Communists are no longer obliged to devote themselves to lambasting fascism in Argentina, the energy thus released is being diverted to intensified attacks on "Yanqui imperialism." Our supposed collaboration with Argentina, it will be recalled, was one of the important counts in the indictment of our alleged imperialism. Have we forgotten the magnificent grandstand play made by Mr. Molotov in San Francisco in opposing the admission of Argentina into the United Nations?

The rapprochement of Soviet Russia and the country it had so long and so vigorously attacked came with a demonstrative show of friendship. One is tempted to remark that this is not the first time the Kremlin has found it easier to make agreements with totalitarian countries than with the democracies. Who knows how soon the current Communist shouting about Spain will seem, in retrospect, as cynical and as meaningless as the recent shouting about Argentina?

The significance of the new and strange Russo-Argentine friendship, I trust, will not be lost on American policy makers. It should convince them, if they still need convincing, that in the pursuit of its own objectives Moscow is never hampered by principles or prior commitments or even ideological consistency. It follows the law of the main chance. This is a fact so important in the international equation today that our own policies and our understanding of the world picture must take account of it.

We dare not permit ourselves to be diverted from a firm democratic peace policy by the shenanigans of those who, knowingly or otherwise, take their intellectual marching orders from the Kremlin. Their doctrine of unrelieved expediency, to which they refer proudly as "realism," justifies any turn and twist and back-tracking that seems opportune.

We have learned to recognize this brand of realism, and we do not wish to be further contaminated by it. The contamination unfortunately went too deep for our national taste during the war years. Many of us held our criticism of it down to a minimum in deference to the life-and-death struggle in which we were engaged. Even when we were impelled to speak out in protest, we rarely gave full vent to our feelings. Today, there is no reason for concealing our knowledge that this realism worked havoc with American prestige, American influence, and American interests.

It was in the name of realism—the fashionable label for old-style expediency and opportunism—that we sold Poland down the river. It was under the shabby banner of this realism that we gave away Chinese territory and Chinese rights without so much as consulting China, that we turned Yugoslavia over to a totalitarian dictator, and denied nearly half of Europe the chance for self-government we had explicitly promised.

That realism has boomeranged. The one excuse for unabridged power politics—the excuse that "it works"—has been disproved more quickly than those of us who opposed it had thought possible. The master-mind realism of those who sneer at principle, who insist that the end justified any means, who believe that might makes right, has failed even in terms of expediency. The fact is that scandalous concessions of other people's freedom and sovereignty have not brought the peace for which they were presumably the pay-off. On the contrary, every compromise of principle, every betrayal of friendly countries and democratic leaders, every exercise in appeasement, has merely produced new dangers, greater than those it was supposed to eliminate.

No American interested in the well-being of his own country and conscious that we live in a narrow and integrated world can view the current international scene with complacency. Nothing in human life stands still. If the disastrous situation is not improved it must deteriorate, and the last chance to head off an over-all catastrophe may be lost. To do nothing, to postpone and procrastinate, is to play into the hands of those who have a stake in chaos.

Let us make it perfectly clear to ourselves and to the world that we do not propose to lose the peace by default. There is no reason in common sense why we should continue to play from weakness in the hour of our greatest strength. Patience is a virtue that turns mischievous if it is overdone.

The outside world should not be fooled by the tensions in the United States. The strikes and political passions do not mean, as some Moscow commentators seem to think, that our country is in the throes of civil collapse. Neither should the outside world be misled by the noisy doings of our fifth columns. It was thus that Hitler's Germany and the Mikado's Japan misjudged us. They learned to their sorrow that American squabbling is a surface phenomenon, for we are unified and profoundly patriotic at heart. In any future crisis, as in every past crisis, the one certainty is that these United States would instantly be galvanized into magnificent unity of purpose. Should the test ever come, the Communist borers from within will prove that they are about as futile as the German-American Bund.

The civilized world must get on with the job of making peace, restoring order and safeguarding the peace after it is made. America, as the great repository of faith in democracy and freedom, cannot and will not shirk its responsibility of leadership in this urgent task.

We have paid heavily in American blood and substance to prevent a few dynamic nations from imposing their will on the whole world. We have no more love for that sort of domination now than we had before. We are determined to avoid a Third World War, and we have learned the hard way that the time to prevent it is before it has started.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING AND THE FEDERAL BUDGET

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, as the end of the fiscal year draws near I should like to consume a few minutes of the time of the Senate in discussing a matter which is closely concerned with the welfare of the country. It should be of some concern to the administration and to the Congress.

There is no more important problem before the country today than that of putting the Federal fiscal house in order. We have been preoccupied with price ceilings and the activities of OPA as the means of preventing inflationary price rises. Too little emphasis has been given to the fact that the fundamental source of this pressure is found in the unbalanced Budget. For 16 years the country has lived beyond its income. During that time, recourse to borrowing from commercial banks to meet the annual deficits has resulted in an increase in bank deposits from $27,000,000,000 in 1939 to more than $69,000,000,000 at this time.

Over the same period, money in circulation has increased almost $20,000,000,000. Unless a real effort is soon made to prevent further accumulation of inflationary bank credit, the price control program will prove abortive, and a larger and larger proportion of available supplies will be diverted from normal market channels. If we are determined to control postwar inflation, the attack must begin with the Federal Budget.

On January 21, 1946, the President of the United States sent to the Congress a combined message on the State of the Union and on the budgetary requirements of the Nation for the coming fiscal year. The opening paragraph of that message greatly impressed me. It sent my hopes soaring for an organized financial policy in government. It reads:

> A quarter century ago the Congress decided that it could no longer consider the financial programs of the various departments on a piecemeal basis. Instead it has called on the President to present a comprehensive Executive Budget. The Congress has shown its satisfaction with that method by extending the Budget system and tightening its controls. The bigger and more complex the Federal program, the more necessary it is for the Chief Executive to submit a single budget for action by the Congress.

Further, in the third paragraph, the President said:

> All the programs I have recommended for action are included in the Budget figures.

This was indeed stimulating. For 3 years I have been privileged to sit in this body, for 3 years I have seen Budget messages come to Congress, and for 3 years I have come to learn that those messages contained only a part of the planned expenditures of the administrative branch of our Government. Consistently the Chief Executive would, after sending the Budget message, send program after program to Congress which had never been mentioned specifically in the Budget. Of course, the past 3 years were war years and money was no object in gaining our war ends. There had to be consideration for emergency situations—true emergencies which could not be foreseen. But programs beyond that classification are the ones about which I am talking. Under such a system as we followed it would seem impossible to put or keep the budget in balance.

However, the war is now over.

The President stated that he had submitted a "comprehensive Executive Budget," including all the programs he had recommended for action. For all intents and purposes a balanced budget was in sight. At least, we would know what our financial program was going to be this year. Let us examine that statement in relation to the budget itself.

I have taken care to look over the nearly 1,000-page book called "The Budget of the United States Government for the Fiscal Year Ending June 30, 1947." In this volume I found, quite detailed, the operations and costs of the various established Government agencies, departments, and bureaus. Then I turned to the President's message of January 21—a part of this great book. I found listed some 21 new recommendations for legislative action. Most of those recommendations, if enacted into law, would require money. For example, the full-employment bill, or "employment bill," as it is now termed, would require funds for establishing work projects should private industry be unable to absorb all labor that was able and willing to work. To supplement unemployment insurance benefits increased funds would be required. Others of the 21 recommendations in the same category are the adoption of a health and medical care program, universal training, increased Government pay, increased unemployment allowances for veterans, extension of crop insurance, Federal airport legislation, Federal aid for housing, and development of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence River Basin. All those recommendations, if enacted into law, would admittedly require money to make them effective.

Returning to the President's opening statement in his recent speech, I quote:

> For these reasons, I have chosen to combine the customary message of the State of the Union with the annual Budget message, and to include in the Budget not only estimates for functions authorized by the Congress, but also for those which I recommend for its action.

Mr. President, what estimates are submitted for each of those programs? In the Budget Résumé I find listed under the heading "Budget expenditures" the item "Expenditures based on proposed legislation (excluding international finance), $1,500,000,000."

I searched the pages of the Budget in an attempt to ascertain just how this $1,500,000,000 was divided among the programs proposed by the President. My search proved futile. Nowhere could I find a break-down of this sum. Nowhere in the Budget could any other taxpayer find the President's estimate of what extended unemployment benefits, or any of the other proposed programs, would cost the people.

Obviously, the President did not contemplate the expenditure of all that amount on one of the new programs. Yet, on the other hand, it seems hardly likely that such a sum would cover the expense of them all, should they be adopted.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUCK. I am glad to yield.

Mr. TAFT. The figures submitted in the President's January Budget estimate totaled approximately $36,000,000,000, including the $3,000,000,000 of indefinite expense which he said might be recommended.

Mr. BUCK. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. According to the figures which I have before me today, if we consider all the bills which have been passed by one House or the other, and exclude social welfare measures, the health bill, or bills of that kind, the total expenditures will be approximately $46,000,000,000 instead of $36,000,000,000. Those figures are somewhat uncertain, but, during the course of a few days, I hope to present a more accurate estimate. It is apparent that the total expenditures of the Government during the next fiscal year will increase to nearly $10,000,000,000 more than was estimated by the President. That may be a somewhat high figure, and is subject to check. But certainly the Senator's point is very strongly made that we have no estimate today of what the expenditures of the next fiscal year will aggregate.

Mr. BUCK. I thank the Senator for his observation. Following what the distinguished Senator from Ohio has said, how is a Member of the Senate, or any congressional committee, to determine how that money was to be appropriated and for what purposes? How is anyone going to evaluate potential benefit from such a program as against the cost?

With apologies for a personal reference, I wish to say that as Governor of my State for 8 years I never sent a budget message to the legislature without including a specific estimate for every new expenditure I proposed, and it is my belief that the governors of nearly all the other States follow the same practice. In that way the people know what their State administration has in mind for them and what such a program will cost. They then can weigh the cost against the benefits and accordingly advise their representatives of their feelings toward such legislation.

Going back to the President's message, after covering estimates for regular Government departments and agencies, the President sums up with a statement, heartening on its face and good reading in newspaper headlines, that expenditures will only exceed income by $4,300,000,000. Not only that, but that the public debt will be reduced from $278,000,000,000 to $271,000,000,000.

But it is not emphasized that that debt reduction is occasioned by merely using cash funds already in the Treasury. By that method no real accomplishment can be claimed. As the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has ably put it, "It is like drawing on one's savings account to meet an overdraft on the checking account."

In spite of the administration's efforts to sell the people and Congress on a synthetic budget, the Budget must soon be brought into balance. The economic structure of this country will be wrecked if this is not accomplished.

The simple rules governing family budgets should be applied to the Federal Budget. No family can borrow itself prosperous, spend itself rich, buy and build things not needed, and become thrifty and wealthy, nor can any government.

To achieve a balanced budget, Congress must take the lead, and I would like to suggest some steps which I believe will, if followed, reach toward that ultimate goal.

First. Every wartime agency should be placed in the process of liquidation and terminated at a definite date. There can be no justification for a creature of war in the household of peace. This does not mean a transfer of a wartime agency into a regular, established Government agency for liquidation. I have seen that subterfuge adopted before. When it has happened, not only does the function of the agency continue under a new guise, but many, if not all, employees are retained, and in some instances others are added. Merely cutting appropriations for such agencies will not suffice, while the President has his war powers, enabling him to transfer them at will to another fount of money. Congress must specifically legislate them out of existence, along with their duties and functions.

Second. Congress should require a complete and specific Budget from the Executive each year. If the President wishes to institute a new social or economic program, there should be included in his sales talk a dollars-and-cents estimated cost. I would go further and say that he ought to indicate sources of revenue to cover this increased expense. This would eliminate the type of budget Congress recently received and give something to work with.

Third. The practice of piecemeal appropriations should be abolished. Congress never has a complete picture of appropriations under the present system. We pass appropriation after appropriation without knowing, or apparently caring, if revenues will support them or if the money will have to be borrowed to pay the bill. Duplication of appropriations and excessive spending result. In this connection, I was interested to note a statement of the Honorable Lindsay Warren, Comptroller General. He said:

> There are 29 Government agencies lending United States funds, 3 insuring deposits, 34 buying land, 16 in wildlife preservation, 10 in Federal construction, 12 in home and community planning, 10 in materials and construction, 28 in welfare matters, 14 in forestry matters, 9 in credit and finance, 4 in bank examination, and 65 gathering statistics.

I am satisfied that in large part such duplication results from lack of over-all consideration of the appropriation picture. It must be impossible even for the able members of the appropriations committee to remember details of departmental appropriations in going from one to the other, as they do now. Only after all appropriation bills are passed does Congress have an opportunity to compare the appropriations of one department with all the others. Then it is too late to correct duplications and errors.

Fourth. The appropriations of regular Government agencies must be scrutinized with microscopic care. It is interesting to note that since 1941 practically every regular department of Government has been increased year by year, and the President's Budget for 1947 asks for increases in many over 1946. Can it be that Government agencies need more money and personnel each year to do the same job they did the year before? Or is Congress being unwittingly sold a bill of goods for departmental expansion of activities, by the appropriation method? With the war over, and everyone expecting a cut in Government personnel, the last report of the Byrd committee is startling. It shows a personnel increase in peacetime agencies in January 1946 over December 1945, of 34,569.

Fifth. The Comptroller General should be given a staff of a size and competence to present an audit to Congress each year of each department. This should be in the hands of Congress before the appropriations for those departments are passed. In this connection, Congress should insist that the Government departments account for the authorized expenditure of their funds before additional funds for the continued activity of the angencies are voted.

The Comptroller General is the agent of the Congress, whose duty it is to check the expenditures of Government funds and tell the Congress of any discrepancies. Because of a meager staff, his reports come late, and when they do come, Congress has been loath to do anything about them.

Mr. President, as an outstanding example of unaccountability in the bookkeeping of Government agencies, I call attention to an audit report of the War Shipping Administration for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1943. It appears in toto on page 282, and following, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for January 23, 1946. In this report, one item entitled "Supplies and equipment, Training Division" for $10,071,152.51 is totally unaccounted for by the Administration. The Comptroller General could find no records to substantiate it. This is what he says:

> The item of "Supplies and equipment, Training Division," $10,071,152.51, included in the Administration's balance sheet under the general caption of "Stores, equipment, and automobiles," was not reflected in the books of the Administration at June 30, 1943, but was brought into the balance sheet by year-end adjusting entry. Of the total valuation in the balance sheet, an amount of $2,000,000 was reflected in the accounts as having been received from the United States Coast Guard without transfer of funds, and the remainder, $8,071,152.51, was estimated as having been expended by the Administration in the first year 1943 (first recorded in the accounts as expense). No inventory records were made available for examination during the course of the audit, nor was information furnished as to the whereabouts of the records, if any. The available information indicates that the inventories were classified as follows:

Equipment, nonexpendable	$4,722,887.39
Supplies, expendable	684,767.46
Clothing	4,229,278.00
Provisions	434,219.66
Total	10,071,152.51

Generalizations, such as "Equipment," "Supplies," "Clothing," and "Provisions," without any itemized statements, serve only an attempt to balance the books. How does the Comptroller General, or Congress, know if these funds were spent properly? The Comptroller General repeatedly asked for an explanation, but it is not known that he ever obtained an answer.

And what did Congress do about it? It did nothing. The Maritime Commission got its appropriations since 1943, and probably wil get them this year, with no questions asked about this item. Such practices can never balance the Budget.

Sixth. The system of deficiency appropriations should be abolished. When a Government agency is given a sum of money with which to do a job, the job should be budgeted to not exceed money available. Under our present system, it seems that an annual appropriation to most departments is an installment or part payment of their yearly allowance, and if they want it, they can later get almost any other amount they ask for. Heretofore Congress has willingly obliged. How can we hope for a balanced budget with such a system?

Department heads have said that Congress often authorizes a program and then does not provide adequate funds to carry it out. Thus there are requests for deficiency appropriations. That is the fault of Congress. It must closely analyze the work it expects a Government agency to do, and appropriate funds accordingly. But once a program is adopted and an appropriation is made, the program should be carried out within the limits of that appropriation.

Every State operates on that principle. I know many say the Federal Government cannot operate as a State, but I have yet to hear a valid reason excusing a Federal agency from staying within its appropriations under normal conditions.

Seventh. I heartily commend the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] for his introduction of Senate Joint Resolution 8. This resolution proposes a constitutional amendment to limit appropriations in each fiscal year to not more than the estimated income. It is my sincere hope that the Senate Appropriations Committee will act on this measure at an early date. In the long run it may be far more important than any appropriation bill now pending.

Eighth. As of June 30, Congress should "freeze" some part of the cash balance then in the National Treasury and make it an unexpendable balance until such time as the Appropriations Committees of the Senate and House have had an opportunity to consider and report what disposition should be made of it. The present balance is said to be in the neighborhood of $14,000,000,000.

I have read with great interest article IV, "Strengthening Fiscal Control," contained in the report of the able Committee on the Reorganization of Congress, and commend it as a praiseworthy contribution to those in the Congress who are interested in securing a balanced budget.

The balancing of the Budget of the United States is one of the most important and fundamental steps Congress needs to take if we are to have economic security in this country. Rich as we are in natural resources, scientific brains, and manpower, we cannot continue as a prosperous Nation if deficit financing continues. With every artificial dollar of Government credit we inject into our economic system, we lower the relative value of every dollar already there. Hard-earned dollars invested in insurance policies and savings accounts will become lower in value and purchasing power as this program continues, until they become worthless. All of the OPA's ever conceived will not prevent such a situation if the financial structure of the Government is not soon put in balance.

Already we have indications of such a reaction to our inflated credit base. Servicemen returning to reenter civilian jobs find that the old salary before the war does not provide a living. We are paying excessive prices for shoddy goods—higher prices than we paid for better quality a few years ago. For this condition certain Government administrators blame the profit motive and stubbornness on the part of producers; but the primary difficulty is too much money and credit, resulting in those basic factors becoming cheap and valueless.

There are some who consider balancing the budget uneconomic and even reactionary since we theoretically are not in debt to anyone but ourselves. They point with horror to the so-called Hoover days of depression when we had surpluses of goods, because people did not have the money to buy them. On this basis, they advocate increased extension of Government credit through subsidies, higher and higher wages, less and less work, increased Federal aid, and worry little about paying for it.

To them, I issue this warning or prophecy, be it what it may. A continuation of present financial and resulting economic unbalance, will make the days of the depression of the early thirties look like a golden spring day. Yes; people will have money which they did not have in those former dark days. Their pockets may be overflowing with it. But, it will buy them but a pittance of what it is buying now. Bad as the depression of deflation was, I see a much darker picture in a depression of inflation.

Without currency, but with money backed by the Government, a people may suffer severely, and still retain faith in their democratic principles. But, with an over abundance of such Government money and currency, which will buy little or nothing, not only the individual's bodily needs and desires suffer, but so does his faith in his Nation's Government.

As the only strong bulwark of democracy in the world today, we cannot sacrifice it on the altar of unsound Government fiscal policy, for the generations of the future.

With the utmost sincerity I urge Congress to grasp firmly the purse strings of the Treasury, and make certain this year that no more money is taken from that till than is put into it. We, in the Senate, have been more prone to spend, than those of the other House of Congress. In recent years we have increased almost every appropriation that has been sent over from that body. Let us mend our record, get back to economical, common-sense policies when handling public funds, and so limit congressional appropriations as to live within the Federal income. There is no more valuable service Congress can render the people of America.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, today the economy of the country is at the point of collapse. Bread lines are forming, meat and butter have disappeared. Low-priced clothing is a thing of the past. The people are in a jittery state of mind and no one can foresee what may happen in 30 days if relief is not secured.

This at a time when the bank deposits and savings are at an all-time high, when normal wages for those who are employed are at a new high level.

Sixteen years ago we were in the throes of a depression when there was a surplus of goods, but no money with which to buy them. Now we are in an even more serious predicament with a shortage of goods, but an abundance of money.

What is the reason for this anomalous and ridiculous situation?

It is the result which the founders of this Government predicted if certain things came to pass. And what they warned us against, was that we should never let the Government attempt to plan and manage for the people the things the people should do for themselves.

In three letters, the cause of our predicament is OPA. Here we have an institution staffed on many levels with people who have sought Government employment because they had failed to make a living in private effort. At best it is staffed by people without business experience who attempt to tell men of long experience how to run their business.

These people are obsessed with the idea that they can circumvent the natural and basic laws of economics by Government fiat. They are shooting at the moon, but are successful only in hurting the people on the ground.

Our present-day economic system is, at least it was until the planners took over, an intricate machine developed out centuries of human needs, human passions, human desires. It had through the centuries developed into a fairly smooth-running machine, with occasional jolts until these planners took over and began tampering with the gears. They changed the gear ratios and the strains here and there and everywhere, until the economic machine began to vibrate, to shimmy, to run hot in the bearings, and is now on the point of stalling completely. It will not function properly again until we get the heavy hand of the manipulators out of this economic system, and let the normal pressures of production and distribution apply themselves.

Mr. President, the OPA is poison in our American system. Twelve or 15 years ago we tried a similar control in the NRA. The Supreme Court said that venture was not within the Constitution. Neither would the present system be tolerated except under the operation of wartime powers. That pretext is now a falsehood. The war is over so far as peacetime economy is concerned. Recovery of business will not be accomplished until this wartime restriction against production of peacetime goods is removed.

I have here more than a hundred telegrams received today urging that we reject the extension of controls over the production of meat and other essentials of daily living. If we permit the extension of these controls then there will be scarcities for weeks to come.

I shall read only three or four of these telegrams so Senators may be given the views expressed by those who sent them to me. The first is from Wheatland, Ind., as follows:

Price-control bill must not go through as written. Kill some way. Filibuster. View of 98 percent customers.

WHEATLAND MERCHANTS COMMITTEE.

Here is a telegram from Evansville, Ind.:

Do not approve OPA bill without Wherry amendment.

ALBERT C. GRIMM PLANING MILL.

I read one from Gary, Ind., as follows:

Refuse conference report and vote Wherry amendment back into OPA bill.

GARY LUMBER CO.

Another from Butler, Ind.:

OPA should die June 30. Present compromise is as unworkable as present law. No consideration has been given small business by compromise and none has ever been given by present set-up. Please vote against this.

FUR PRODUCTS CO.

I read a telegram from South Bend, Ind.:

Vote to remove price control from beef at least, which will kill the black market on all meat and possibly both.

A. J. BAUMBACH.

I read another telegram from Anderson, Ind., as follows:

We earnestly request that you do not approve OPA without inclusion of Wherry amendment.

F. C. CLINE LUMBER CO.

Another telegram from Fort Wayne, Ind.:

Fort Wayne food merchants ask that meat and dairy products be removed from price control. If not done they will be compelled to enter black market to supply their trade. Being honest dealers they do not want to do this.

JOHN E. WILSON,
Secretary, Fort Wayne Food Council.

And one from Hammond, Ind.:

Unless OPA controls on all meat and dairy products are removed all legitimate retail grocery stores will be forced into the black market or go out of business if the instituted controls exist. Please do everything in your power to let us operate legitimately.

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

Mr. President, the telegrams I have read cover quite well the sentiment of the senders of the nearly 150 telegrams which have come to me from the State of Indiana, and manifest the uneasiness and concern which is in the minds of the people, consumers, retailers and producers alike.

Mr. President, we will have to go through the same struggle again when we are convinced control must be removed, whether it be 6 months from now or a year from now. Now let us forget about the political effect of this action and do what is best for American economy, American business, and the American people, and that will be to get this un-American influence out of our free economy. America will remain sick until this is done—the patient may die.

The principal objection which is raised to removal of these controls is that such action will promote inflation. The factors which cause inflation have already been enacted. They are the issuance of huge amounts of currency, bonds, and banking credits; the enormous expenditures of Government far beyond our income, which will bankrupt any individual or business; the increase in Government pay rolls; the encouragement by the Government of heavy wage increases. And all the time the OPA is telling us that they are going to hold down inflation. If they believe they can do it in that way, they are too childish in their thinking successfully to operate any business, and should be fired.

We have within the past few weeks recklessly appropriated for everything from school lunches to millions for carrying on a fantastic fourth of July demonstration of the atomic bomb at Bikini; we have made appropriations for about everything the spending boys want to put out, without any knowledge of what the total amount will be, or when or where we will get the money. We have not shown any real constructive desire to stop inflation. Now it is proposed to extend the life of an agency to which we will commit the duty of holding back the irresistible pressures of human selfishness and human desires. We should, to be consistent, amend the bill to control the tides or the washing of the waves. How futilely vain are a pleasure-seeking people!

The best way to reduce inflation is to promote production and distribution. OPA has not done that, there is no hope that it will do it, there is no argument reason can bring to us that will convince us it can do that. Therefore, let us vote for the welfare of the American people today, return this bill to conference with instruction to remove controls from needed goods now found only in black markets at exorbitant prices. Let us get going on the way to recovery.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I wish to take only a few moments to make one or two statements about the pending OPA bill. First, however, with regard to the criticism of the personnel of OPA, let me say that during the war I found a great many competent persons who had accepted employment in that agency. I have always considered that it required a great deal of patriotism to work for OPA, because it is a most unhappy place to work. I have always felt that it would be one of the last places I would work, and it would require a great degree of concern for the public welfare to accept employment in that agency. I must say that I think the personnel of that agency has been unduly criticized.

Furthermore, I believe that they did a good job during the war. But the principal point I wish to make in my remarks is that it has seemed to me quite doubtful that a price-control law by itself can control prices under present, or perhaps any, circumstances. Whether or not this particular bill is all that it should be—which I doubt—is somewhat beside the question. I believe that during the war the control of prices was effective only partially because of the OPA itself. I believe—as I stated last fall—that the wage controls under the War Labor Board and the excess-profits tax were equally important in the problem of trying to maintain a reasonable price level until such time as production could meet the demand.

Simply for the purposes of the record, I wish to read a very few statements from the speech which I made in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD volume 91, part 8, page 10093, regarding the repeal of the excess-profits tax. I desire to quote from that speech because I do not wish to be accused of using hindsight rather than foresight. At that time, long before the strikes got under way, and long before the really serious dislocation between prices and costs arose, I had this to say:

Mr. President, the main reasons for high wartime taxes, including the excess-profits tax, were, first, to hold down the deficit and the need for borrowing particularly from the banking system; second, to reduce inflationary pressures at a time of greatly excessive demands for goods and services relative to supply; and, third, to curb profiteering out of the war.

These underlying reasons for maintaining high taxes apply with equal or even greater force during the critical period of reconversion, because, first, we still face a heavily unbalanced budget; every dollar of Government expenditures not raised by taxes will have to be borrowed, and to the extent that banks furnish these funds new supplies of money will be added to the already enormous accumulations of liquid funds in the hands of the public as a result of war financing; second, demands, both demestic and foreign, upon our economy are and will continue for an indefinite period to be greatly in excess of supply; and, third, the profits to be made in the next year, at least, will be a direct result of war expenditures and thus just as much war profits as if they were derived while hostilities were still in progress.

Taxation is the last real bulwark against inflationary forces because of the weakening of other controls, such as the War Labor Board exercised over wages and hence prices, of such as the WPB exercised in the construction field. The most prudent course at this juncture would be to defer tax reductions until such time as supply is more nearly in balance with demand and we have begun to approach a balanced Budget. At this stage we would be wise to err on the side of too much rather than too little revenue—taxes can always be reduced.

I wish to remind the Senate that the real period of inflation in connection with the last war was not so much during the war as it was soon after the war. In fact it began about 6 months after the war with the removal of what controls there were during that war, and we are facing exactly the same situation.

A little later in the same speech I said:

It is significant that expectations of outright repeal of the excess-profits tax are having four adverse effects: First, it is doing much to boom the stock market, drawing into this vortex of speculation funds that the Government ought to be getting. Second, whetting the appetite of labor for bigger demands, reinforced by strikes.

I think that statement certainly was borne out by the experience during the following 6 months.

Third, inducing corporations in the excess-profits group to avoid any further sales in the last quarter of this year, because, obviously, profits after January 1 would go untaxed so far as the excess-profits tax is concerned if Congress repeals it as of that date. Fourth, inviting inventory speculation in anticipation of profits resulting from rising prises together with lower taxes.

In summing up I said:

To sum up, if any reductions are to be made at this stage, they should benefit primarily those at the bottom of the income scale, not those individuals and corporations best able to pay taxes. Repeal of the excess-profits tax, in particular, not only favors the few and the financially strongest corporations, but it would grant them these benefits, including refunds, at the Government's expense when revenue is of critical importance; it sets an example in pocketing what are, in fact, war profits that makes it difficult to argue that labor should be denied correspondingly large wage increases; and the effect is to invite the familiar wage-price upward spiral.

Mr. President, I read that only in order to emphasize the point that I am very doubtful about the efficacy of this OPA bill or for that matter any other OPA measure standing alone. I think it is very doubtful, even if we should extend the present OPA without any change, that such an act could effectively control prices after we have removed the deterrent of the excess-profits tax, the benefits of which we had all during the war, and after we have already created a dislocation between costs arising from increased wages and the prices which have been established and the OPA is attempting to maintain.

During the war there had been worked out, by the combination of these three methods of control, a fairly satisfactory relationship between costs and profits; and while we all had complaints from the business people within our districts or States on the whole. I believe that the system worked quite well. I believe that if we could have maintained that relationship and those three controls, the system might well have worked for one more year, during which we could have attained production sufficient to have relieved much of the pressure which now exists against the prices which we are attempting to maintain.

At the present moment I am inclined to vote for the conference report, simply because it is a symbol. I am told that there may be some beneficial effects in the field of rents, and in a few other isolated instances. However, the greatest danger is that in adopting the conference report we shall lead the people to believe that we have done something effective.

Under the present circumstances I believe it is misleading to encourage the people to feel that we have discharged our duty in the control of prices. I doubt that it can be done by any single legislative act dealing with price control. It will require a tremendous upsurge of understanding and cooperation on the part of the people themselves—the consumers as well as the producers—to exercise self-restraint during the next few months or the next year, if there is to be any effective control of prices. I think it is perhaps beyond the ability of any single legislative act such as this, or the one under which we are now operating, to control prices. The only thing I could suggest, in a legislative way, would be the reinstitution of something similar to the excess-profits tax, and some agreement with labor, or the reinstitution of some agency such as the War Labor Board, which could to some extent control wages. But there has been no serious move to do either of those things. As I have just stated, the exces-profits tax was repealed, against my vote and against my best opinion at that time. And without the excess-profits tax, I doubt the effectiveness of the proposed new OPA Act. If I recall correctly only three or four Senators opposed its repeal at that time. Many of those who now complain of the ineffectiveness of OPA supported the repeal of excess-profits tax then.

I am making this statement only because I wish the RECORD to show that I am under no illusions that the adoption of the conference report will solve all difficulties or will maintain a reasonable level of prices. I believe we are in for some very serious inflation, regardless of what we do with this report, except with respect to the suggestions which I have made, but which I have no hope of having adopted, because apparently there is no support for the reinstitution of the excess-profits tax or anything like the War Labor Board. The destruction of price control began with the repeal of excess-profits tax, the abolition of WLB and the theory that wages could be raised without raising prices.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had hoped, as I think we all had, that today we would dispose of the conference report now pending before the Senate. However, it is obvious that we cannot vote on it now, for the reason that two or three other Senators wish to discuss it. In a short time I shall move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow. I hope that we may vote on the conference report tomorrow, after 2 or 3 hours of debate at the longest.

In that connection I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune. It deals with the conference report, and it is entitled "A 'Workable' Measure."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A "WORKABLE" MEASURE

Before the House voted yesterday on the conference committee's compromise price-control measure, there were unofficial reports that Price Administrator Paul Porter would urge the President to veto the measure if it reached him in the form in which it went to the House floor.

Against this report should be placed two less partisan opinions. Chairman SPENCE, of the House Banking Committee, which conducted hearings on the Office of Price Administration legislation in that chamber, said he regarded the bill as "workable" and that he believed the President would sign it. And Senate Majority Leader BARKLEY, while refusing to speculate on what action the President would take, left no doubt as to what he thought the latter should do. In his opinion, said Senator BARKLEY, it is the best bill obtainable under the circumstances, and he declared that he would support it on the Senate floor.

If the stabilization authorities, in the face of the judgment of such experienced party leaders as Messrs. BARKLEY and SPENCE, press further their all-or-nothing policy with respect to price-control legislation, they will, in our opinion, be revealing a complete lack of understanding of the temper not only of Congress but the public. From the outset these authorities have taken an uncompromising stand against liberalization of the law, branding every amendment offered as "crippling" or "weakening," while at the same time offering no constructive counter-proposals of their own for meeting the criticisms of existing legislation or for adjusting the latter to the changed conditions resulting from premature abandonment of ceilings on wage costs. Their only answer to Members of Congress, who in many cases have given weeks of their time in an earnest and sincere effort to improve the mechanism of reconversion in the lagging area of price control, has been to organize so-called consumer meetings and public demonstrations calculated to intimidate the Nation's legislators by creating the impression that public opinion was overwhelmingly behind the OPA.

Accounts of Mr. Porter's purported plans yesterday said that in seeking a veto he would make the pricing formula of Senator TAFT the "villain of the peace." Price Administration economists, said reports, made a rough guess that this formula, which would make October 1941 the base for price ceilings, with adjustments to take care of added costs since that time, would increase earnings of manufacturing corporations generally from 15 to 20 percent this year. This is characteristic of the approach by the OPA to reconversion, with its emphasis centering on holding business income to a minimum rather than seeking, as Senator WOLCOTT said yesterday of the conference measure, a formula which would bring about full production at the soonest possible time.

It is to be hoped, on the other hand, that the Senate today refrains from pressing further its proposal for the immediate removal of ceilings on meat and certain other farm products. As it stands now the revised law places responsibility for control in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he has stated that with respect to meat ceiling the facts should be the determining influence. If he finds that meat control has broken down, as many critics insist, Mr. Anderson has made it clear that he is prepared to adopt the only alternative, which is removal of all ceilings. If the Senate is wise it will be satisfied with this very substantial gain in this area. And if it takes that course we can see no reasonable justification for a Presidential veto of the conference measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an editorial entitled "The New OPA," published in today's New York Times.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NEW OPA

The new price-control extension bill as agreed to in conference and already passed by the House is a victory for the administration in the sense that it keeps price control more intact and leaves OPA with more powers than did either the House or Senate bill in its original form. Nonetheless, the powers of OPA have been greatly cut down, and price control, beginning next week, if the conference bill becomes law, will be radically different from what it has been in the past.

In several ways the new bill will compel OPA to deal more liberally with producers and distributors. The amendments should have the effect of encouraging more production of desired commodities than have some of the policies hitherto pursued. For example, OPA would be required to discontinue its present "maximum average price" (MAP) plan, which was designed to force manufacturers to produce cheaper rather than more expensive clothing. The plan has been a notorious failure. It has tended to reduce production and sale of clothing of all grades. Its abolition should mean better clothing supplies.

Another amendment would oblige OPA to set prices at not less than those existing in October 1941, plus subsequent average unit cost increases. Still another amendment would prevent OPA from forcing distributors to resell at a lower dollar margin of profit per unit than that existing on January 1 of this year. All of these amendments, because of the policies hitherto pursued by OPA, were clearly necessary. Price control was originally designed to prevent profiteering, but it was not designed to prevent producers and distributors from selling at their normal margin of profit.

Many of the other changes made by Congress are more dubious. There is too much effort to prescribe details, or to grant special treatment to special interests. There are questionable sections on restaurant prices, hotel prices, special pricing provisions for cotton and wool textiles, continuation of metal subsidies that have lost their original excuse, and so on. There are dubious provisions on the administrative side. The bill transfers to the Secretary of Agriculture authority to decide which farm commodities may be kept under price control. Moreover, the bill sets up a Decontrol Board, independent of the OPA, with power to overrule either the Price Administrator or the Secretary of Agriculture in removing price controls when in its judgment supply and demand of a commodity have come into approximate balance. This still further divides authority. These provisions can only be explained as the outcome of congressional distrust of the judgment of the particular administrators who have hitherto been in charge of OPA policies.

The most significant amendments may turn out to be those concerned with decontrol. Among these the most specific are those which would taper off subsidies. Subsidies are a method by which price rises are concealed by being shifted from the consumer's grocery bill or butcher bill to his tax bill. Once this device is stopped much of the magic will go out of price control.

The other decontrol provisions in the new bill are more vague. Their effect depends mainly upon the way they are interpreted by the administrators. Thus the provision which directs that price ceilings should be removed when supply and demand of a commodity come into approximate balance is largely meaningless, because supply and demand balance only at a price. Another decontrol provision which may be important or unimportant, depending upon its interpretation is that directing the Administrator, on or before December 31 of this year, to decontrol "all nonagricultural commodities not important in relation to business costs or living costs."

The most significant decontrol provisions in the new extension, if the administrators take it seriously, is the following:

"Unnecessary or unduly prolonged control over prices and rents and use of subsidies would be inconsistent with the return to * * * a peacetime economy. * * * Therefore, it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress * * * that the general control of prices and the use of subsidy powers shall * * * be terminated as rapidly as possible * * * and in no event later than June 30, 1947, and on that date the Office of Price Administration shall be abolished."

This is accompanied by significant provisions that as soon as practicable, and in any event not later than January 15, 1947, "the President shall recommend to the Congress such further legislation as is in his judgment is needed to establish monetary, fiscal and other policies and wages during the balance of the fiscal year 1947, and to insure that general control of prices and wages can be terminated by the end of that fiscal year without danger of inflation thereafter."

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to urge upon all Senators that there is much legislation which must be completed before Saturday. There are still some appropriation bills which are yet to be disposed of. Some of them have not even been passed by the Senate. Among them are the War Department appropriation bill and the appropriation bill for the Government corporations. There is also one, I think, which has not yet even been reported from the Committee on Appropriations. There are only 3 more days left in this week. It is extremely important that during the week, we dispose of all the appropriation bills, in addition to the conference report on the OPA, which now is under consideration. So I hope that all Senators will cooperate, as I am sure they will, in trying to clean up the program during the remainder of the week.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Do I correctly understand that the Senator from Kentucky would like to displace the unfinished business, the National Science Foundation bill, with the appropriation bills?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I am not asking to have that done. But if the appropriation bills are ready, following disposition of the conference report on the OPA bill, it will be necessary to lay aside, temporarily, the unfinished business until the appropriation bills are disposed of, because they are subject to a time limit, whereas the National Science Foundation bill is not subject to such a limitation.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall make only a few remarks at this time on the OPA conference report. I simply wish to say that on the basis of my study of the conference report today and on the basis of the debate which I have heard on the floor of the Senate today, my present opinion is that for several major reasons it will be impossible for me to vote for the conference report.

First, I am satisfied that the report in its present form would be more inflationary than no OPA at all, because I think it will result in such confusion and disruption of production as to be a serious impairment to production. Thus it will be causative, rather than preventive, of inflation.

In the second place, I cannot vote for the conference report in its present form because I think the Taft amendment results in undue benefits to American industry, to which it is not entitled, and amounts to grossly unfair discrimination against the agricultural interests of the United States. I do not propose to vote for discriminatory legislation.

In the third place, my present intention is to vote against the conference report because, if I correctly understand the ruling which was made earlier today by the Chair, the only hope we have of getting this problem back to conference is by rejecting the conference report. Then, from a parliamentary point of view, we shall be in a position to direct our conferees to go back into conference. Therefore, from a parliamentary standpoint, I do not think I could justify a vote for the conference report, because I think in toto, in every section thereof, it is an exceedingly unsound and unwise piece of legislation. As a liberal Member of this body, I cannot sentence the American people to the great inflationary cruelties which I think will flow from the adoption of this report.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the charge was made by the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] that the Taft amendment was discriminatory against agriculture. As amended by the conference committee, it covers producers of all kinds and applies to the prices which they are entitled to charge exactly the same formula as that which is applied to the prices of manufacturers and processors.

I wish to read into the RECORD a brief statement on the subject of production from this morning's issue of the New York Journal of Commerce. It reads as follows:

Production in most industrial fields will be stimulated so effectively if price control is modified along the lines of the House-Senate conference bill that competition soon will act as an effective brake on prices.

This is consensus among industrialists surveyed by the Journal of Commerce.

Even initial price advances under the new bill will be far more moderate than widely predicted in administrative quarters, spokesmen of most industries declared yesterday. Estimates of price boosts ranging from 7½ to 10 percent were given for a number of industries, such as automobile parts, radios, and textiles.

In some instances competitive conditions, now existing, or favorable results of recent ceiling increases will rule out over-all price increases of more than very moderate extent, it was emphasized.

Cases in point are machine tools and metal stamping manufacturers.

FEAR OPA ATTITUDE

While numerous industrialists still believe that complete removal of ceilings on manufactured products would have been preferable at this time, the prevailing opinion is that realistic application of the Taft amendment would go a long way toward eliminating most of the present price impediments to production.

A growing apprehension is noticeable, however, lest failure of OPA officials to live up to the spirit of the Taft amendment might jeopardize the new style price control. OPA officials already seem to be taking the view that the Taft amendment will not work.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to confirm what the Senator from Ohio has said about the inclusion of the word "producers" in the language as amended by the conference committee. The provision adopted by the Senate included only manufacturers and processors. The conference committee wrote into the provision the word "producers," which was intended specifically to cover farmers as well as other producers who might not be either manufacturers or processors. So at the present time there is no discrimination in the conference report with respect to any farmers.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I believe that my good friend from Ohio and my good friend from Kentucky are quite mistaken with reference to the effects of this bill on the farmers. However, they are welcome to try to convince the country of their position. When we compare the benefits which the American farmer will receive with the benefits which the American manufacturer will receive, I believe that the American farmer will be able to see through the effects of the section to which the Senator refers.

AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT RELATING TO PSYCHIATRIC DISORDERS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. PEPPER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4512) to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 4 and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", but only to the extent necessary for the purposes of such training and instruction"; and the Senate agree to the same.

CLAUDE PEPPER,
JAMES E. MURRAY,
LISTER HILL,
ROBERT A. TAFT,
GEORGE D. AIKEN,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

J. PERCY PRIEST,
ALFRED L. BULWINKLE,
VIRGIL CHAPMAN,
CLARENCE J. BROWN,
THOMAS D. WINTER,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator from Florida whether the report represents the unanimous action on the part of the Senate conferees.

Mr. PEPPER. It is unanimous. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] was one of the conferees, and he is on the floor at this time.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will yield to me, let me say that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] and I took part in the conference, and I think the report is entirely satisfactory. The House conferees yielded in regard to the amount involved for the construction of the buildings, and the conferees on the part of the Senate yielded on one or two minor amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in order that the RECORD may show the nature of the conference report, let me say it pertains to what is called the mental hygiene or mental health bill. It provides for the construction in the District of Columbia of a mental health institute for research, at a cost of $7,500,000, and for Federal and State cooperation in research in meeting the challenge to mental health with which the country has been faced, especially during the war.

SALE OF GENEVA STEEL PLANT

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, during the war we needed a steel plant to be constructed in Utah for the purpose of supplying steel to the west coast. A steel plant was constructed which was one of the largest and most modern plants built during the war, and I believe that today it is one of the most modern steel plants in the world. A great deal of skepticism was felt with reference to what would happen to the Geneva steel plant after the war. Many predictions were made that it probably would become junk and would not be operated at all. A few weeks ago bids were received by the Government after the plant had been offered for sale, and the bid of the United States Steel Corporation was accepted by the War Assets Administration. That bid was submitted to the Attorney General for his opinion as to whether or not the disposal of the plant under the bid of the United States Steel Corp. would be at all violative of the antitrust laws. About a week ago the Attorney General handed down a decision on the question to the effect that the sale of the Geneva steel plant to the United States Steel Corp. would not be violative of the antitrust laws.

All that remains, as I understand, to a consummation of the transaction between the War Assets Administration and the United States Steel Corp., or one of its subsidiaries, is the formal signing of an agreement in conformity with the bid.

This news, Mr. President, was very happily received throughout the entire State of Utah. I believe that at least 90 percent of the people of Utah were very pleased and happy over the fact that the Geneva steel plant had been disposed of to a competent company which would operate it in the future. An editorial appearing on June 19, 1946, in the Salt Lake Telegram, one of the outstanding newspapers of the West, reflects, I believe, the entire opinion of the State of Utah, and I ask that it be printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOR THE GREATER PROSPERITY OF UTAH AND THE ENTIRE WEST

This is a great day for Utah and the entire West. Geneva is over the last of a long series of hurdles, and peacetime operation of this, the first integrated steel plant west of the Rocky Mountains, is now assured.

The decision of Attorney General Tom Clark that the sale of Geneva to the United States Steel Corp., is not a violation of the antitrust laws, puts the final seal of approval on the transaction. The War Assets Administration has already accepted the $47,500,000 offer of United States Steel, and the approval of the Justice Department was the last action required to close the sale.

Geneva's future has been a touch-and-go proposition for many months. Pessimists in Utah insisted all along that the plant would never operate in peacetime—and truly at several points along the way it seemed they might be right. It was only because many farsighted, progressive men in this State, the West, and the Nation refused to be discouraged that we today can look forward to a new era of industrial development.

Utah owes a vote of thanks to Attorney General Clark for courageously resisting terrific pressure brought to bear on him by various interests in and out of his own Department against approval of the United States Steel sale. He handed down the only opinion which was legally sound, and he handed it down flatly, without equivocation. He cited the statistics on steel capacity and United States Steel's share of that capacity and the steel market, which emphatically disprove any charge of monopoly. He cited Supreme Court decisions which clearly indicate that such percentages do not constitute monopoly. And then he said frankly: "In the light of the foregoing considerations and all the other pertinent circumstances of the case, I do not view the sale, as such, of this property by the War Assets Administration to the United States Steel Corp. as a violation of the antitrust laws." There were no qualifications or reservations on that approval. Mr. Clark did properly make clear that the opinion referred only to this particular case and did not tie the Justice Department's hands on any other matters affecting the United States Steel Corp. That was to be expected and it did not becloud the issue in any way.

Sale of Geneva to United States Steel is the best possible assurance Utah and the West can have of a permanent, profitable western steel industry based on western production costs. United States Steel will integrate Geneva into its western steel operations. It has the organization, the know-how, and the markets to make Geneva go. No other bidder could have given us the same assurance, no matter how good their intentions or how sanguine their hopes. As several key Washington officials who were long familiar with Geneva said, the alternative to a sale to United States Steel probably was that the plant would rot away in idleness.

Utah owes sincere thanks to many men whose untiring efforts on Geneva's behalf helped to win this long hard battle. Under the leadership of Senator Abe Murdock, many Utahans played key roles in the fight—Gov. Herbert B. Maw; Congressman J. Will Robinson; Senator Elbert D. Thomas; Congressman Walter Granger; Gus P. Blackman, executive secretary of the Salt Lake City Chamber of Commerce; Dr. J. R. Mahoney, director of the bureau of business and economic research, University of Utah. They were ably assisted by many Washington officials, notably Marriner S. Eccles, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board; Senator Pat McCarran, of Nevada; John W. Snyder, Director of Reconversion; W. Stuart Symington, former Surplus Property Administrator; and General Gregory, War Assets Administrator. These men worked hard in Geneva's interest. We are deeply grateful to them all.

To the United States Steel Corp., Utah says: Thanks for making a well-considered, fair bid on Geneva and planning a steel expansion in the West which will mean much to western development. Utah welcomes you as the owner and operator of a great new industry. You have been in the past, with your iron plant at Ironton, a good neighbor and good citizen. We know that in your new expanded role you will be only a better neighbor and better citizen. We, on our part, will cooperate with you in every possible way to make your operations in this State successful and profitable for the greater prosperity of Utah and for the industrial progress of the entire State.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FULBRIGHT in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no reports of committees, the Clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the United States Public Health Service.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the United States Public Health Service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the executive calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of all nominations confirmed today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, June 27, 1946, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most patient and loving Father, in the birth of this day, Thou hast spoken to us, and Thy mercy fills the earth. For all Thy impartial benevolences, receive Thou the praise and gratitude of our humble hearts. Overwhelmed at times by the mysteries and vicissitudes of this suffering world, teach us that we cannot dispense with the heart and soul of things and survive.

Lord God, with Thy spirit warn our people everywhere against the fallacy that material possessions determine the greatness of permanence of a nation. O direct our citizens and fortify them against all the threatening inroads of destructive selfishness. In sternness rebuke us, and lead us to hold fast the great truths of our most holy faith. Be Thou the unseen guest of each and the Saviour of all. In the name of Christ our Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 2543. An act to require weekly newspapers enjoying mailing privileges to make sworn statements with respect to their circulation.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4437. An act to provide for the return of public employment offices to State operation, to amend the act of Congress approved June 6, 1933, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5626) entitled "An act to authorize the Veterans' Administration to appoint and employ retired officers without affecting their retired status, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WALSH, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. TAFT to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 4230) entitled "An act to provide necessary officers and employees for circuit courts of appeals and district courts," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. MURDOCK, and Mr. WILEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 3517. An act to authorize the admission into the United States of persons indigenous to India, to make them racially eligible for naturalization, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5244. An act to authorize the appoint of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades;

H. R. 6064. An act to extent the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6084. An act to amend the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, so as to provide an increase in pay for personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. OUTLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday and Saturday next, at the conclusion of the legislative programs of the days and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Fifty Years of RFD" which appeared in the Atlanta (Ga.) Journal on June 5, 1946, eulogizing the late Senator Thomas E. Watson as the father of rural free delivery of mails.

I also wish to include a list of reforms advocated first by Senator Watson, this list having been prepared and issued by the First National Bank, of Cornelia, Ga.

Senator Watson was an outstanding statesman of the Nation, and certainly his untiring efforts for the establishment of rural free delivery service should be recognized.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by the Committee to Protect the Consumers.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; to include in one a resolution adopted by the Military Order of the Purple Heart, department of Massachusetts, and in the other to extend his remarks on the subject of New England Air Mail Week.

PRESIDENT'S REORGANIZATION PLANS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, on tomorrow, or at least within the next few days, we will have before us for consideration the reorganization plans of the President of the United States. Action has been taken in your Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments disapproving those three proposals. I have filed a minority report and I respectfully ask the Members to study that report, No. 2326. I feel this is a most important subject regardless of whether you agree with my minority views or the views taken by the majority of the committee. It is vital that we intelligently act and I trust that the Members will inform themselves on the matters in issue, insofar as practical, prior to the time the legislation is brought to the floor.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. DOUGLAS of California asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include certain excerpts.

Mr. CHELF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Louisville Courier-Journal.

Mr. HAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include editorials in one.

THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—1946

Mr. CANNON of Missouri, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 6885) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, to provide appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2345), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order on the bill.

CONSENT CALENDAR AND SUSPENSIONS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the call of the Consent Calendar on Monday next be dispensed with and that it be in order on Tuesday next for the Consent Calendar to be called and for the Speaker to recognize Members for suspensions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the third deficiency appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

REVENGE AT POLLS

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, the other day the letter I am about to read appeared in the New York Daily News. It is entitled "Revenge at Polls."

During the past 13 years, union leaders, with the blessings of the Roosevelt administration and now the Truman administration, have been able to take away my constitutional right to work and compel me to pay them in order to work. They have been able to dictate where I shall work, or whether I shall work at all. To increase their lust for power, politically and otherwise, they have been able, against my wishes, to call me out on strike even against my own Government. They have the power to assess me for political purposes and for something I am not in sympathy with. If I signed my name to this letter, they would have power to bring me up on charges and take away my union card, thereby keeping me from earning a living for my family. They can fine me if I refuse to attend demonstrations or parades, even though they be dominated by Communist elements. But I'll be damned if they can control my vote on election day. After I get into the voting booth, that is one constitutional right no one can take away from me. Hillman and others of his ilk, please note.

CIO UNION WORKER.

BRITISH LOAN PROPOSAL

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, how shall Congress celebrate the Fourth of July?

We all know how our forefathers celebrated it. Fireworks and a big time. The occasion was caused by taxation without representation. You remember how history records the dumping of tea in Boston Harbor. Again those words echo: "Taxation without representation is tyranny."

Mr. Speaker, bring up the British loan proposal and agreement for free trade and cancellation of the British debt on July 4. We will celebrate the day by not imposing on the American people the agreement by the New Deal bureaucrats to tax our people $4,400,000,000 without the consent of the American people.

Let one lesson in our early history be reechoed to the Members of Congress: "Taxation without representation is tyranny." Let us be American. Let the people vote on the gift to Great Britain.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of my friend from Pennsylvania, may I say that I think he has jumped to a hasty conclusion.

GALLINGER HOSPITAL

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, under a unanimous-consent request, I propose to address the House on the subject of Gallinger Hospital. The appropriations for this hospital, although very definitely increased over last year's, do not meet the dramatic needs of this great municipal institution which, when all is said and done, is our responsibility. I am not asking any of you to be present—that would be a little too much to hope for—but I am asking you to look through the material tomorrow morning when you read your CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Conditions at Gallinger Hospital are shocking. The appropriation agreed to in conference will not make possible adequate patient care, nor will it expedite the building of new units to replace the unbelievably outmoded buildings still in use.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in four instances and to include excerpts.

THE WHEAT SITUATION

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago I stated on this floor that our wheat producers were bitterly opposed to the War Food order which forced the sale of 50 percent of their wheat when stored in a public elevator or warehouse. These wheat growers resent requisitioning and interference in the marketing of their own grain.

Recent marketing experience demonstrates that farmers are refusing to sell new grain in any quantities. They do not object to the shipment of wheat to starving people in other countries but they do believe they should receive a guaranty from the Government that they will be given the benefit of any increase in wheat prices which may come during the marketing year. This is not surprising in view of the fact that most of them lost a total advance of 48 cents per bushel through bonuses and increased prices in the last crop.

I would urge, Mr. Speaker, that the present forced sale and set-aside order be repealed. If this is not done black-market operations in the handling of grain will continue to increase and it will become practically impossible for the Department to secure the wheat needed to take care of its announced export program. I would repectfully submit the following simple program which would get wheat and flour moving for the export program and for such domestic uses as flour and feed.

First. The set-aside order under War Food Administration Order No. 140, amendment 9, should be repealed as it affects the forced sale of farm marketing of wheat. In its stead the War Food Administrator should require a set-aside for export of 25 percent of the free wheat sold by the farmers to the elevators.

Second. Wheat growers should be urged to market their wheat immediately through mills and country elevators.

Third. Market or ceiling prices should be paid for all wheat at time of delivery.

Fourth. Growers to receive a delivery receipt from the country elevator, which in turn would be certified by the Production and Marketing Administration, local Field Service Branch, that delivery wheat had been affected. This certificate would be cashable for the equivalent of any price advance, because of any factors, from date of delivery of wheat forward.

Fifth. Certificates would be good until, but canceled on June 30, 1947.

It is my opinion that this program would secure the wheat needed for export and eliminate the dissension that is prevalent in the wheat sections of the Nation.

I commend this program to the departments for serious consideration.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLOESER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a paper from a high-school student, and in the other to include a letter.

Mr. PLUMLEY (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

THE EMBATTLED FARMER

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement regarding the embattled farmer. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on that subject.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. STEFAN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

MEMO NO. 3 TO PEOPLE WITH SHORT MEMORIES

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, a distinguished Member of this House has called for an investigation of the Louis-Conn fight in New York. He says it was a greatly overpublicized spectacle and that it was much ado about nothing.

I respectfully suggest to the gentleman from New York that he is trying to investigate the wrong spectacle. For a really colossal spectacle of much ado about nothing, I refer him to the President's march up the Hill on May 25, calling for emergency strike legislation, on which the House acted favorably, with 13 dissenting votes, and which the Senate has approved, but which legislation reposes some place where no one seems to be able to locate it, and nothing is being done. Mr. Speaker, the silence can be heard around the world as to what has happened to the emergency strike legislation.

Does this House propose to recess for the summer without approving legislation which was thought to be important enough by the President to leave his office and come up the Hill to address a joint session of Congress to ask us to undertake our responsibility? Who is now responsible for this do-nothing conspiracy about strike legislation? Some Democrat somewhere must know the answer. Who will dare to give it to the public?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DWORSHAK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Deseret News.

THE WHEAT SITUATION

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the War Food Order, No. 144, which requires that the farmer must sell half of his wheat within 15 days after he delivers it to the elevator, is causing a great deal of unrest and dissatisfaction among the farmers in the wheat producing sections of this country. The order is unworkable and will have a bad effect. Already in Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas the farmer is holding his wheat off the market because of this order. The order is un-American and unjust. The farmer must have the right to deliver his wheat where and when he desires. The order should be modified in order that the farmer may be protected when he sells his wheat. This administration and the Department of Agriculture have not been honest with the farmer. They placed in effect an order which gave a bonus for the delivery of wheat and corn to the market after they promised there would be no further regulation regarding the selling of grain.

The bill we passed yesterday, if approved will make it possible for the farmer to deliver the wheat under this order and the farmer may elect the time of sale up to March 31, 1947. This will partly nullify the present vicious order which is now in effect.

The farmers of this country are losing confidence in their Government because of the regimentation which is being forced upon them. It is causing them to lose respect and confidence in their Government. The only way that the Government can keep their respect and confidence of the farmer is by treating him in a just manner.

There are some in the Department of Agriculture who are now contemplating placing a severe penalty upon the farmer when he does not deliver all of his agricultural products to the market. This not only includes corn, wheat, and all grains, but it includes livestock. If this order ever goes into effect, we will have adopted the Russian system, lock, stock, and barrel.

This order must be rescinded or greatly modified and further regimentation and kicking around of the farmer must be stopped.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MONRONEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an excerpt from Time magazine.

EMERGENCY ANTISTRIKE LEGISLATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as one of the Members who supported President Truman when he came before the Congress at one of the most critical hours I have known since I have been in the House and asked for emergency legislation to prevent a tie-up in this country and a breakdown of our transportation system, I agree that the measure he recommended should be brought to the floor of the House immediately.

I think it should be passed by both Houses in the same form in which it passed the House, because if we are going to whittle away the time—and I am speaking for both Houses now—and permit a recurrence of the very crisis that the President was trying to head off, then the responsibility next time will not rest upon President Truman, but it will rest upon the Congress of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. BOLTON asked and was given permission to extend her own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GATHINGS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Post.

Mr. GATHINGS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial by Richard L. Strout, appearing in the Christian Science Monitor.

COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Un-American Activities, I submit a privileged report and ask that it be read.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 175]

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 341 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RIVERS) there were—ayes 91, noes 0.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, are there not provisions in the rules regulating the conduct of this House against obviously dilatory tactics?

The SPEAKER. There are if that time comes.

Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 334, nays 3, answered "present" 3, not voting 92, as follows:

FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS

Mr. BLOOM submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5244) to authorize the appointment of additional Foreign Service officers in the classified grade.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST CORLISS G. LAMONT

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Un-American Activities, I present a privileged report and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Un-American Activities, as created and authorized by the House of Representatives by House Resolution 5 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, caused to be issued a subpena to Corliss G. Lamont, chairman of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., with offices at 114 East Thirty-second Street, New York City, N. Y. The said subpena required the said person to produce books, papers, and records of the organization for the inspection of your committee. The subpena is set forth as follows:

"To the SERGEANT AT ARMS OR HIS SPECIAL MESSENGER:

"You are hereby commanded to summon Corliss G. Lamont, chairman of National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., located at 114 East Thirty-second Street, New York City, N. Y., to be and appear before the Un-American Activities Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, of which Hon. JOHN S. WOOD is chairman, and to produce at said hearing all books, records, papers, and documents showing all receipts and disbursements of money by the said National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., and its affiliated organizations, and all letters, memoranda, or communications from, or with, any person or persons outside and within the United States of America, in their chamber in the city of Washington, on January 23, 1946, at the hour of 10 a. m. then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee; and he is not to depart without leave of said committee.

"Herein fail not, and make return of this summons.

"Witness my hand and seal of the House of Representatives of the United States at the city of Washington this 27th day of December 1945.

"JOHN S. WOOD, Chairman.

"Attest:

"JOHN W. CARRINGTON, Clerk."

The said subpena was duly served, as appears by the return made thereon by George V. McDavitt, ar investigator for your committee:

"Served Hilda Zachariah at 11:45 a. m. on December 28, 1945, at 114 East Thirty-second Street, Manhattan Borough, New York, N. Y., at the offices of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., eighth floor, as per instructions of Corliss Lamont, via telephone communication.

"GEORGE V. MCDAVITT, investigator."

In response to the said subpena the said Corliss Lamont appeared before your committee on February 6, 1946, and your committee then and there demanded the production of the said books, papers, and records, and the said Lamont refused to produce as required by the said subpena. The said Lamont was duly sworn by the chairman and gave his testimony under oath. The material parts of his testimony follow:

"Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Lamont, does your organization refuse to either produce the records or permit our investigators to inspect them at your office?

"Mr. LAMONT. My organization has taken no stand on that since your subpena was issued.

"Mr. ADAMSON. Well, have you produced them?

"Mr. LAMONT. No; I have not, as I said, because I do not have the power.

"Mr. LANDIS. Does the organization know that they have been asked for?

"Mr. LAMONT. We are not set up that way, Mr. Adamson.

"Mr. RANKIN. Who does have the power?

"Mr. LAMONT. I am only the chairman. I am not a dictator, and our organization is democratic.

"Mr. ADAMSON. When you were subpenaed you informed your organization that you had received such a subpena? Isn't that true? As a matter of fact, the organization gave out a statement to the newspapers in regard to it.

"Mr. LAMONT. That is right; yes.

"Mr. ADAMSON. So that your organization knew that you were subpenaed, and you did discuss it with your associates, and they did make a statement to the newspapers on the subject? There was a newspaper release on it?

"Mr. LAMONT. I don't remember which one, but there was something on it. There has been a lot of misquotation in the newspapers.

"Mr. ROBINSON. Let me ask one question there. Do you object to having the investigators of this committee go into your office and investigate your records?

"Mr. LAMONT. I really cannot decide that question on behalf of the organization.

"Mr. ROBINSON. I didn't ask you whether you could decide it. I asked you whether you had any objection.

"Mr. LAMONT. I should consider it a very doubtful procedure, yes; but that, you see, is not—the fact is that I don't have the power to make this decision, because it has to be a vote.

"Mr. ROBINSON. I am not asking that. I want to know whether you have any objection?

"Mr. LAMONT. I prefer to not become involved in my personal feelings about the matter.

"The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lamont, you are the head of this organization, confessedly so. Your personal attitude about it is very material to this committee.

"Mr. ROBINSON. It seems to me that if the facts are as you represent them here, why should you have any objection whatever to one of our members going up there and making an investigation? The very fact that you indicate that you don't want them to do that would be pretty strong evidence that the facts are not as you are representing them, wouldn't it?

"Mr. LAMONT. Here is the point as I see it: that having submitted all published material and shown you what the organization does, there is no relevance or point in having somebody come and go through all the council files and financial records; and frankly, the council had not, a while ago, taken a final stand on the business. It is very suspicious, afraid of submitting or making semipublic lists of contributors, because we know that they often appear in the newspapers.

"Mr. ADAMSON. Didn't you just tell Mr. RANKIN a few minutes ago that your contributors were not secret? They are taking tax deductions under Federal statutes.

"Mr. LAMONT. Mr. Adamson, as I told you a couple of weeks ago, if there is anything wrong with our set-up in relation to tax exemption, we would show our financial records to the proper Government authority, which is the Treasury Department.

"The CHAIRMAN. What authority do you think is a higher authority in the Government than the Congress of the United States?

"Mr. LAMONT. I am not saying there is a higher authority, but there is a division of powers, as you know, Mr. Chairman, in our Constitution and in our Government, and I would doubt—I don't think it is part of the functions of this committee to get into a lot of financial records unless you can prove on the face of it that there is something un-American about our organization.

"Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, we don't need any lecture from him as to what the functions of this committee are or what the functions of Congress are; and his statement, in my opinion, is contempt of this committee. This committee has the power, the constitutional power and the authority of Congress, to bring you here and demand that you deliver those books.

"Mr. LAMONT. If I can deliver them, Mr. RANKIN.

"Mr. RANKIN. Who can?

"Mr. LAMONT. As I said, I am only chairman of the organization, and I don't have custody of the files and that sort of thing.

"Mr. RANKIN. As chairman of the organization you have custody of those files and everybody knows it.

"Mr. LAMONT. That just is not true in our organization. The director has the custody.

"The CHAIRMAN. Who is the director?

"Mr. LAMONT. He is down here—Richard Morford.

"Mr. RANKIN. What is he?

"Mr. LAMONT. Director.

"The CHAIRMAN. Of what?

"Mr. LAMONT. Of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship.

"The CHAIRMAN. Where is his office?

"Mr. LAMONT. He is our only salaried official, you see.

"The CHAIRMAN. Where are his offices?

"Mr. LAMONT. His offices are at the headquarters of the organization, 114 East Thirty-second Street, New York City.

"The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand that Mr. Morford is the exclusive custodian of the records, books, the financial affairs of the organization that you are the head of?

"Mr. LAMONT. That is right.

"Mr. ADAMSON. Is he the official upon whom the responsibility would fall in the case of his refusal to produce the books, papers, and records of the organization?

"Mr. LAMONT. I think so; yes.

"Mr. ADAMSON. Do you agree with me that, in default of the production of the papers, Mr. Morford is the gentleman who should be punished for contempt? Is that right?

"Mr. LAMONT. I would have to consult my counsel on that.

"The CHAIRMAN. Let us not go into the question of contempt now. If you were to give an order in your capacity as chairman of this organization to Mr. Morford, would he be bound to comply with that order?

"Mr. LAMONT. No. The chairman gives no orders in our organization.

"Mr. RANKIN. Who does?

"The CHAIRMAN. Who directs the policy?

"Mr. LAMONT. The board of directors.

"Mr. RANKIN. Who is chairman of that board?

"Mr. LAMONT. We have no such office as chairman of the board of directors.

"Mr. RANKIN. Who presides over it?

"Mr. LAMONT. Well, I do part of the time; if not, some one of the vice chairmen.

"Mr. LANDIS. Whom did you serve?

"Mr. ADAMSON. It is a corporation, Mr. Chairman, and we got service on the chairman.

"Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Lamont, I think you are getting yourself into a ridiculous position, the most ridiculous position I have ever seen a man get himself into.

"Mr. LAMONT. I don't see why, because I tell you—it is a technical matter, if you like, but it is the same on our local councils—you ask for financial records of those councils, and, honestly, we can't do it. We just don't have the power, and I don't have the power to bring you the financial records. I can't go into our office and cart off all the documents.

"Mr. BONNER. He didn't ask you that. He asked you if you were willing to let our investigators go in and make an investigation. This is the only thing that makes me suspicious about these witnesses that come in here and they make a nice witness and I go along with them, and then when they get to the place where they have got something that we want, they want to hide it. I am willing to go along with pretty nearly everything you say myself, but when you have got something you want to hide, I get suspicious. You are the second witness that has come up here and put up the same kind of argument, that nobody seems to have the responsibility. That is the way I view it.

"Mr. LAMONT. I am telling you the director does have the responsibility. He does have the responsibility for our files and records. There is no doubt about that. That is the way our organization is built up, and we can't change our whole constitution because of what this committee may want or not want."

Because of the foregoing, the Committee on Un-American Activities has been deprived of the opportunity to inspect the books, papers, and records mentioned in the foregoing subpena and of the evidence contained therein which your committee considers relevant to the subject matter of subversive and un-American activities as set forth in House Resolution 5 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, first session, which instructed and required your committee to investigate such matters. The willful and deliberate refusal of Corliss G. Lamont, as set forth herein, to produce the books, papers, and records as called for in the subpena deprives your committee of the evidence necessary to conduct its investigation of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, Inc., which evidence is pertinent to the said investigation, and places the said Corliss G. Lamont in contempt of the House of Representatives of the United States.

"HOUSE RESOLUTION

"Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives certify the foregoing report of the House Committee on Un-American Activities as to the willful and deliberate refusal of the following person to produce before the said committee for its inspection certain books, papers, and records which had been duly subpenaed; under seal of the House of Representatives to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia to the end that the said person named below may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law: Corliss G. Lamont, 114 East Thirty-second Street, New York, N. Y."

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the report on the ground that it does not contain all of the transcript of what transpired before the committee with respect to this witness. On page 2 of the report, at the end of the first paragraph, the committee concedes that this is not a full transcript. It states: "The material parts of his testimony follow." In other words, the House has before it only that portion of the testimony which the committee conceives to be material. This deprives the House of having the full proceedings before it; consequently, the House will be asked to vote on whether or not this witness is to be cited for contempt and whether or not the House is to recommend prosecution of this witness, without having the full story before it, without having all of the testimony before it. All that is given is part of the testimony which the committee describes as material.

I respectfully submit in support of my point of order, Mr. Speaker, that what is material and what is not material should be determined by the House, because the House has to pass on this question and the majority of the Members of this House must vote in the affirmative in order to recommend these contempt proceedings. To do so it must have the entire transcript before it. Consequently I submit that the report is defective and that the report should be referred back to the committee by the Speaker, directing it to produce the full transcript of what transpired so that the House may have the entire proceedings before it before the House Members cast their votes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] has stated the point exactly, and that is that this is not a matter for the Chair to pass upon but is a matter for the House to pass upon. The Chair overrules the point of order.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement. Many Members are irked with roll calls. Many Members want the Chair to hold that those motions are dilatory. The Chair would not refrain from doing that under certain circumstances. However, it is a major operation when it does come. On the first roll call today 341 Members answered to their names. If 216 Members would stay on the floor, time would not be consumed by roll calls.

The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 331 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

RETURN OF PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT OFFICES TO STATE OPERATION

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 4437) to provide for the return of public employment offices to State operation, to amend the act of Congress approved June 6, 1933, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, at the request of several Members on this side who want to be here when this is brought up, I must object.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT

Mr. PRIEST submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 4512) to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the immediate consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 678), which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives certify the foregoing report of the House Committee on Un-American Activities as to the willful and deliberate refusal of the following person to produce before the said committee for its inspection certain books, papers, and records which had been duly subpenaed; under seal of the House of Representatives to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia to the end that said person named below may be proceeded against in the manner and form provided by law: Corliss G. Lamont, 114 East Thirty-second Street, New York, N. Y.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, Corliss G. Lamont is the chairman of an organization incorporated and known as the National Council for American-Soviet Friendship. Some time ago your Committee on Un-American Activities obtained certain publications that were being issued and distributed by this organization and had an analysis made of the same, from which it appeared that this organization is engaged in political propaganda of a highly international character.

One of the declared objectives of this organization is "to take specific action against any anti-Soviet propaganda."

This organization has been given by the Treasury of the United States an exemption certificate in the collection of its funds, so that it does not have to file itself any income-tax report and contributors to the organization are permitted to deduct such contributions from their income-tax return for the year in which they are given.

After having gone into the activities of the organization at some length it was determined by your committee that we in the discharge of our duty should seek to learn something of the internal workings of this organization, the sources from which it was obtaining its funds and the purpose for which its funds were expended, likewise something of the correspondence that was being carried on by this organization with certain foreign countries.

We requested permission for one of our investigators to go through their books and records in their office in New York, which request was curtly refused.

Thereupon we caused a subpena to be served upon them to produce these books and records before our committee, with the result shown in the testimony read here, and which was also furnished to each of you in your offices some days ago. If your committee is to continue its operations in an effort to ferret out and expose subversive activities in this land we must, of necessity, have the privilege of inspecting the books and records of the organizations that are thought to be engaged in that character of activity. We have no recourse except to come to this Congress, and the matter is now before you.

I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a list of Communist-front organizations with which Mr. Corliss Lamont has had affiliation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I want to preface my remarks by making this observation: 6 years ago the Dies committee recommended to this House certain contempt proceedings. This House had cited certain persons for contempt. Those persons were not tried by the courts until some few weeks ago. Now, there is no sense in our citing people for contempt today if they are not going to be tried by the courts for the next 6 years. I recommend immediate trial.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I think the gentleman should state to the House that there were two actions taken: One against a man by the name of Blumberg, who was tried and found guilty, but only received a suspended sentence by the court, and, in another proceeding, the Dolson case, that this House voted contempt proceedings against, the district attorney, on his own motion, dismissed the case.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I am very glad that the gentleman from New York brought that out because one of the things the gentleman from New York and other Members of this House always complained about was the way in which the Dies committee went ahead with these proceedings. The procedure of the permanent Committee on Un-American Activities has been just the opposite. We have been very careful, so you cannot compare the two at all.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I disagree with the gentlemen on that.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further. The gentleman will have plenty of time.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes; I hope so.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, there is one thing to keep in mind about Corliss Lamont, and particularly Corliss Lamont, though we have one or two other persons we will cite for contempt today. Corliss Lamont will tell you that he has nothing to do with the books and records of this organization; that a man by the name of Morford has everything to do with them, and Morford will then tell you that he has nothing to do with the books and records, that Corliss Lamont has everything to do with them. Well, I want to make this statement, and that is that there is not one person in this organization called the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship that knows hardly anything about what is going on except Corliss Lamont. Corliss Lamont is the key to the whole organization. I do not care whether a person in this body even might be a member of the organization; I dare say that even a Member of Congress, if he were a member of that organization, would know much about what is going on other than Corliss Lamont. So what I have to say here this afternoon is going to be chiefly in connection with Corliss Lamont, although I do not want to give the impression that this man Morford, whom we are going to cite a little later on, is not guilty also.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. At the time we were making this investigation there were spies in this country trying to get the secrets of the atomic bomb, and Canada was doing what the Government of the United States should have done—that is, it was catching these people and prosecuting them, and if you go into this thing thoroughly you will find them working hand in glove with this outfit.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. In connection with Corliss Lamont, I doubt if there was ever a person who came before the Dies committee or the Committee on Un-American Activities that has a longer Communist-front record than has Corliss Lamont.

Here is his entire record, which I am going to put in the RECORD today, for which permission has been received. It contains some six pages. I have tried to find a person connected with the Communist-front organizations that has a longer record than this fellow has.

Now, about this Corliss Lamont, one of the published hearings of the Dies committee says that he "is probably the most persistent propagandist for the Soviet Union to be found anywhere in the United States. No matter what the fluctuations of Soviet foreign policy and no matter what the corresponding shifts in the line of the Communist Party in the United States, Lamont has for many years been found a subservient fellow traveler of the Communists."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is he an American citizen?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. He is supposed to be an American citizen, but the House will have to judge whether he is or not. I have my own personal feelings about that. Lamont's ardor for the Soviet Union was not one whit diminished by the Stalin-Hitler pact. He has tagged along faithfully through all the sharply divided periods which have characterized Communist policy and tactics. His financial contributions to the Communist-front movement have made him a darling of the Communist Party.

There are American friends of the Soviet Union whose friendship is based exclusively on military considerations—friends who are deeply grateful for the fight which the Soviet Union has made against the armies of Hitler. There are other American friends of the Soviet Union whose friendship stems first and last from their own devotion to or sympathy with communism. Corliss Lamont belongs to the latter.

Lamont has written numerous pamphlets and books on the Soviet Union, most of which have been published under the auspices of the Communist Party in the United States. Among his pamphlets published by the Communist Party is one entitled "Soviet Russia and Religion." In this pamphlet Lamont quotes approvingly Marx's statement that—

> The social principles of Christianity are lickspittle, whereas the proletariat is revolutionary.

A recent report of an investigator of the Committee on Un-American Activities says that—

> Corliss Lamont * * * despite any denials to the contrary, believes in communistic socialism and the best witness against him is a magazine practically published by him called Soviet Russia Today.

In the August 1937 issue of this magazine Mr. Lamont said:

> This is the time of all times for friends of progress and socialism to stand by the Soviet Union——

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman says he is supposed to be an American citizen, and then he makes statements of that kind, I question whether he ought to be considered an American citizen.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. No, I did not say he was supposed to be an American citizen. If I did say it, I did not mean it just that way. I have my own personal views as to what kind of an American he is, but I am not going to express those personal views today. The gentleman can judge right from this what kind of an American he is.

Lamont further in this issue of the publication states:

> As for world socialism, I think it realistic rather than pessimistic to suggest that it will take at least another 100 years for the new order to triumph on the entire international scene. * * * The USSR has been and is a bulwark against world war—

And he envisions a peaceful Socialist internationalism as the final goal.

He concludes his article by stating that—

> In countries such as the United States and Great Britain which have a long democratic tradition and highly developed parliamentary institutions, I see a real chance that socialism may be achieved without violent revolution or any form of dictatorship.

In addition to being national chairman of the Friends of the Soviet Union, Lamont was a member of the executive committee of the Medical Bureau, American Friends of Spanish Democracy, a member of the national committee of the Student Congress Against War, and a member of the national executive committee of the American League Against War and Fascism. All of these are well-known Communist-front organizations. He has been a signer of various statements among which was a statement to the President defending the Communist Party which appeared in the Daily Worker of March 5, 1941.

His articles have appeared frequently in New Masses and in Soviet Russia Today, and he is on the editorial board of the latter magazine. Both the International Publishers Catalogue and the Workers Book Shops' Guide to Reading on Communism list Corliss Lamont as an approved author.

In closing, may I say that we probably have never had a person come before us that has had a longer Communist-front record than has Corliss Lamont. I have heard Corliss Lamont testify before the Un-American Activities Committee and there never was an inclination on his part to answer any question pertaining to his record or pertaining to communism, his financial record, or otherwise, or his connections with any foreign country. Corliss Lamont, like this fellow Morford and this other man we are proceeding against today, has an absolute distrust of Congress.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH].

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I voted against making this committee a permanent standing committee of the House because I did not believe we should have a permanent investigatory committee. However, when a majority of the Members of this House voted for this as a standing committee, and its subpena was not obeyed, I carefully examined the record of proceedings and voted to punish for contempt those who refused to obey its subpena. Today I come before you and say that upon this record we have here no one could ever be indicted for contempt. We have here a record that is barren of facts. We have only a demonstration such as has been put on here by the preceding speaker who is condemning this man because he has in the past written some tracts or pamphlets and because he is allegedly a Communist. Let me say I have nothing in common with this man. I certainly do not favor this organization of which he is a member. But when you come into this House and try to punish a man for contempt because of his political beliefs, then I say it is time to inquire into what we are doing. What does the record show? He was asked to produce before the committee certain books and pamphlets. This is what he said, and I quote:

I am only chairman of the organization and I do not have custody of the files and that sort of thing.

However, he tells the committee the name of the man who has the custody of the files desired by the committee. He gives the man's name and he gives the man's address and the place where the man can be found. Then later on he says in his testimony:

I am willing. I am telling you the director [and that is this Mr. Morford] does have that responsibility. He does have the responsibility for our files and records. There is no doubt about that. That is the way our organization is built up. We cannot change our whole constitution because of what this committee may want or not want.

Here is a man who is subpenaed to produce certain records and comes before the committee and tells the committee, "I have not got those records. I do not have the power to produce those records. The man who has those records and the man who has the power to produce those records is one Mr. Morford. If you want the records there is the man to go and get the records from."

Somebody may say, "Well, Mr. Morford was subpenaed and he did not produce the records." Is that any reason why this man Lamont should be haled before a grand jury and perhaps be cited for contempt—because somebody else has not produced the records? Is it any reason that this man Lamont should be brought before a grand jury and cited, perhaps, or an attempt made to cite him for contempt because in the past he has written certain pamphlets with which I disagree and with which you probably disagree? No; but from the remarks of the preceding speaker it is evident that he is to be cited for contempt not for what he did or did not do before the committee, but rather because at some time in the past he has engaged in allegedly communistic activities. We have here a man who has told the committee who has the books; who has come forward and at least has given some evidence of truthfulness before the committee. It may be that he is not as cooperative as the committee might desire. It may be perhaps that he might be evasive. It may be that he did not tell the committee how to go about obtaining a certification for contempt because certainly this record is absolutely devoid of any testimony to warrant a certification for contempt. Every lawyer in this House knows there is not a scintilla of evidence before this House that could in any wise justify a grand jury in indicting this man for contempt of Congress.

Although I voted against making this committee a permanent standing committee of the House, as I have previously stated, nevertheless, I felt that when it had been established as a standing committee it would conduct its proceedings differently from the old Dies committee. I regret to say that as time goes on it seems to be adopting the procedure of the Dies committee. In the 18 months in which it has been in existence it has not in any way contributed to the legislative efforts of the Members of this House—neither had the Dies committee in the 5 or 6 years of its existence. Both have been barren of any legislation or recommendations for legislation. They have had one thing in common and that is a penchant to hold witnesses in contempt.

We are sitting here today more or less as judges hearing only one side of the case and yet, even with that great advantage on the part of the committee, we have seen an effort made to sway this House by passion and prejudice rather than by the cold facts of the case. For what purpose did the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey refer to the allegedly communistic connections of this man Lamont? They are not part of this record which is to be certified. He did not even read the so-called long list of communistic connections but simply referred to a sheaf of papers in his hand and upon that you are to pass judgment and are asked to have this man Lamont cited for contempt. You will not know what was in that sheaf of papers until tomorrow when you read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and by that time you will have voted to cite for contempt.

I do not care what Lamont's record is; I do not care whether he be the worst criminal in the world; I do not care whether he is a Communist or not. I am concerned with the more important question, and that is whether a man can be held in contempt when he has answered the questions of the committee and when he has told the committee where they can get the information that the committee desires.

This Congress, on the recommendation of this committee, has previously certified the record to cite others for contempt. No action has been taken by the district attorney of this district, although weeks and months have elapsed since the record in these cases was certified to the grand jury. What can be the only explanation? Certainly, it cannot be said that the district attorney of the District of Columbia is derelict in his duty. The only inference that can be drawn is that as matter of law the district attorney does not feel that he can secure an indictment from any American grand jury. We gain nothing by this continual procedure of holding witnesses in contempt, with no action being taken thereon.

Furthermore, let me say that there is grave doubt in my mind whether this committee has not far exceeded its authorized purpose. It seems to me that it was not the intention of Congress that this most unusual committee should have the most unusual power to go and investigate any organization it sees fit. I take it that the Congress intended that there should be some evidence that the organization which is to be examined is engaged in subversive activities. It need not be that a prima facie case of subversion must be established before the committee could exercise its subpena power, but at least there must be some evidence of such subversive activity. We cannot and should not on mere suspicion subpena the records of any individual or of any organization just for the sake of a fishing expedition. It is not the American way. It is not either the judicial or legislative way. We cannot expect respect for this great legislative body except if we in turn respect the rights of others. This committee apparently goes on the assumption that it has carte blanche to investigate whomsoever and whatsoever it pleases. That was the reason why I opposed making this committee a permanent standing committee of the House. Someday in the future, if this committee is continued, I have no doubt that as the cycle of time goes on and perhaps when there are new members on the committee, we will be haunted by the precedents established by this committee and that minority groups, perhaps religious organizations, will be the target of its subpena. But whatever the future may hold, let me say that upon this cold record before me I can see no justification to certify this record for contempt proceedings.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to Representative POWELL, of New York.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I would like to say a word concerning this matter that is before us right now and the two matters which will probably follow. The organization we are dealing with now is an organization which has been exempted from taxation by the Treasury; contributions to the organization are tax exempt. It is an incorporated body and, therefore, all of its records are open to the public. Whether we agree with its principles or not does not seem to me to be cause for citing it as a subversive organization. Whether we agree with Mr. Lamont's principles or not does not seem to me to be cause for citing him for being subversive.

We differ in this body politically, oftimes. Perhaps if we carried this to the extreme we would all be cited eventually for contempt of something or other.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWELL. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Does the gentleman think the Communist Party is a political party of the United States?

Mr. POWELL. Yes. Until we abolish the Communist Party or the Republican Party the people of the United States who are citizens are privileged to belong to any political party.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWELL. Certainly.

Mr. RICH. If you abolish the Communist Party and the Republican Party, what would you do with the New Dealers?

Mr. POWELL. We would stay right where we are.

I would like to say a word concerning Mr. Lamont personally, because I know him. I am not a lawyer, but as the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH] said, there is nothing in the record to show where Mr. Lamont is guilty. Mr. Lamont is a very fine individual. I have known him for years. He happens to be the son of J. Pierpont Morgan's partner, Thomas Lamont. That will probably be held against him.

Coming after him for contempt citation is Richard Morford, who happens to be a fellow clergyman of mine, a member of the Presbyterian ministry. The third person for citation is a fine gentleman, George Marshall, son of the eminent Louis Marshall.

These people are people who may have views different from ours, but under our democracy they are entitled to them. You cannot hold an individual responsible for the action of his organization. That is not democracy. That is not justice.

I suggest also, in conclusion, that the Committee on Un-American Activities investigate this week's issue of the Saturday Evening Post. I am sure it will find the feature article subversive.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently no quorum is present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 178]

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 322 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

REACQUISITION OF PROPERTY UNDER SURPLUS PROPERTY ACT

Mr. SMITH of Virginia, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 679, Rept. No. 2349) which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6702) to clarify the rights of former owners of real property to reacquire such property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

PROCEEDING AGAINST CORLISS G. LAMONT

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, the speaker who preceded me, the gentleman from New York [Mr. POWELL], stated that he did not like to have this case brought up here because Mr. Lamont is a dear old friend of his and he felt that he should protect him. I recognize Mr. Lamont is a member of a distinguished family in the city of New York and has many friends up there, of course. But the problem with which we are now confronted is about the same problem we had before us on the previous citation cases for contempt where the House ruled very definitely that a committee of its creation should be empowered to examine witnesses and insist that they answer questions directly and factually.

We have found that this case differs not one bit from the previous cases in that the same routine has been followed. Whoever cuts the pattern of evasion for these subversive organizations apparently has got a central office directing all of them to follow the same technique. All you need do is read the complete hearings of the Corliss Lamont-Richard Morford testimony, short excerpts of which you have had placed before you, to realize how they endeavor to evade questions and to deceive the Congress.

We have Mr. Lamont stating that he is only chairman of the board of directors; he presides at the meetings, but that the books of the organization are in the hands of a salaried employee, Mr. Morford. Then we have Mr. Morford testifying that he was employed by Mr. Lamont to serve as a salaried employee, and to maintain custody of the records pursuant to the orders of the board of directors, of which Mr. Lamont is chairman.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr RANKIN And he testified also that this was a corporation and he was president of it?

Mr MUNDT. That is correct. The point I am trying to make is simply this. We are asking you to cite for contempt both Mr. Lamont and Mr. Morford so that proper court procedure can follow, where these men can both be summoned and put under oath and the complete facts made available. Obviously, somebody in this organization must have control of the books. Obviously, it is a matter to be settled in the courts, because we find one witness contradicting the other throughout this testimony. If Mr. Lamont employs Mr. Morford and directs him as secretary to have custody of the books and not to allow the investigators of this committee to see them and examine them, it would appear to me that Mr. Lamont must certainly be in contempt of the committee when he blandly advises us that he washes his hands of the entire affair and suggests that we talk to Mr. Morford. Mr. Lamont is at best an adept artist in concealment. Mr. Morford says, "Unfortunately I am bound by the policy established by the board of directors of which Mr. Lamont is chairman." Apparently Mr. Lamont is also many times the sole member who determines the policy to be followed by the board.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. It would appear to me that as long as the committee has been investigating un-American activities you certainly ought to be in a position to know who the ringleaders of this gang are. I think the House should support you.

Mr. MUNDT. I think the House will support us. I hope it will. It has done so consistently in the past.

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SAVAGE. I see in the report which the committee submitted to the House that Mr. Morford did not deny having the records. On page 2 of the report I find this:

The CHAIRMAN. Have you such records?
Mr. MORFORD. The records are in my custody in the office of the council.

He does not deny having the records. Therefore, Mr. Lamont must be telling the truth. He says he does not have them. The other man does, and the other man admitted it.

Mr. MUNDT. Is it the gentleman's position that there is no question about Mr. Morford being in contempt of our committee, then?

Mr. SAVAGE. No. I am talking about the proceedings with reference to Mr. Corliss Lamont now.

Mr. MUNDT. I suppose you will support the resolution with reference to Mr. Morford when we bring that up next?

Mr. SAVAGE. The resolution that is before us now concerns Mr. Lamont. He says he does not have the records. I maintain he was telling the truth, because the other man says he has them.

Mr. MUNDT. I am glad to know that you will be with us on the next resolution.

Mr. SAVAGE. We will vote on that when we come to it.

Mr. MUNDT. It will be interesting to study the gentleman's vote at that time in view of the statements he has just made. Mr. Speaker, all that we ask today is that the House once more back up its standing Committee To Investigate Un-American Activities in our effort to bring an end to the vicious circle of concealment, evasion, deception, buck-passing, and studied secrecy by which Mr. Lamont's organization and others like it are endeavoring to keep from public inspection the actual purposes and policies of their various groups. If they have nothing in their records of which they are ashamed, it is indeed difficult to understand why they go to such great lengths to deny the public an opportunity to examine their records.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that an organization of this type which seeks and secures tax-exempt privileges for its contributors, which utilizes our mails freely, which stands meticulously on every conceivable constitutional point to protect its freedom and liberty is certainly sailing a strange course when it defies the United States Congress, conceals its records from public inspection, and never at any time has anything good to say about the United States or its form of government. Its literature is packed with plaudits to the Soviet system but whenever there is a difference of opinion to be discussed between the U. S. S. R. and the United States of America this outfit is invariably found in the Russian corner seconding the position of its commissars and leaders. If this is done from purely American motives and under purely American leadership, there is no harm in such activity, because we all desire to increase by every legitimate means the ties of friendship between the United States of America and Russia.

On the other hand, if this policy is motivated, directed, and/or financed from the Kremlin, it is at least not too much to ask that the American public be so advised. Not until the public can know the true identity of the master minds of this organization and can learn the true nature of its financial transactions and its international contacts will the real character of this organization be known which so disarmingly calls itself the National Council for American-Soviet Friendship. We ask you today by your vote to help the public learn the facts of life about this council, which for reasons best known to themselves, the officers of the outfit persistently and consistently refuse to disclose.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE].

Mr. O'TOOLE. * * *

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand that those words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will take his seat. The Clerk will report the words objected to.

The Clerk reported the words objected to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair thinks it very clear that these remarks are offending remarks; that the words "I cannot respect the actions or even the sincerity of some of the committee members" are improper.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike those words from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to strike the offending words from the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARCANTÓNIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE] be permitted to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, then I move that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE] be permitted to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for me to cast an affirmative vote in this proceeding. To me it is a flea hunt while the lion escapes.

The Committee on Un-American Activities was created by this House to investiagte subversive activities that would undermine the fundamental character of the Nation and that might threaten the rights and constitutional guarantees of the people who make up the Nation.

The Klu Klux Klan has come forth from its hiding place and is once again riding the highways and byways uttering its hideous shout in an effort to be a threat to the Government of these United States. To me the Klu Klux Klan is just as repulsive as communism and fascism. It terms itself the "invisible empire" and it is just that. The aim of the Klan is to create a government within the Government which would be run by lawless scamps who deny the existence of both the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

This committee has been made aware of this momentous danger and has chosen not to take cognizance of it. The governors of both Alabama and Georgia—men who are evidently sincere, patriotic Americans—have demanded investigation and suppression of the charter of the Klan. They are conscious of the danger and are taking steps to see that the conditions that existed 20 or 25 years ago do not repeat themselves.

The Klan is opposed to the guaranty of constitutional rights to the 25,000,000 Catholics of this country, the 13,000,000 Negroes, and the 3,500,000 Jews. It would deny the protection of our Government to over 40,000,000 people. It reserves the right to itself to establish its own secret courts and mete out its ironic and tyrannical judgments. The boast of the Klan is that it will build up a membership of 3,000,000 people, a force more powerful than all of the Communists and Fascists in this country. A force that could create havoc and anarchy in many sections. At the recent initiation held by this organization in Atlanta 35 policemen of that city laid their guns at the feet of the imperial wizard and pledged allegiance to him when they already owed allegiance to the State.

When the Committee on Un-American Activities takes cognizance of the existence of these hooded scalawags and makes a sincere effort to drive them from American life, then and not until then will I listen to any plea that that committee makes upon this floor.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to make clear that the two organizations that George Marshall is chairman of, the National Federation of Constitutional Liberty, and that Corliss Lamont is chairman of, the National Council for American-Soviet Friendship, and that Richard Morford is director of, the National Council for American-Soviet Friendship, are Communist-front organizations.

Our committee has carried on its work during the past year despite many efforts at dissolution, led by Communists and their fellow travelers. The committee has formulated the policy of investigating complaints received from American citizens who have the interest of the United States foremost in their hearts and minds.

The committee has not endeavored to curb the civil rights of persons whom it has investigated nor has it any intention of doing so. However, the committee has endeavored to determine whether the persons under investigation have the interest of the United States Government at heart or whether they are sympathetic toward the establishment of a form of government which would forever abolish the civil liberties of all of the people for the benefit of a few.

Our committee will undertake the investigation of any organization which advocates the overthrow of the American system. Communists would like to see the committee abolished because it has exposed their activities in many fields. Communists hate and dread exposure because when the committee uncovers the extent of their infiltration into certain groups it results in the loss of years of work to the Communist followers in the United States.

The Communists have many organizations in the United States, and in New York City alone there are more than 150 organizations which follow the Communist Party line. They have approximately 50,000 Communist members—holding cards—500,000 fellow travelers, and 150,000 underground workers. Our committee has noted with alarm that many innocent citizens have loaned themselves to the furtherance of some phase of communistic doctrines by joining Communist-front groups. When these groups are exposed, the loyal American citizens should disavow their association with these groups. It is conceivable that a person may make a mistake once by joining an organization set up by the Communists. However, when a citizen belongs to many such organizations he is either intentionally or carelessly helping to sell the United States short.

Certain groups and individuals in the United States have tried to frighten the American public into believing that unless we become a communistic nation along with the rest of the world that the United States will be destroyed by atomic bombs. These persons would have one believe that communism is the only way to peace for the world.

The United States must fear communism because it is a foreign-controlled totalitarian movement whose leaders in the past have openly proclaimed that it advocates revolution and the overthrow of the present Government of the United States.

Control of labor unions in the United States is very important to the communistic movement because they hope that through the labor unions they can combine strength with the working class and cause the overthrow of the Government. The Communists fully realize that the workers in mass industries are militant bodies and can be incited to take violent physical action in the form of riots. Some of our labor unions have let these Communists enter their organizations. Some of these unions have been cleaning house. It is time for the rest of these unions to clean out the communistic element that has been throttling the labor unions. No Communist should be allowed to hold an office in a labor union.

The Communists do not hope to obtain control of the Government through the ballot. However, they will work in the 1946 campaign with the PAC, and they expect to have the Communist Party back in action in the 1948 campaign.

OUR RELIGION IN JEOPARDY

If the Communists would succeed, science would replace religion. The Protestants, Catholic, and Jews in America are disturbed at the danger of losing their religious freedom. We do not want our churches sacked or burned.

IT CAN HAPPEN HERE

It can happen here. Anything can happen anywhere at any time if our citizens will not organize, fight, and take the trouble to vote. It happened in Russia when about 200,000 Communists took over Russia in 1918.

Now it makes no difference to us what kind of a system they have in Russia. That is their business. But it does make a difference what kind of a system we have in the United States. That is our business. If these subversive individuals persist in the overthrow of our Government we should put them on a boat and send them back where they belong.

America has reached the crossroads. Today it does seem to me important to make a record of what is a very critical hour in the history of the Republic, so that future generations can turn back to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and find that some Members of Congress warned the American people the danger of losing their liberty.

The House Committee on Un-American Activities has investigated the German-American Bund, Fascists, Nazis, Communists, and the Black Dragon Society of Japan. These subversive groups would like to take over our churches, schools, labor unions, movie industry, radio industry, transportation, and business institutions. They would like to regiment our farmers and workers.

As a member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, I want to speak to you frankly on communism, because I have made direct contact with American and Russian Communists who have recently denounced communism with its iron dictatorship over the liberties and souls of men. Communism is a political idea that the government owns everything and tells everyone what to do. Communism holds that there is not room enough for it on earth and any rival ideas in politics, religion, or economics. No Communist anywhere can be considered a trustworthy citizen. He is a Russian agent and takes orders from Moscow. In America we still allow a Communist Party to run at large. From the first day to the present they have publicly stated that they aim at and work for the violent overthrow of our Government.

We have our choice between American and Christian principles or communism. The danger of communism to America is real; it is imminent. It threatens everything for which our boys have been fighting.

Among Commuists in this country there are many who have become such out of an original sense of social justice, but who are now most unhappy that they belong. Communism is being subsidized by many of our best people and laughed off by many others—who persist that it cannot happen here.

The Political Action Committee, which was organized by Sidney Hillman, who came to the United States from Russia, is one of the most dangerous organizations in America at the present time. The Communists are working with this organization in the coming elections, but they claim they will have a Communist Party organization ready for action in 1948. This CIO Political Action Committee boasts of having $6,000,000 to spend in the 1946 election. Some of this New York Communist money will be spent in Indiana to try to defeat the Republican Members of Congress. I believe the Indiana people will resent these funds coming into our State and they will give them another set-back like they got in the 1944 election.

The voters of Indiana and America will decide at the polls in November whether or not the Communist—CIO—Political Action Committee is going to run the country. I am certain all Americans will take one day off to vote this fall, when they know it means so much toward preserving their liberty.

MINUTEMEN ORGANIZATIONS

Minutemen organizations are springing up all over the United States to combat these Communists. Minutemen groups are made up from liberals, progressives, and conservatives of the Republican and Democratic parties who feel that a united effort irrespective of party must be made to reestablish, foster, and protect the American form of government which has given us the highest standard of living of any nation in the world.

These minutemen believe that America's greatness rests upon a foundation that has its cornerstone, religious freedom, freedom of the press, personal liberty, full economic opportunity, and the right of private enterprise.

They are opposed to the New Deal program of scarcity, control, and regimentation.

They believe that the people's savings, whether life insurance policies, war bonds or other forms of savings, should be protected from inflation that will follow continued reckless public spending.

They believe the time has come for the Government to look after our own people before we make any foreign loans or gifts.

They believe the Government must remove the needless Federal bureaus and unnecessary Government workers. The Reds should be removed immediately from United States pay rolls.

They want to stop the exportation of lumber and logs in order for America to catch up with its housing program.

They want to stop the exportation of farm machinery until our farmers are adequately supplied.

They are not ready to turn their country and control of their Government over to subversive groups.

We have coddled subversive activities too long in America. Too many Americans are disturbed about Great Britain going communistic, instead of being disturbed about the communistic activities in America. It is time for all Americans to wake up. If necessary, we should double the forces of the FBI. Today we need the help of every American and every patriotic organization to protect our temples of liberty.

We should rededicate ourselves to our God, to our country, and to our homes with the inspiration of Lincoln's words when he said:

Many free countries have lost their liberty and ours may lose hers; but if she shall, be it my proudest plume not that I was the last to desert but that I never deserted her.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I think a careful reading of the RECORD of today's proceedings will demonstrate conclusively that a great deal that has been said by the proponents of this resolution is not only extraneous and foreign to the issue involved here but has been injected for the sole purpose of evading the issue itselt and of creating atmosphere.

The raising of the Red bogey is an old technique. It has been used time and time again, particularly in support of every endeavor to violate the fundamental liberties of the American people. Red baiting has been used against labor. It will be used again. It is being used now. It is being used against anybody who at some time or another takes a position which is diametrically opposed to both domestic and foreign fascism. It is a technique used particularly in furtherance of domestic fascism. It was used by Hitler, it was used by Mussolini. Raise the Red bogey and by means of raising the Red bogey you ride roughshod over the democratic rights of all the people. Mussolini did it, and it worked out there. Hitler did it. The attack on the Communists was followed by an attack on labor. Then it was followed by an attack on the Catholics, and so on and so forth, so that no one was left with any democratic rights in Germany. Remember, recent history has taught us that when you destroy the democratic rights of any group, you endanger the liberties of all.

So the Red bogey technique is being used here again. But I submit we should concern ourselves with the direct issue of whether or not the person mentioned in this resolution has refused to respect a subpena of the House of Representatives. Incidentally, at this time I want to refer to a colloquy that I had with the gentleman from South Dakota during the previous contempt proceedings. I pointed out at that time that despite the fact he felt that the majority of the House was on his side I recalled to him that when we had the Dodd, Watson & Lovett cases before the House, those of us who oppose those resolutions were also in the minority, and I pointed out to him that the court had sustained our contention. He stated at that time, "Well, let us see what the Supreme Court will do about it." The Supreme Court, may I say to him, since that colloquy, has acted, and the Supreme Court sustained the position of the minority of this House, who at that time said that the House was violating the fundamental constitutional liberties of those men. The Supreme Court takes the same position today and Congress stands today in a very ridiculous position.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I do not think that holding the opposite of what the Supreme Court holds means that Congress is in a ridiculous position. I think Congress was right, and I think history will prove that Congress is right.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. History has already proven that Congress is wrong. May I say to the lady, speaking about subversive activities, certainly the lady does not want to overthrow the authority of the Supreme Court? When we were kids in school we were taught that the Supreme Court makes decisions on constitutional questions and that those decisions should be respected. I do hope the lady will give the Supreme Court the respect to which it is entitled under the Constitution of the United States unless the lady wants to advocate open and violent overthrow of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I give them enough respect to think that in time they will overrule their decision.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. If the lady does that, perhaps she may be subpenaed by this committee and she is placing herself in very serious danger. You had better be careful, Jessie.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The question here is whether or not Mr. Lamont has custody of these records. The only testimony is to the effect that he does not have custody. He testified that somebody else, Mr. Morford, had custody. Mr. Morford admits in his testimony that he does have custody. Therefore, you have no case against Mr. Lamont, and despite the speech of the gentleman from New Jersey as to Mr. Lamont's record and as to Mr. Lamont's activities, how are you going to get around the proposition when you go before the Department of Justice and the district attorney asks you, "Show me, where does Mr. Lamont have custody?". It is elementary law that you cannot hold a person for violation of a subpena and for failure to produce books when that man does not have custody of those books. The record distinctly shows that Lamont does not have custody and that Morford has custody.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Now you are going to ask me what my position is on Morford?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Yes; that is right.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. There is a fundamental constitutional question involved here which I hope to discuss in the Morford case when it comes up. That fundamental constitutional question involved is, whether your proceedings violate the first amendment of the Constitution. They do, and I am ready to debate that question with the gentleman. But since the gentleman wanted to know my position on the Morford case on the basis of the fact that Morford has custody, then let me know how the gentleman feels with reference to the reverse situation; in other words, that Mr. Lamont does not have custody. Do you still insist on trying to punish Mr. Lamont for contempt?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman knows even better than I do that Corliss Lamont is the one man in this organization who has more to say about the records than anyone else. Do you know him personally?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. That does not mean we should cite him for contempt. You ask me if I know Mr. Lamont personally. Yes; I do. I do not hide the identity of anybody I know, nor for that matter, my own identity. That is my reputation, and everybody knows it.

But let us go back to the record here. Your record discloses completely that Mr. Lamont does not have custody of these records. I ask every Member of this House to read this two-page report before you vote. Lamont does not have custody of these records. The testimony shows that the director has custody of the records. The director testifies and admits that he has custody of the records. You can use the Red bogey all you want, but I shall not cast my vote to make this Congress once again ridiculous in the courts of this country.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN].

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, it is a rather interesting spectacle when you think of the parade that has taken place before this House in the past few years, of the names of many men who were seeking to destroy and overthrow the very Government under which they lived. And, mark you, they are the first ones to cry out for the protection of the Constitution.

I was interested in that plea being presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] just a minute ago. Every time one of these un-American fellows are brought in here, every time one is taken before this body for attempting to destroy and undermine this Government, I do not remember a single instance that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] did not rise to defend him.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. Please excuse me. There is a disturbing factor in addition to that. I fear there are some people in this country who call themselves "liberals" that would give away everything we have, including our liberty, while screaming for protection under the Constitution. Then tear up the Constitution and join the gang that has the loot, where they would undoubtedly be received with open arms. I know that New York probably has the largest percentage of foreign population of any city in the United States. Naturally, those people have foreign ties. Many of them do not even believe in our form of government, and many of them are the loudest critics of this Government. To those I would say in firm and unmistakable terms, You must return to the land from whence you came.

Now, we established a committee of this House to be on the alert, to keep their eyes open for people who would seek to destroy and undermine this Government, and I am one who proposes to support that committee. They may make a mistake occasionally. Who is it that does not? But we had better make a mistake once in a while and get the wrong man than to leave too many of the wrong kind operating in this country. There is no question about the fact that we have been too lax in that respect.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The thing that strikes me so oddly, we cited these other men on the same state of facts precisely, and when we get the people that the Dies committee says are the ringleaders, then all the opposition rises from those who did not oppose it before.

Mr. BARDEN. Let me say to the gentlewoman from Illinois that this opposition did not just arise today. They will holler any time the occasion arises when they can support a fellow of this kind. When any strong suspicion arises, backed up by facts that would indicate that a man was operating against the best interests of this Government, that should be enough for this committee to say to him, "Here. We want to know your story." That should be enough for any good American, and I do not care who he is, to rush forward and want to clear his record and show that he was a good American, and that that suspicion was without foundation. Instead of doing as this man did—defy a summons from the United States Congress.

Now, here is a man who is president of an organization. I have practiced law a right good while. I always regarded—and so did the courts and the laws of my State—a subpena served on the president of a corporation that was properly served that the corporation was bound by that action. Here is the president served by a subpena of a duly organized legislative committee organized by this House. Yet he refuses to comply with it. Now mind you he sought cover under a law passed by this body and secured a certificate from the Treasury Department from paying Federal taxes, and also allowing those who made contributions to his organization to deduct them as credits on their tax reports—and still there are some in this House who say Uncle Sam has no right to question him—even if there is evidence tending to show that he and his organization are using this very tax-exempt money to undermine and do injury to this Government. I must confess I cannot understand their attitude.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield such of the time remaining as he may desire to use to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time remains?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes remain for debate.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, first, I want to answer in just a few words the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE], and to say to him that I am a Protestant. I never was in a Catholic Church in my life. There are Catholics all around me. None of them have ever heard me criticize their religion; but I want to tell the gentleman from New York that neither a Protestant Church nor a Catholic Church can exist in a Communist country. If they had their way they would close every church in America whether it was Catholic, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, or what not.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. No; not now.

I will read what Foster said about that:

In my opinion—

I am quoting William Z. Foster, head of the Communist Party—

In my opinion, a member of the party of the Soviet Union who would be married in the church would not be of any value to the Communist Party.

Mr. Speaker, they rise here and cry "Red baiters" and "fascism." You know there is a little group of Reds and semi-Reds in this country who are always referring to the white people from the South as "southern Fascists," and to the people of the North they cannot browbeat as "native Fascists."

They talk about the Supreme Court. As far as I individually am concerned the Congress of the United States stands at least as high in my opinion and the opinion of the American people, as the Supreme Court of the United States as now constituted.

Now, let us see about this man Lamont.

But first, for the information of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE] I read further what Mr. Foster said:

Many workers join the Communist Party who still have some religious scruples, but a worker who understands the elementary principles of the Communist Party must necessarily be in the process of liquidating his religion, and when he joins the party he will soon get rid of them.

So you will see, Mr. O'TOOLE, that Communism is out to destroy all religion.

Now, let us get back to this man Lamont. It has been shown that he is head of a Communist front organization, and has been mixed up with Communist fronts for years.

He came before the committee on Un-American activities at a time when traitors in this country, and in Canada, were trying to steal the secrets of the atomic bomb. Canada seized some of them and is today incarcerating them in the penitentiary. We found evidence that this group here headed by Mr. Lamont was in alliance with them. We brought Mr. Lamont before the committee, and of all the squirming I have ever seen, he did it. He is president of the corporation, has all the power on earth to bring those books and lay them before the committee. But he showed absolute contempt for the Congress of the United States by refusing to do so.

Now, are you going to underwrite that kind of conduct by your votes? Are you going to permit a man who goes around, a rich parlor pink, if you please, who goes around and mixes with other Communist front organizations that are dedicated to the overthrow of your Government, that are dedicated to wiping out every Christian church of any and all denominations, that are dedicated to the destruction of the American way of life, —are you going to permit him to become president of a corporation engaged in those subversive activities and then come before a committee of Congress and treat it with contempt, and treat Congress with contempt?

I was the author of the resolution which created the Committee on Un-American activities. I never felt a greater responsibility in my life than I did at that moment. It is punishment to a man to serve on that committee. I want to say to you now that no committee of this Congress has rendered a greater service than those men who serve on the Committee on Un-American Activities. In helping to protect our country, in helping to protect the American people, in helping to protect this Government, from being undermined and destroyed by those insidious enemies who are boring from within.

The gentleman from New York talks about the Jews and the Catholics. Let me say to the distinguished gentleman sitting before me [Mr. KLEIN] when he had a Communist running against him the Committee on Un-American Activities investigated and found that his opponent was engaged in subversive activities. Yes; you have Communists among the Jews, and they are doing the Jews more harm than everybody else put together. You have some Communists going down South stirring up trouble among the Negroes. They are doing the Negro more harm than anything else that has ever come along. Look at what they did at Columbia, Tenn. It was nothing in the world but a little Communist movement sent there to stir up trouble. Look what they did. They almost brought on a riot. I want to pay my respects to our distinguished former colleague, Governor McCord, of Tennessee, for calling out the highway patrol, for calling out the State guard, and to them for surrounding and taking care of those poor Negroes who were being agitated and stirred up by these Communists sent there for that purpose.

This is a question for you to decide. You can decide by your votes whether you want the individuals carrying on this kind of subversive work to treat your committee with contempt, to treat the Congress with contempt, or whether you are going to stand up for the United States of America.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

All time has expired. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 240, nays 85, not voting 107, as follows:

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 645, Rept. No. 2353) which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Members be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to investigate and report to the House not later than January 3, 1947, with respect to the following matters:

1. The extent and nature of expenditures made by all candidates for the House of Representatives in connection with their campaign for nomination and election to such office.

2. The amounts subscribed, contributed or expended, and the value of services rendered, and facilities made available (including personal services, use of advertising space, radio time, office space, moving-picture films, and automobile and other transportation facilities) by any individual, individuals, or group of individuals, committee, partnership, corporation, or labor union, to or on behalf of each such candidate in connection with any such campaign or for the purpose of influencing the votes cast or to be cast at any convention or election held in 1946 to which a candidate for the House of Representatives is to be nominated or elected.

3. The use of any other means or influence (including the promise or use of patronage) for the purpose of aiding or influencing the nomination or election of any such candidates.

4. The amounts, if any, raised, contributed, and expended, by any individual, individuals, or groups of individuals, committee, partnership, corporation, or labor union, including any political committee thereof, in connection with any such election, and the amounts received by any political committee from any corporation, labor union, individual, individuals, or group of individuals, committee, or partnership.

5. The violations, if any, of the following statutes of the United States:

(a) The Federal Corrupt Practices Act.

(b) Title 18, sections 61 to 61t, inclusive, United States Code, 1940 edition, relating to pernicious political activities, commonly referred to as the Hatch Act.

(c) The provisions of section 9, Public Law 89, Seventy-eighth Congress, chapter 144, first session, referred to as the "War Labor Disputes Act."

(d) Any statute or legislative act of the United States, or of the State within which a candidate is seeking nomination or reelection to the House of Representatives, the violation of which Federal or State statute, or statutes, would affect the qualification of a Member of the House of Representatives within the meaning of article I, section 5, of the Constitution of the United States.

6. Such other matters relating to the election of Members of the House of Representatives in 1946, and the campaigns of candidates in connection therewith, as the committee deems to be of public interest, and which in its opinion will aid the House of Representatives in enacting remedial legislation, or in deciding any contests that may be instituted involving the right to a seat in the House of Representatives.

7. The committee is authorized to act upon its own motion and upon such information as in its judgment may be reasonable or reliable. Upon complaint being made to the committee under oath, by any person, candidate, or political committee, setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution, it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, the committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after a hearing upon such complaint, the committee shall find that the allegations in such complaint are immaterial or untrue. All hearings before the committee, and before any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, shall be public, and all orders and decisions of the committee, and of any such subcommittee shall be public.

For the purpose of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such public hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-ninth Congress, to employ such attorneys, experts, clerical, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, as it deems advisable.

8. The committee is authorized and directed to report promptly any and all violations of any Federal or State statutes in connection with the matters and things mentioned herein to the Attorney General of the United States in order that he may take such official action as may be proper.

9. Every person, who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties prescribed by law.

That said committee is authorized and directed to file interim reports whenever in the judgment of the majority of the committee, or of a subcommittee conducting portions of said investigation, the public interest will be best served by the filing of said interim reports, and in no event shall the final report of said committee be filed later than January 3, 1947, as hereinabove provided.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 896. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended," approved January 24, 1942, and for other purposes; and

S. 2122. An act to facilitate the admission into the United States of the alien fiancées or fiancés of members of the armed forces of the United States.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to its previous order, adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, June 27, 1946, at 10 o'clock a. m.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JUNE 27, 1946

(Legislative day of Tuesday, March 5, 1946)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Spirit, whom to find is like exchanging a windowless cell for the blue depths of the sky, for the stretch of the infinite sea, for a serene garden with its sacrament of fragrance and color, escaping from the narrow prejudices and inflamed passions of this embittered day, enable us to think with justice, truth, and reverence concerning the common interests of this troubled world. Teach us the saving secret of being anxious for nothing; and when we have honestly given our best to the solution of problems that now vex the earth plowed with the tragic furrows of war, may we leave the result to Thy wisdom with no fear in our hearts save only that of failing Thee and, at the last, of being found unworthy of Thy "Well done." In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, June 26, 1946, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on June 26, 1946, the President had approved and signed the following acts:

S. 1288. An act to authorize the course of instruction at the United States Military Academy to be given to not exceeding 20 persons at a time from the American Republics, other than the United States;

S. 1460. An act to fix the salary of the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior;

S. 1963. An act to authorize additional permanent professors of the United States Military Academy; and

S. 2218. An act to amend the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934, as amended.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on June 26, 1946, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 896. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended", approved January 24, 1942, and for other purposes; and

S. 2122. An act to facilitate the admission into the United States of the alien fiancées or fiancés of members of the armed forces of the United States.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT ON PATENTS, PROCESSES, TECHNIQUES, AND INVENTIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of the War Assets Administration, transmitting, pursuant to section 19 of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, the first supplementary report of that Administration on patents, processes, techniques, and inventions, which, with an accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS

Petitions were laid before the Senate and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A resolution adopted by the Philippine Scouts Veterans' Legion, Manila, P. I., favoring the enactment of legislation providing the same basic pay for the Philippine Scouts as that received by the American soldier according to their respective ranks, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A radiogram in the nature of a petition signed by Senator Ver, president of the National Party, Judge Barrera, president, Democratic Alliance, and Dr. Javier, president of the Popular Front Party, Manila, P. I., favoring the enactment of the Knutson bill disassociating the rehabilitation act from the Bell trade law; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

PERSONS EMPLOYED BY COMMITTEES WHO ARE NOT FULL-TIME SENATE OR COMMITTEE EMPLOYEES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report for the months of April, May, and June, 1946, from the chairman of a certain committee, in response to Senate Resolution 319 (78th Cong.), relative to persons employed by committees who are not full-time employees of the Senate or any committee thereof, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
SUBCOMMITTEE ON WAR MOBILIZATION.

Mr. LESLIE BIFFLE,
Secretary of the Senate, United States Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BIFFLE: It has been suggested to me that despite the passage of Senate Resolution 201 of the Seventy-ninth Congress requiring reimbursement for all personnel borrowed from the executive agencies, Senate Resolution 319 of the Seventy-eighth Congress is also still operative. Accordingly, I am transmitting a report covering the months of April, May, and June.

Sincerely yours,

H. M. KILGORE,
Chairman.

SENATE MILITARY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE, SUBCOMMITTEE ON WAR MOBILIZATION

To the Senate:

The above-mentioned committee hereby submits the following report showing the names of persons employed by the committee who are not full-time employees of the Senate or of the committee for the months of April, May, June, 1946, in compliance with the terms of S. Res. 319, agreed to Aug. 23, 1944:

H. M. KILGORE, Chairman.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCARRAN:

S. 2378. A bill to amend the First War Powers Act, 1941; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2379. A bill for the relief of Ellen Hudson, as administratrix of the estate of Walter R. Hudson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURCH:

S. 2380. A bill to clarify the rights of former owners of real property to reacquire such property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(Mr. KNOWLAND introduced Senate bill (S. 2381) to amend the Federal Unemployment Tax Act and the Social Security Act so as to authorize any State to use amounts contributed by employees to the unemployment fund of such State to pay cash benefits to individuals with respect to their unemployment by reason of their disability, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. HOEY:

S. 2382. A bill authorizing and directing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to construct two four-lane bridges to replace the existing Fourteenth Street or Highway Bridge across the Potomac River, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BALL:

S. 2383. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a toll bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BUSHFIELD:

S. 2384. A bill to confer jurisdiction on the States of North Dakota and South Dakota over offenses committed by or against Indians on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

WATER RESOURCES OF THE CENTRAL VALLEY PROJECT, CALIFORNIA

Mr. DOWNEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 294), which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Resolved, That the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the terms and conditions of contracts offered by the Department of the Interior for the disposition of the water resources of the Central Valley project of California, including, but not limited to, (a) the basis of the water rights claimed by said Department; (b) the character of the water rights offered by the Department to water users' organizations; (c) the control asserted or possessed by the Department with respect to both surface and underground waters; (d) the collection and application of taxes, assessments, and other revenues; (e) the provisions for limitation of acreage in single ownerships which may be served under said contracts; (f) the specific legal authority for said contracts and the several provisions thereof; (g) any other factors relating to the proper utilization and disposition of the water resources of the Central Valley project, and the policies of the Department of the Interior with reference thereto.

The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable concerning additional legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-ninth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

FLOOD CONTROL ON RIVERS AND HARBORS—AMENDMENT

Mr. BYRD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6597) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOWNEY in the chair). Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENT

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 6777) making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely: On page 28, after line 2, insert the following:

"SEC. 306. In order to meet emergencies or contingencies arising subsequent to approval of the Budget and not provided for in the Budget program, a corporation or agency covered by the provisions of this act may, with the approval of the President, adjust its budget program to provide, within the limits of available funds and borrowing authority, for the immediate initiation of programs authorized by law and not specifically set forth in the Budget: Provided, That the new program shall be promptly transmitted to the Congress as an amendment to the Budget: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed as authority for increasing the amount available for administrative expenses under any limitation on such expenses."

Mr. McKELLAR also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6777, making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(For the text of amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

NAVAL ASSISTANCE TO THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WALSH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5356) to provide assistance to the Republic of China in augmenting and maintaining a Naval Establishment, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4 and 5.

Amendments numbered 1 and 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the President is authorized, whenever in his discretion the public interests render such a course advisable, or will assist in relieving United States forces of duty in China or putting the Government of the Republic of China in better position to protect or improve the safety of navigation in its waters, to provide to the Republic of China such naval services, training, plans, and technical advice as he may deem proper; and to dispose of naval vessels and craft, not to exceed two hundred and seventy-one vessels and craft under authority of this Act, which are in excess of the naval needs of the United States, floating drydocks of capacity sufficient to accommodate any vessel or craft disposed of under authority of this Act, and material necessary for the operation and maintenance of the vessels and craft disposed of under authority of this Act and for the training of the crews of such vessels and craft, to the Republic of China by sale, exchange, lease, gift, or transfer for cash, credit, or other property, with or without warranty, or upon such other terms and conditions as he may deem proper: Provided, That prior to the disposition under the authority of this Act of any battleship, aircraft carrier of any type, cruiser, destroyer (but not destroyer escort), or submarine the President shall first obtain the authority of the Congress in each instance: Provided further, That no information, plans, advice, material, documents, blueprints, or other papers, bearing a secret or top-secret classification shall be disposed of or transferred under authority of this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The President is authorized, upon application from the Republic of China, and whenever in his discretion the public interests render such a course advisable, to detail not to exceed one hundred officers and two hundred enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps to assist the Republic of China in naval matters: Provided, That United States naval or Marine Corps personnel shall not accompany Chinese troops, aircraft, or ships on other than training maneuvers or cruises: Provided further, That the Secretary of Navy is authorized to pay to such persons such additional compensation as may be necessary to make appropriate adjustment for increased cost of living occasioned by reason of detail to such duty: And provided further, That while so detailed such officers and enlisted men shall receive the pay and allowances thereunto entitled in the United States Navy or Marine Corps and shall be allowed the same credit for longevity, retirement, and for all other purposes that they would receive if they were serving with the forces of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

DAVID I. WALSH,
MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
CHARLES W. TOBEY,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

PATRICK H. DREWRY,
LYNDON B. JOHNSON,
W. STERLING COLE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

There being no objection, the conference report was considered and agreed to.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS—SUBSTITUTION OF A CONFEREE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, because of the fact that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is absent from the city, I ask unanimous consent that he be excused from further service as a conferee on the part of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 5452) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] be appointed in his stead.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to read two telegrams I have received from two of my constituents, both of whom I know very well, in which they express their opinion regarding the OPA. One telegram is from El Dorado, Kans., dated April 25, 1946, addressed to me, and is as follows:

I want to protest about the terrible curse the OPA is inflicting on the American people. I have been in the jewelry business for 40 years. It has become impossible to get merchandise. I am president of Allen Memorial Hospital. We have been without meat for over 3 weeks, forcing us to buy steers and do our own butchering, all on account of OPA.

Am president of the Mid-Continent Building & Loan and have started to build some GI houses but have shut down because we are out of lumber, hardware, and plumbing, all on account of OPA. The prices of real estate and rents have inflated to the extent that we will have to stop making loans because of the unsafe valuation. My belief is this: Throw the OPA out of the window. Remove all subsidies and make a law holding real estate and rents to a 1944 level. On the above, I feel that I know whereof I speak and feel justified in making this complaint to you.

Sincerely,

J. W. KIRKPATRICK.

The other telegram is from Topeka, Kans., dated May 2, 1946, addressed to me, and is as follows:

Our country is in one helluva fix. The OPA with their propaganda has the unthinking people scared to death. The OPA has stymied reconversion and progress. They have stopped production of building materials until there is little compared with the demand. If they were out of the picture this situation would be corrected in a very short time. Roosevelt with all his rules and regulations dragged out the depression until World War II took us out. OPA will drag out the reconversion the same way if it is not stopped by Congress. The House did a good job. I hope the Senate does not nullify it.

FRED P. MARTIN.

Mr. President, I have received approximately 10,000 letters, telegrams, and petitions dealing with OPA. The ratio is about 6 to 1 in favor either of abolishing OPA or severely curtailing OPA. An examination of these telegrams, letters, and petitions shows that about 50 percent of those favoring restriction of the OPA came from housewives, which is contrary to much of the propaganda which is spread throughout the country, principally through the OPA.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I am opposed to the conference report. I am opposed to the extension of OPA. I have been opposed to it from the beginning. I said a year ago, when the matter was up for discussion, that the OPA is wrong in principle and contrary to our Constitution, and repugnant to Americans. I am of the same opinion still. If we permit prolonged regimentation, as exemplified by OPA, we will be playing with the same fire that consumed both Germany and Italy. Americans and freedom-loving people everywhere should now take heed.

If there is any merit in consistency, Mr. President, I have been consistent in this matter all the way through. I ask unanimous consent that the speech which I delivered a year ago, on June 6, 1945, with reference to extension of OPA, be now reprinted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, in discussing the pending legislation I wish to say at the outset that I am aware of the pressure that is being exerted to secure its passage. Apropos of some aspects of that pressure I desire to call attention to a press release which was issued yesterday by the OPA itself in its effort to have itself perpetuated for future time. I am aware that the officials of the OPA, seeking an extension of time, were protected against the Members of the Senate except those who happen to be on the committee, and while their testimony may have been reduced to writing I have not as yet seen it. The hearings were held behind closed doors. The release to which I have referred is, in substance, that penalties were imposed upon more than 28,900 violators of price, rent, and rationing regulations during the first 4 months of this year, which is a short period. Of this number, 480 were sent to jail; 12,087 paid fines totaling more than $8,000,000; 4,349 violators were suspended from business for varying periods of time; many for the duration of rationing, which, in the opinion of the OPA, may be indefinitely; 7,296 were placed under court injunctions ordering them to obey regulations; 4,081 consumers' rationings were revoked or suspended; 456 violators were placed on probation; 151 violators are not classified.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to read into the RECORD a telegram from a group of chambers of commerce in one of the western counties of Oklahoma, of which Buffalo is the county seat. It is one of the wheat-producing counties of the State. It is populated by men who work for a living, who produce food crops, and who have always been self-reliant. They are begging somebody to allow them the means of harvesting one of the big wheat crops in their neighborhood. The means that they ask of someone is permission to use their own resources, their own money, and their own food, raised by themselves, and not knowing where to turn for assistance, they have appealed to me, with an almost futile hope that I might be able to procure for them action on the reasonable request they make, the request to be granted by somebody who lives in Washington.

I regret to say, Mr. President, that I scarcely knew what to do or what course to take to advise them how to proceed legally to achieve their objective for which they so humbly petition. The one thing that I knew to do was to appeal to a man by the name of Chester Bowles, Price Administrator, Washington, D. C. I pleaded with him by letter. I telegraphed the distressed citizens of Harper County that I was making an appeal, not only to Mr. Chester Bowles but also to Judge Marvin Jones, War Food Administrator, and promised them that I would do all I could to get some sort of relaxation of orders from Washington so that they might, within the law, do such a reasonable thing as to employ their own resources to harvest the crops which they have raised, and then be permitted to deliver those crops wherever the markets of the country afforded an outlet.

To my knowledge, I have never seen this man, Chester Bowles. He testified, so I am told, a few days ago at a closed hearing. As an American Senator, I sought permission of the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee to be present so that I might listen to the reasons Mr. Bowles would present for the continuation of such orders as I have referred to, and so that I might also see what manner of man Mr. Bowles is and "upon what meat he doth feed that he should so bestride the pigmy world."

The telegram from the Harper County Chamber of Commerce is as follows:

BUFFALO, OKLA., May 29, 1945.

E. H. MOORE,
United States Senate:

Harper County is facing an emergency which will restrict procurement of outside labor to harvest one of its largest wheat crops. To relieve the situation the undersigned chambers of commerce were called together by the county organization to meet with the local meat slaughterers and restaurant operators which are this week threatened with closing for want of meat. On a basis of last year's statistics harvest laborers will increase the county population at least 20 percent. Slaughtering has been reduced 25 percent on beef and 50 percent on pork. With this unreasonable predicament it will be impossible for the harvest crews to be fed. Harper County has a surplus of medium to good grade beef cattle. Grant us permission to process our local meat and we will need no packinghouse products. We face no harvester shortage but these men must be fed, if we save our wheat. We beg your assistance in this crisis.

Harper County Chamber of Commerce, by O. A. Maddox; Laverne Chamber of Commerce, by J. C. Holmes; Rosston Chamber of Commerce, by C. C. German; May Chamber of Commerce, by R. O. Allen; Selman Chamber of Commerce, by Ernest Branch; Buffalo Chamber of Commerce, by Ross Murray.

Mr. President, I also desire to read into the RECORD another telegram which I have received from the chairman of the Agriculture Department of the Tulsa, Okla., Chamber of Commerce. This telegram says that they are confronted with one of the most serious livestock marketing and food situations in the history of the livestock industry; that there exists in this important farming area the largest number of food livestock on the hoof in history; that Government orders prevent the slaughtering of more than a very limited number of the large crop of meat animals from the ranges of that locality; that the stockyards, built by the citizens of Tulsa, are daily refusing many hundreds of cattle; that these poor farmers, not knowing of this condition, haul their cattle to the stockyards and then have to haul them back to their farms, and that this same condition exists in many other localities in this southwestern cattle area. They have pleaded with me to do something or have something done to remedy this ridiculous situation, and they appealed to me after a large meeting of business and professional men in the chamber of commerce at Tulsa.

Now, Mr. President, what can be done so long as we are fearful of some mysterious thing we hardly know how to define and, through that fear, are deterred from exercising our authority for relief in such cases, but yield, instead, to the course recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency, at the vehement demands of Chester Bowles and his kind of thinking?

The telegram from the chairman of the agriculture department of the Tulsa Chamber of Commerce, Mr. C. W. Cotton, is as follows:

TULSA, OKLA., May 30, 1945.

Hon. E. H. MOORE,
United States Senate:

We are confronted here with one of most serious livestock marketing and food situations in the history of our livestock industry. There exists in this important farming area largest number of food livestock on the hoof in history. As you are aware, the normal marketing period for grass-fat cattle is just beginning and will continue until middle of October. Present Government restrictions prevent local packers from slaughtering more than very limited number of these cattle. Therefore, they are entirely helpless to care for normal offerings. Our local stockyards are daily refusing acceptance many hundred of head cattle and large percentage are being returned to ranches and farms because these cattle are brought into stockyards in small numbers by hundreds of farmers who have no other available market. Many other localities in Southwest also are confronted with this very serious problem. When cattle are fat and there is no market it naturally causes economic loss to producer as well as food loss to public. At large meeting business and professional men at Tulsa Chamber of Commerce today resolution was passed respectfully asking agriculture committee to request you to provide means of immediate relief and to suggest increased killing quotas for local packers.

C. W. COTTON,
Chairman, Agriculture Department,
Tulsa Chamber of Commerce.

These telegrams I have read are only sample complaints of literally hundreds that are coming from the people. There is, however, another class of complaints that is growing more and more numerous, to which I should like to refer. These are from men of long experience in business, men who head substantial business organizations. In many cases they have acted or are now acting in an advisory capacity to OPA or some other war-control agency—men who from patriotic zeal have tried desperately to believe in the soundness of production and price control, at least as a wartime measure; men who are able to diagnose the situation, and who are now condemning the theory and the philosophy of price- and production-control experiment. They have witnessed the debacle first hand. They have felt the sting of the regimenter's whip. As law-abiding citizens, they conscientiously attempted to comply with the complicated and irresponsible regulations, but in so doing have seen their business disintegrate and taken over by the black-market gangster.

Many letters from this type of businessman telling the sordid story are being received, but always end with the amazing and chilling statement: "This letter is for your personal information. Please do not use it in any manner or give publicity to my name."

Why? We all know the reason. It has been answered on the floor of the Senate many times, but it cannot be repeated too often. The dictatorial power which we in Congress have delegated to the regimenters is so great, so all-inclusive, and is actually being used to such devastating extent that businessmen who accept seriously the responsibilities of their investors, who feel they must protect their families and their own future, dare not speak up in public. This, indeed, is tyranny personified.

It is said that there is a growing number of people—businessmen—who despair of a restoration of private enterprise. And there are some who do not want controls removed. Government control of supply and demand, the creation of artificial channels, and the regimentation of business have caused some to see advantages. Their initiative has been removed and they find they like it. They always have an excuse to give to their importunate customers for goods. Their markets are ready-made for them and their methods of distribution charted. After many months of this kind of artificial life, they have come to enjoy the shelter afforded. Their business enterprise is gone, but so are their competitive worries. They are like a bird which has been placed in a cage and which, after release, flutters around and then returns to the cage for protection.

I cannot believe that this is true of the great mass of businessmen. I cannot help hoping that when businessmen see their enterprise being absorbed by Government controls, they will rise up and place the blame definitely where it belongs, and that is on the Congress of the United States, which has delegated its power and constituted these authorities which now tyrannize over the lives and activities of the people as a whole.

Mr. President, the Congress is about to be called upon to extend OPA. The manner in which we meet the challenge inherent in this request will be the measure of our faith in American democracy under the Constitution.

There are a few fundamentals on which our decisions should be based:

First. Artificial control of prices and arbitrary distribution of commodities are repugnant to the conception of free trade and enterprise as encompassed by the Constitution. Both are the essence of a socialistic state.

Second. The Constitution is the supreme law of the land, in war or in peace. The guaranties of the Bill of Rights and other provisions of the Constitution protecting essential liberties are not suspended by the existence of a state of war. The war powers of the several branches of Government are both created and delimited by the Constitution. There are constitutional boundaries which the Congress, the executive, or the judiciary may not transgress.

Third. It is axiomatic that the law of supply and demand may not be diverted from its economic orbit without a corresponding punishment to those subject to the law.

Fourth. Our experiment in the field of governmental rationing and price control has failed to accomplish even a small degree of the benefits hoped for by those who were persuaded to depart from the Constitution, because of their fear of the devastating effects of inflation and shortages of the necessities of life for our people. On the contrary, it has become a monster of oppression, a vehicle for crime, the instrumentality of destruction, the breeder of greed, and the perpetrator of shortages and hardships.

Who is there that can successfully deny these plain facts?

OPA has failed under the management of un-American-minded men who have no confidence in the principles of the Constitution or the integrity of the American way of life. It has failed under the management of men who live in a world of theories, and most of whom are totally minus the practical experiences that make for sound judgment.

The effects of its failure have been doubly severe because of these facts, but I want to emphasize that OPA was doomed to failure under the most capable and conservative personnel that could have been selected for it, because it was wrong in principle, contrary to our Constitution, and repugnant to Americanism. No system that usurps the liberties of the people, as guaranteed by the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, can ever succeed in America, so long as those instruments stand as the charter of our Government.

There are those who plead that this retreat from the Constitution is justified on the ground that without OPA we would have had run-away prices. Two answers to this argument are apparent. First, we do have illegal run-away prices; and second, we frankly say, certainly we would have been burdened with legally high war prices. No realistic person will deny that high prices and shortages are the burdens of a nation at war. But I do undertake to say that had those burdens been laid upon us in a constitutional and legal manner, they would have been borne with grace and a high feeling of patriotic pride. We would not have had the disgrace, shame, crime, and loss of morale engendered by this un-American experiment.

OPA officials and those who have been tricked into supporting the theory of OPA on the fallacious philosophy that it is justified by war are making dire predictions of what will happen if the heavy hand of Government control is withdrawn.

I saw a propaganda press release only a few days ago in which Mr. Bowles said that without OPA, steel used by the Government for war purposes would have cost the American people $26,000,000,000 in excess of what had been expended. On its face this sounds good, but it is a snare to the unsuspecting. Steel purchased by the United States for war purposes should have and could have been bought on contract under terms that would have protected the Government, and at the same time given due regard to the cost of production and a reasonable profit to the manufacturer. The same is true of every item of our war material, including military food supplies. If the $26,000,000,000 saving on steel, claimed by Mr. Bowles, is reflected by a loss to private enterprise, then he has performed a very great disservice to his country.

No one objects to the Army and the Navy declaring a priority upon all the resources of this country as may be necessary for conducting war. But, there is a rising tide of revulsion against the bureaucratic destruction of our ability to produce not only for war but for the peace that is to come. The record of OPA is replete with instances of destruction and planned shortages. The meat shortage is directly in point.

The recent reports of both the Senate and the House committees is an exposé that should embarrass every American citizen. The bungling of OPA personnel is, of course, inexcusable, but, let us not forget that OPA was set up for the express purpose of holding prices in a fixed groove, regardless of result. OPA is not concerned with production. It has no concern with who goes broke. It has no anxiety as to the future of our economy. OPA is charged only with the responsibility of "holding the line"—the country be damned. The application of this philosophy in the hands of any group would have necessarily caused the same result, however wisely it may have been administered.

The bitter experiences of the Russians with controlled economy are beginning to show their effect. A few days ago the Associated Press carried a dispatch from Moscow stating that "the Red Army command in Russian-occupied Germany has reestablished free trade and the 'profits system' to encourage the selling and bargaining of surplus produce in the open market, in a move to combat the serious threat of famine in the cities."

Sugar is another example of the application of the same philosophy. The refusal of OPA to increase the price of Cuban sugar sufficiently to cover the increased cost of production has resulted in a 600,000- to a 1,000,000-ton shortage for this year.

Not long ago OPA decided to make a survey to determine the consumptive demand for sugar. At considerable expense and effort it took groups of figures from the census and set up estimates of demand. I am now told these were never even checked against actual registrations with ration boards. In the first quarter of 1945 civilians consumed 140,000 tons more than OPA's allocations. In the second quarter consumption in excess of current supply rose to 193,000 tons.

Last fall the War Food Administration encouraged western growers to plant a heavy crop of sugar beets, which will now come on the market before Cuban cane sugar. Obviously, this will cause an expensive derangement of distribution, not only costly in terms of food production but in use of transportation facilities and manpower. Against all economic practices western beet sugar will now cross the continent to meet eastern markets. Then the Cuban sugar production, from the acreage that is now being planted, will recross the continent to fill the deficit created by the situation in the West. In a word, beet sugar will be shipped to fill an artificial shortage in the East and cane sugar will be shipped back over the same route to fill an artificial shortage in the West, the whole fantastic operation being directly traceable to OPA.

While OPA is busy planning and executing a sugar shortage, other agencies and departments of government are urging the housewife to can a greater proportion of the fruit and berry crop than ever before.

This is only another example of the natural result of artificial restraints upon supply and demand, when the guesser who applies the restraints misses his guess, as he usually does.

The milk shortage, which was only remedied temporarily by resorting to the iniquity of a subsidy, was caused by the same forces, namely, a failure to permit the milk producer to meet the cost of production.

The dried-bean shortage is still another example of OPA bungling. The farm bureau for the State of New York has adopted a resolution calling attention to the deplorable situation with respect to the production of beans. Beans are a vegetable protein that can be used when meat is not available. The more complete meat proteins on a dry basis cost from $1.50 to $2 a pound. For one of the best vegetable substitute proteins, which can be had in beans, OPA has established a price range of from 8 to 9 cents a pound. Beans cannot be produced for the market under war conditions at this price. Had the public been permitted to pay 15 cents a pound, beans would have been available in abundance, the public would have had one of the best, although incomplete, protein substitutes for meat at one-tenth the cost of meat, and the public would have been enormously benefited.

I am advised that we may be faced with a severe shortage of poultry and eggs unless the abnormal demand for these products is relieved by an increased meat supply. On January 1, 1945, our poultry and egg production stood near an all-time peak. According to the Department of Agriculture, supplies of poultry and eggs had dropped 19½ percent by April 1. In the South Atlantic States, according to the Department's figures, the decline was over 23 percent; in New England, it was over 27 percent. Poultry growers flatly deny the accuracy of these Government figures. They declare that the over-all decrease has been far greater than the 19½ percent claimed by the Department.

We have 80,000,000 cattle on the range today, approximately 30 percent more than ever before in history. Outside the demands of our armed forces, why should we not slaughter a sufficient amount to satisfy the civilian demand? The answer is that a group of individuals have decided how many cattle may be slaughtered, where they shall be marketed, and at what price. Economic dislocations follow, with resultant loss of production, black-market prices, and a reduction of quantity available to the consumer. The guessers in this case are obviously wrong. The result is a shortage in a land of plenty.

To further complicate the situation, OPA is making a drive—and may I add that the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has charged that it is a premeditated design for subversive purposes—to eliminate the nonfederally inspected packer by the issuance of Control Order No. 1. My office has been deluged with letters from local packers throughout the country who are being forced to abandon their businesses under the oppressive terms of this order. A few days ago 12 independent slaughterers supplying 70 percent of the meat consumed by the war workers of the Gary, Ind., area were forced to suspend business by reason of the quota limitations placed on them by Control Order No. 1.

I am advised that OPA, wholly outside the scope of its authority and outside the purposes for which it was created, brought meat from other sources into this area. Where did OPA get the meat? What other area was discriminated against in order to quiet the protest of these war workers, who had been denied a necessary part of their diet? The Gary situation is only one example. Multiply this by the several hundred thousand communities of America, and you have a slight indication of the chaos into which OPA has led us.

Controlled prices and arbitrary distribution lead to inequality, both as to price and as to distribution. Inequality and discrimination are the very theory of rationing. Under rationing, all share and share alike, from the cradle to the grave, whether infant, munitions worker, farmer, or octogenarian. Under this system, some have more than they need. Others go without or patronize the black market. Yet rationing is sold to the public on the basis of equality. Everyone, regardless of need, gets an equal number of meat coupons. This test of equity cannot stand the test of time.

The packers, meat wholesalers, and local butchers have long known that it was a farce. The public who was supposed to be protected, is getting a real lesson in the inequality of rationing. Some are eating much more meat than normally and some much less. There has been no time in history when distribution was so inequitable as at the present time.

Under the present system a family of 2 can have meat for dinner, 15 to 18 days out of the month, while a family with 4 or 5 children can have meat three times a day for 30 days, if they can find it on the market.

Equality may be the battle cry of the regimenter, but both man and nature bear testimony to its nonexistence.

The theorists that sold the "share and share alike from the cradle to the grave" plan should talk to the housewives of the Nation. They will quickly learn that equal numbers of red ration tokens do not result in equal treatment or equal sacrifice. Rationing is the essence of inefficiency. Free prices are the final judgment of the people. Under a free economy everyone is on the committee and serves without pay.

People have always followed the dictates of relative prices. When prices are low, consumption goes up, and prices rise until consumption goes down. Within this cycle, the law of supply and demand furnishes a variation of price that insures distribution to all. When this age-old guide is taken away, we are thrown into confusion.

No one knows enough to set prices. To set prices on food, for instance, the price fixer must know the acreage that will be planted with a given schedule of prices. He must know what the weather is going to be like, what the supply and demand for the various classifications of food and their various food forms will be, in the various markets throughout this country and abroad. He must know what the general level of all prices is going to be and what the situation among competing foods will be. In addition, he must have information on such factors as labor supply, machinery available for producing and processing, transportation, and numerous other pertinent factors. All these must be known well in advance. Such a task is beyond the ability of any man or agency. Price fixers must necessarily be erroneous forecasters.

Shortages, created by the same method used to develop a meat shortage, are by no means confined to foods. The shelves of the hardware merchant, the clothing store, the drug store, the department store, and many other types of merchants and shopkeepers, are bare or filled with substitutes at tremendously inflated prices for greatly inferior quality.

The report of the Senate committee investigating OPA has recommended a complete removal of price control from all commodities "as fast as they become sufficiently plentiful to permit the law of supply and demand to operate." But may I suggest to the learned gentlemen of the committee that until incentive prices are developed under the free play of the law of supply and demand, commodities will never become sufficiently plentiful to permit removal of price controls. Under this formula, we are doomed to a perpetual OPA.

Incentive prices are necessary to stimulate increased production. Increased production, in turn, depresses high prices. Thus production and prices complement each other as checks and balances. During the past several years there has been an effort to indoctrinate people with the idea that a free-price system is associated with inflation, excessive profits, exploitation, planned scarcity, greed, and inequality, and is harmful to the war effort.

But let us examine the comparative situation of America at the close of the last war, operating under a free economy, with our position today under controlled prices. Our food agencies are discussing with fear and trembling the fact that we expect to ship 12,000,000 tons of food to the people of Europe in the coming year. During the first 12 months following the close of World War I, America delivered in Europe more than 23,000,000 tons of food. How were we able to accomplish this immense task? It was because the producers were fired by the incentive of profitable prices.

Today, however, faced as we are with the great humanitarian obligation to alleviate the sufferings of the peaple of Europe, instead of releasing the restraints upon the great productive capacity of this country, we continue to engage in the very practices that destroy our productivity.

Our bureaucratic czars of today, and those who have been persuaded to follow them, earnestly insist that food rationing was an absolute necessity, in order that our armies abroad might be well fed during this war. I deny this, and again point to the comparison of our food consumption today, as compared with the years of World War I—a comparison between compulsion and patriotism.

During the 3-year period from 1942 to 1944, inclusive, average civilian consumption of meat was 6 percent greater than during the World War years of 1917 and 1918. During the same period civilians ate 28 percent more chicken than during World War I, 10 percent more lard and cooking fats, and 12 percent more sugar. To the average city dweller, with the average income, who cannot find meat, chickens, or sugar on the market, it is hard to understand how it is possible that consumption today is greater than it was during the years of World War I.

The answer, of course, is the operation of the black market, which has fed a small proportion of the population much better than usual and a very large proportion much poorer. The answer also lies in the fact that the black market has filled the pantries and meat lockers of the hoarders who patronize the black markets. These are the direct evils of OPA.

There is a deep significance in these figures. During World War I, the conservation of food was organized on a voluntary, patriotic basis through cooperative measures with consumers and producers. There were no ration boards, ration cards, harassments, black markets, gangsters. The expense was trivial.

Today, we have submitted ourselves to compulsion. We have saddled ourselves with ration boards and ration cards, elaborate and unintelligible regulations over every trade, business, and enterprise; black markets, gangsterism, and untold inconvenience to the public by expensive, complicated, and irresponsible administration.

It is indeed of interest to compare the results of the two methods in these four most critical commodities. The figures demonstrate that the American people, by voluntary effort, motivated by patriotic desires, will make greater sacrifices than under any plan of dictatorship and coercion.

Now let us examine the argument that abolishing OPA would bring about uncontrolled and ruinous inflation. The fact is that we are confronted by a severe inflationary condition today. If anyone doubts my word, let him talk to any housewife who has the responsibility of making the pay check stretch from one pay day to the next. Talk to anyone who is frank enough to tell of the black market on scarce commodities. The A. F. of L. and the CIO say that available figures indicate a 40- to 50-percent increase in the cost of living over the last prewar year. Our inflationary condition, however, is not reflected in the high prices that are paid and received across the counters of our merchants, although in many cases they have increased substantially. The severe and most devastating inflation is that which has accrued by reason of a deliberate avoidance of OPA regulations.

The man's suit of clothes that sold for $50 prewar comes on the market slightly changed and, consequently, as a new style, with a ceiling price of $75, $80, or $90. Prices of women's and children's clothing have been raised by the same process of avoidance and evasion. A prewar pair of shoes sold for $10. Today the same brand of shoes may sell for $11. OPA contends that that is only a 10 percent increase, but studiously avoids the fact that the $11 shoes of today are only $4 prewar quality.

Inferior qualities of foodstuffs have joined the inflation parade in the same manner.

Hotel managers have closed out their apartments as fast as possible and have converted their rooms to day rentals. I know one case where an apartment rented for $250 in 1941. Today it must be rented by the day at a rate of $15 a day. Not only this, but the prewar $5 room, by the addition of a new piece of furniture, is now a $10 room. Hotel dining rooms now serve an inferior quality of $1.50 prewar dinners, but they appear on the waiter's check as pheasant dinners at $5.

These practices, and hundreds of others with which we are all familiar are only a small part of the inflation that is consuming the country and, at the same time, is depressing our production.

The black markets are the real source of our inflation. The black market takes its toll all along the line, from producer to consumer. Press reports from New York say that the farmers of that State are refusing to surrender their live poultry to buyers at the OPA ceiling price of approximately 30 cents a pound, and are continuing to market directly with the consumer, without benefit of the middle man, at from 65 to 70 cents a pound. Here in Washington the press reports chickens selling at farmers' markets for as much as $9 apiece.

These instances are not peculiar to New York and Washington, nor are they confined to the poultry market. As a matter of fact, they include practically every type of farm produce. Throughout the length and breadth of this country the farmers and consumers are doing business at substantially above-ceiling prices. I may add that red points are not a consideration in these dealings.

The man with the C card, new tires, and the money is going out after his food, and he is getting it, notwithstanding inflation or OPA. The result is that a few are eating well, at tremendously inflated prices, but the great majority who are not in a position to compete with food on this basis are being poorly fed. The produce that normally supplies the industrial areas, over-the-market-counters of the large cities, is going to supply roadside sales. The markets are bare, and they will continue to be bare until OPA is abandoned.

Then, there is, of course, the black-market wholesaler, who does business with the black-market retailer, who, in turn, must pass along the black-market prices to his customers. This calls for evading OPA regulations and resorting to counterfeit rationing stamps. I notice that OPA claims that since July 1 it has confiscated over 330,000,000 counterfeit red points, representing over 55,000,000 pounds of meat.

The extent of inflation involved in these black-market transactions, measured by prewar prices, cannot be estimated. The inflation represented by this type of transaction has gone underground. It has filled the strongboxes of the country with currency. It has made tax dodgers and petty criminals out of a substantial portion of our people and, if continued, it will lead to a gangsterism that will put to shame the prohibition days of Capone. It is this type of transaction that has led the Secretary of the Treasury to call upon Congress for an army of 10,000 additional tax agents.

Inflation, as the economist knows it, comes from two sources: First, when the Government debt grows to such proportions that the people lose confidence in the Government's ability to repay, with a dollar having purchasing power equal to the dollar borrowed. Such loss of confidence results in a discontinuance of bond buying, and the Government is forced to take up the slack with printing-press money. This is the kind of inflation that destroyed the economy of France, Germany, and Italy. When this condition has been reached, it means that the Government must adopt a new medium of exchange, at the expense of wiping out savings, credits, and a complete collapse of the existing economic order.

The second cause of inflation, and the one under which the American people are suffering today, arises from a surplus of income and a shortage of consumer goods. When the demand is in excess of available consumer goods, those with surplus spending power begin to bid up the price. If it cannot be done legally, then there are those who will do it illegally, and the economy of this country is so far-flung and so intricate that no administrator can amass a force great enough to prevent it. The only remedy known to man for this kind of inflation is an increase in production. So far, healthy prices have been the best stimulant for increased production.

As some indication of the inflation spiral in which we find ourselves, I call attention to the fact that consumer expenditures during 1944 rose to $97,000,000,000, as compared with ninety-one billions in 1943, although there was a slight decrease in civilian consumption. Thus, we spent $6,000,000,000 for less and, consequently, we had an over-all inflationary jump of equal proportions.

In 1944 individual incomes increased to $156,000,000,000, as compared with one hundred and forty-two billions in 1943. Personal taxes rose from $18,000,000,000 in 1943 to $23,000,000,000 in 1944. With 1944 consumer expenditures at ninety-seven billions, surplus income amounted to $36,000,000,000, as compared with thirty-three billion surplus in the previous year, and with less consumer goods available for purchase.

The job that confronts America today is an increase of production. America is starving, not alone for food but for new, durable goods of better quality. These can be had only through price incentive.

The bureaucratic mind answers the problem by subsidies. But subsidies merely emphasize the trouble. Subsidies are merely another form of inflation. The money represented by subsidies must first be borrowed from the public, and thus the public debt is increased, and at the same time the public income is further enlarged to the extent of the interest paid.

Subsidies, like price control and rationing, are alien to the American concepts of a free economy. The subsidy is of European origin. It is part of a controlled economy. No businessman or industry is free of the dictates of the Government officials who administer the subsidy. As a practical matter, subsidies usually fail to reach the producer, and are largely consumed by the middleman. Even in cases where they reach the producer, there is little incentive for the producer to respond with increased production, since Government subsidies may be withdrawn at will, and the producer always labors under the psychological handicap that the bonanza is only temporary.

In an address delivered before the annual meeting of the National Grange, on November 10, 1943, Mr. Albert S. Goss, master of the Grange, had the following to say:

"Subsidies will lead to economic chaos. If we maintain price ceilings with subsidies to meet the rising costs, we will develop an increasingly unbalanced price structure. When war ends, if we are to escape that swift road to printing-press inflation, we will have to think about balancing the budget. Subsidies will be one of the first items cut off. Then either farmers will have to raise prices to get production costs or go out of business. If during these days, when our surplus spending power is one of our greatest problems, we are not willing to pay the cost of producing our food, what would the chances be of raising prices when the boys come home looking for jobs? The answer is none, whatever. The result would be complete collapse."

It is my honest belief that if price control were relaxed through abolishing OPA, in order that our surplus incomes might be matched with consumer goods, the productive power of this country is such that we would bring supply and demand in balance in short order. Thus, shortages would be averted and high prices would be curbed by the operation of the natural laws of economics.

As a matter of fact, it has never been established that a moderate degree of inflation is harmful. In times of war it is necessary to increase the price of practically all commodities. Price incentive has been and always will prove to be the greatest encouragement to production.

Historically, the free-price system has always involved a certain degree of inflation during wartime, which resulted in advantageous production. This, in turn, retarded excess consumption. Prices are made by economic laws rather than political laws. We have seen this truth demonstrated many times. During the 7 years from 1933 to 1939, when billions were spent in an effort to restore parity prices for agricultural products, the average of all farm products brought only 77 percent of parity. The efforts to hold farm prices down during the past 4 years have been no more efficient than our previous effort to push them up.

Eventually, the economic forces of supply and demand must triumph. The artificial efforts of the bureaucrat to soften the blow merely prolong the agony. A free economy emanating from the operations of the law of supply and demand will always render the final judgment.

During the period of reconversion, shifts must be made in farm and industrial production. These can only be satisfactorily accomplished under a system of free prices. The program for reconversion is being discussed by the bureaucrats in terms of substituting one control for another. This leads to interminable conflict. What particular control should be adopted and how should it be enforced? The simple, desirable, constitutional plan would be to relax price controls and rationing, and to permit the free flow of the economic forces that have made this the greatest and strongest country in the world.

To prolong regimentation, as exemplified by OPA, is to play with the same fire that consumed both Germany and Italy.

The men who wrote the Constitution of the United States were fresh from the experience of political tyranny and economic oppression. They were fresh from the experiences of war. They had witnessed an economic collapse in Europe. With true vision they foresaw that some day America again must meet war, tyranny, and economic oppression. With that experience and foresight they wrote into the Constitution a prohibition against the very things which we seek to adopt today. The Constitution has withstood the strain of many emergencies. It has cured many national ills, both political and economic.

For more than 12 years, in both peace and in war, the administration in power has sought to abdicate the principles of the Constitution. We have embraced almost complete regimentation. I want to take this occasion to say to the majority party in Congress that it must take full responsibility for the economic collapse which will necessarily follow a further continuation of the present regimentation.

Even more, it must take the responsibility for the destruction of the morale of a great Nation. It must assume the responsibility of creating and maintaining a bureaucratic tyrant that now boasts of imposing millions of dollars in fines upon thousands of businessmen, without any authority of law—a bureaucratic tyrant that has driven thousands out of business, even in the past year, and is preventing others from entering business, as well as depriving returning soldiers of an opportunity to gain a livelihood by starting their own business enterprise. It is a bureaucratic tyrant which says that it has turned the names of 3,000 individuals over to the Treasury Department for investigation of their income-tax returns, a bureaucratic tyrant that is driving a Nation to illegal dealings in the black market, a bureaucratic tyrant whose word cannot be trusted, and in whom the public has lost confidence.

These are the responsibilities of the administration, and if it fails now to meet the issue courageously by abandoning this un-American experiment, the party it represents will be doomed to oblivion. I have faith that the American people will not desert the constitutional principles on which this country was founded and which have so long protected and encouraged our people and our commerce at home and abroad, in peace and in war.

In closing, Mr. President, permit me to say that I am not optimistic enough to believe that we will abandon this un-American experiment until it is too late to avoid at least some of the punishment that must follow our transgressions. There are two reasons why we will be deterred. First, the propaganda mills of the bureaucrats have had their effect upon the people. The bogeyman of inflation has been sold to the public. The public mind is confused. There is popular acceptance of the propaganda that OPA has held prices down and effected a fair distribution of available supplies. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

Second, the administration will exert its influence to preserve OPA, because of its reluctance to admit the horrible mistake it made when it created this bureaucratic tyrant.

Churchill has said:

"Controls under the pretext of war or its aftermath which are, in fact, designed to favor the accomplishment of totalitarian systems, however innocently designed or whatever guise they take, whatever liveries they wear, whatever slogans they mouth, are fraud which should be mercilessly exposed to the British public."

Americans, and freedom-loving people everywhere, should take heed.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I am somewhat disturbed by the reasons which are given by various Members of the Senate for extension of OPA. The fact that the House in its recent action on the conference report voted to extend the OPA under the present program as contained in the conference report, is now given as a reason why we should extend it. I am told by many, both inside and outside the Senate, that it is good politics on the part of either the Republicans or Democrats, or both, not entirely to abolish OPA. Of course, I do not pretend to know what is good politics and what is not good politics. I am not motivated by what is "good politics," because I am sure that no law which has ever been enacted under the American Government has been so burdensome and so oppressive as the OPA law and its administration by the Office of Price Administration. It is conceded by all that it has not been a price restraining influence.

There is not a Senator, so far as I know, who will now contend that, so far as food products are concerned, in fact, so far as concerns practically all commodities which today are handled in commerce, there is not a black market in them. The black market today is probably the most shameful thing which has ever been prevalent in America. It has resulted in the complete break-down in the morals of the country. There has been no way to obtain necessary food without resort to the black market. That in itself, I think, is sufficient to warrant us now in believing OPA is a complete mistake. A Member of the House the other day in his brief comment made in his effort to abolish OPA, said that he prayed to God that OPA would be abolished; but the Congress will not do it.

I wish to begin my remarks, Mr. President, by reading an editorial published in the Chicago Tribune, as follows:

CONGRESS ABDICATES

The conference committe which was supposed to bring out a bill compromising the already feeble Senate and House versions of the OPA bill brought forth a measure that is worse than either.

That is very true. I voted for all the amendments in the Senate version of this bill, and then I voted against the whole bill because I think the country would be better off and the people would be relieved, and we would come nearer to getting the production which is needed if we had a free hand today.

Quoting further from the editorial:

We hope that this abomination can yet be defeated.

Congress knows what OPA has done to the Nation's economy. The Senators and Representatives know that there isn't any meat to be had in the butcher shops and they know why. They know that the OPA's prices for meat are meaningless because when meat is available it isn't sold in accordance with the OPA schedule, and, of late, meat isn't available at any price. All this and much more to the same effect is as familiar to the Representatives and Senators as it is to every housewife and every businessman in the land.

Nevertheless, Congress is apparently lacking in the courage to do what the vast majority of Congressmen know is the right thing to do: namely, abolish OPA, root and branch. The bill that the conference committee has produced will satisfy the bureaucrats and tyrants of the administrative machine whose jobs will be continued for another year. It will please, also, the black-market gangsters who are getting rich by evading the regulations. To everybody else in the country, the conference committee offers nothing but needless hardship. For all practical purposes, Congress is abdicating.

OPA, as the conferees know, has not prevented prices from rising sharply. What it has done is to prevent the rising prices from resulting in increases in production. The secret payments under the table don't get back to the factories to stimulate output. The private deals by which vacant apartments are rented to the applicant who offers the appropriate bribe don't encourage building. The economic machine is stalled because of OPA's tampering with the mechanism.

Congress could have done the country an enormous service by tossing the bureaucrats out of their offices and restoring the law price system which, as much as anything else, is responsible for the growth of this country's productivity over the years. The representatives of the people, instead of serving them, are serving the bureaucrats. Congress has never appeared in a worse light than it did when the conference committee made its disgraceful report on the OPA bill.

Mr. President, the key to the left-wing movement in America is OPA. This wartime agency's postwar operations have been such as to seriously impair our economy, weaken the morale of our people, destroy respect for government, and to create unnecessary shortages. To further continue this disruptive program in peacetime will, in my opinion, stand as a regrettable mistake in the history of our country.

Two forces are urging upon the Congress that OPA must be continued. The first and most active force is represented by CIO and its subsidiary organization, the PAC, both of which represent the Communist thought and action in America. The second force is composed of sincere men and women of America who have fallen victims to well-organized scare propaganda of the OPA that inflationary prices will destroy the economy of the country and bring untold hardships upon the people if Government abandons price controls and returns our economy to the competitive forces of private enterprise under the free play of the law of supply and demand. The CIO and the PAC are likewise conducting a scare campaign by threatening to liquidate at the coming congressional elections at least a hundred Members of the Congress who dare question the correctness of a controlled economy.

The deep underlying purpose of the CIO leadership, although conducted in the name of protection, is in reality a campaign to destroy our capitalistic system and with it the free enterprise of this country. With deadly deliberation the plan is designed to cause economic collapse, overthrow of constitutional government, and the establishment of a centralized government in complete harmony with the ideals of Soviet Russia under which complete regimentation may be effectuated.

I fully appreciate the seriousness of the charges I make in this connection, but the evidence and the extenuating circumstances are so clear and so convincing that I feel compelled to speak entirely frankly.

It is common knowledge that men such as Sidney Hillman, Harry Bridges, Mike Quill, R. J. Thomas, Joseph Curran, C. B. Baldwin, and other leaders of the CIO and the PAC, are not in tune with our American ideals and traditions. It is not to be denied that key positions in the administrative agencies of our Government are in many cases filled by men and women who are in sympathy with the socialization of our economy, which is the first step to communistic government, and thus continued wartime control of our economy is being urged by these ambitious regimenters.

There are some who will ridicule the possibilities that I suggest, but to treat lightly the communistic influence that has been growing in America for more than 10 years is to play with a devastating influence which thrives and, in fact, has already grown strong on the placid gullibility of our American citizens.

There is a strong suspicion that Mr. Bowles, following a precedent established by the New Deal administration more than 10 years ago of using public funds to further personal political ambitions, is, in fact, conducting a campaign for bigger and better things. It would appear that Henry Wallace, who for so long has been the darling of the CIO, is being displaced by Mr. Bowles, and I shall not be surprised if Mr. Bowles is offered to the Democratic Party by that organization in 1948 for a place on the Democratic national ticket; and, like Wallace in '40 and Truman in '44, he will probably be accepted, unless those members of the once great Democratic Party who still believe in constitutional government take a stand now for democracy.

The movement toward socialism, which is the broad highway to communism, has become so rapid in our Government that many seem to have lost sight of the fundamentals on which our constitutional form of government was created. Recently I heard a member of the Banking and Currency Committee of this Senate ask a witness just "where democracy ceased and socialism began." I would like to answer the question by suggesting that representative government ceases when bureaucratic government takes over. Socialism begins at the moment government control is substituted for free and competitive enterprise. Surely, it is well understood that we today labor under a centralized bureaucracy that has almost usurped representative government, both National and State.

It is not too much to say that we have, at least temporarily, accepted a governmentally controlled economy that is rapidly destroying the last vestige of private enterprise and the free operation of competitive forces. The only competition now left in business is the scramble for bureaucratic favoritism.

The distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House, Mr. HATTON W. SUMNERS, recently had this to say:

> By ignoring principles and the lessons of history, and accepting the theories of men and political expedience for our guidance, we have made vassals of our States and dependents of our people. By concentration of governmental power and drafts upon the Federal Treasury, we have now a financially "busted," great piled-up mass of governmental confusion beyond human comprehension; impossible of democratic control, extravagant, wasteful, inefficient, and by its nature, the instrumentality of favoritism, tyranny, oppression and corruption, and the destroyer of the self-reliance and self-respect and governmental capacity of the people, qualities without which no people can remain free.

The sincere rank-and-file individual who urges the continuation of OPA has been made to believe, by a systematic, planned, scare, propaganda program, that if controls are eliminated he will be destroyed by inflation. This fallacious scare propaganda has been carried on in the main by OPA itself by the use of funds appropriated for the use of that agency by the Congress. Its activities in this regard are in open and flagrant violation of the plain language of the law. Section 201, title 18, of the Federal Code provides:

> No part of the money appropriated by any act shall, in the absence of express authorization by Congress, be used directly or indirectly to pay for any personal service, advertisement, telegram, telephone, letter, printed or written matter, or other device, intended or designed to influence in any manner a Member of Congress, to favor or oppose, by vote or otherwise, any legislation or appropriation by Congress.

Prior to the time OPA started its extensive campaign for self-perpetuation, the Bureau of the Budget reported that this agency would spend $2,572,000 during the current year for propaganda and so-called educational services. The so-called news letters of OPA and its regional offices being sent to Members of the Congress, cartooning the devastating effects of inflation, the circulars and pamphlets that are being mailed out of these offices by use of the frank to the public, making appeals to support a further extension of price controls, the use of thousands of man-hours of time by OPA employees and officials in either direct or indirect lobbying, furnish sufficient evidence to indict and convict the officials of both OPA and the Office of Economic Stabilization. OPA seems to be comfortable in the reliance that the Department of Justice, under an administration that is itself a captive of the CIO influences to which I have referred, will fail to prosecute this open violation of the law. Whether this reliance is well founded is yet to be determined.

The facts are, Mr. President, that OPA has actually caused shortages, inflation, deterioration of quality, and continued high prices.

In the hearings just completed by both the House and Senate on the proposed extension of this control of our economy, representatives of practically every segment of industry and business, from the smallest retailer to the producers of our basic raw materials, including every branch of our food-producing industries, appeared to condemn the policies and operation of OPA. The testimony of these witnesses is a shocking and disgraceful story of the assassination of our business and industrial enterprise.

The retail merchants, the wholesalers, commission merchants, the manufacturers, the canners, the farmers, the cattlemen, the meat packers, the oil industry, the vegetable growers, and many others, have all come forward to condemn the pernicious practice of this organization, and in a great many cases to frankly state that complete and final termination of this governmental control of our economy must be effectuated at once to save our private enterprise and to insure the necessities of life at prices we can afford to pay. Not a single important industrial organization appeared to defend the administration of this agency. Not only was the administration of this agency almost unanimously attacked by business and industry, but the honesty, integrity, and good faith of its personnel were questioned by dozens of witnesses. Hundreds of specific examples were cited. The evidence is so clear that the truth of their charges cannot be doubted. The bad faith of OPA and OES is apparent on every hand.

It may be asked what proof I have of this serious charge. Let us examine the activity of Mr. Porter and Mr. Bowles following the enactment of the House amendments requiring the President, when he determines domestic demand for any commodity or class of commodities has been satisfied, to certify such fact to the Price Administrator, and requiring the Administrator within 10 days thereafter to remove price control with respect to such commodity or commodities. Immediately Mr. Porter and Mr. Bowles hit the press and the radio with excited releases and speeches declaring the amended House bill would render OPA helpless, would destroy price control, and would loose uncontrolled inflation upon the people. The amendment requiring OPA to take into consideration reasonable profits measured by certain base years was denounced as a crime against price controls, and the housewives of the country were told that such provision would require the removal of price controls from practically all items of food.

I say no person can, in good faith, deny the efficacy of removing price controls when supply satisfies demand, nor can the requirement that profits be taken as a factor in the fixing of prices be denied, whether by government or private industry, unless that denial is motivated by a deliberate and malicious attempt to destroy the profit system.

Demagoguery, common dishonesty, and open and frank violation of the law have been the accepted policy of the price regulators.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahome yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. MOORE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I simply wish to emphasize what the Senator from Oklahoma has said just now in regard to the profit system, and I desire to add a word to his statement. In referring to the profit system, so-called, I like to call it, and I think the Senator from Oklahome will agree with me, the profit and loss system, because in the long run under our American system there are more people who lose than there are those who are successful. I wish to emphasize that frequently under the so-called profit system there are large losses.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the Senator from New Jersey. I can state here and now that, in my opinion, the question to be considered today is whether we are going to have a free competitive economy such as this country has always had, or whether we are going to have a controlled economy. If we wish to have a controlled economy, we are entitled to have it. But so far as history relates, there has never been a successfully controlled economy in any country which has tried it. I admit that there are evils in competitive free markets; but, on the whole, no country has ever grown great except by adhering to the practice of a free enonomy in a capitalistic system.

Mr. President, I have said that demagoguery, common dishonesty, and open and frank violation of the law have been the accepted policy of the price regulators. As to the proof on this score, let us examine the evidence. As far back as October 1944, Chester Bowles, in a memorandum to all members of OPA advisory committees, said:

> We have always looked upon price control as a stop-gap, a stabilizing wartime control to be dropped as soon as production brings supply and demand reasonably in balance. To maintain controls needlessly, even for a few extra months, would be a mistake. * * * When supply and demand come back into balance, price controls will not be needed. * * * Working with industry advisory committees we will watch each field closely. We will rely heavily on their recommendations as to when controls can be safely removed.

In June 1945, Chester Bowles wrote to the majority leader, as follows:

> Price controls were developed solely to meet wartime conditions. We are pledged to remove these controls just as soon as the production of civilian goods and services eliminates the inflationary dangers and permits our return to a free market.

Again, in December 1945, Chester Bowles told the Senate Small Business Committee:

> Save in a period of emergency, price ceilings have no place in a free economy. We shall remove them, product by product, as soon as it can be done without inflation.

Again, on January 1, 1946, as reported in the publication Vital Speeches, Chester Bowles said:

> Price controls should and must be removed as rapidly as supply conditions permit. In industry after industry, during the next 12 months, we will find supply and demand coming into balance. As that occurs, I assure you that your Government will move promptly to eliminate the last vestige of price restrictions in these industries.

On February 27, 1946, before the House Committee on Banking and Currency, John Snyder promised:

> Price controls should be dropped on each product as soon as supply is in reasonable balance with demand. When supply comes into balance with demand or approaches balance with demand, I think competition will take care of the pricing and, certainly, I would think we should remove the controls at that period.

Secretary Anderson, before the House Committee on Agriculture on April 15, 1946, when asked if he thought it was a sound policy to remove all ceilings on any given commodity when supply balanced demand, answered:

> I think it is sound policy; yes.

Mr. Porter has told both House and Senate committees that no attempt will be made to maintain controls on commodities when supply equals demand. But what has been the record?

Since VJ-day in August of last year there has actually been a tremendous surplus of oil and refined products. Nevertheless, the oil industry labors under the same heavy hand of price control that it suffered throughout the war. Gasoline storage is at an all-time high. Early last month gasoline storage reached a peak of 105,000,000 barrels. Domestic stocks of both heavy and light fuel oils of all types and grades were at a high level. Crude-oil production in the field is being curtailed by the State regulatory bodies to prevent both physical and economic waste. Refineries have been forced to cut back crude runs to stills because of the storage situation. Ordinarily, the oil industry has in continuous operation from 1,800 to 2,000 drilling rigs. Today the industry is operating something like 1,400 rigs. The demagoguery and the dishonesty with which OPA officials have dealt with the oil industry prove beyond reasonable doubt that they cannot be trusted to carry out their promises. The Emergency Price Control Act plainly provides that—

> Before issuing any regulation or order * * * the Administrator shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with representative members of the industry which will be affected by such regulation or order, and shall give consideration to their recommendations.

Mr. Bowles, as Price Administrator, and his successor, Mr. Porter, have flatly failed and refused to comply with the spirit and intent of this provision of the law. Representatives from every branch of the oil industry have continuously recommended and urged, first, an increase in the price of crude oil, and, later, termination of price control on crude and refined products because of the supply and demand situation. Mr. Bowles and his successor, Mr. Porter, have refused to consider or give any apparent weight to the unanimous demand of the oil industry. I might also add that the same recommendations have come from OPA's Oil Industry Advisory Committee without a dissenting vote, but likewise fell on deaf ears.

On his resignation from the Oil and Gas Section of OPA a few days ago, Mr. Sumner Pike made the startling and almost unbelievable statement that OPA was anxious to terminate price control over the oil industry, and would have done so except for the fear that the State regulatory bodies might take such action as would create an artificial price increase for the oil producers. Thus, the OPA admitted that there was no existing basis to maintain price control over the oil industry and at the same time disclosed its arrogant intent unlawfully to supplant the authority of State oil and gas regulatory bodies. Furthermore, it proved its promises to be nothing less than hollow demagoguery.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. In all fairness to the OPA, it should be said that they have removed controls on some articles, as testified in the committee hearings. As shown on page 1562 of the committee hearings, Mr. Vinson agreed that the following articles had been decontrolled: Pincushions, shoehorns, wax papers, dinner bells and chimes, book ends and ashtrays when made from worn baby shoes, lightning rods and weather vanes, aluminum horseshoes, sleigh bells, dog beds, cushions, and mattresses, and magician's tricks.

Mr. MOORE. I think the Senator's statement is very illuminating.

Mr. BUCK. Those articles were decontrolled in Hawaii.

Mr. MOORE. The Senator's statement is indeed of some significance. I am glad to have the evidence that there is a possibility of some articles being decontrolled. Ultimately the desired results may be achieved. The greatest result which could be achieved would be an act of Congress removing controls altogether.

Mr. President, the horrible and scandalous black-market situation existing in the meat industry is another example with which every Member of the Congress and the public generally are familiar. The tremendous backlog of beef cattle, hogs, and lambs is capable of supplying the American public with as much meat per capita as at any time in history. Total slaughterings are at an all-time high. Yet OPA disregards its promises to remove controls in this industry, where supply more than exceeds demand, and where black-market diversions continue to cause severe shortages in the legitimate packing industry and in the retail stores that attempt to conduct a legitimate business within the rigid controls of OPA.

The September 1945 report of the Department of Agriculture and the May 2, 1946, press release of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics show that the total meat production in the United States in 1945 was 17 percent in excess of 1941, and over 20 percent in excess of the 1940 production, and more than 20 percent in excess of the production average for the years 1935 to 1944, inclusive.

On April 5, 1946, Secretary Anderson told the House Committee on Agriculture:

> There need not be a scarcity. There is sufficient cattle population to produce all the meat we need.

It is generally admitted that Secretary Anderson is an authority on that subject and his background of experience gives him the know-how to discuss his discretion intelligently. It is fortunate, I think, that we have a man of that character in that position, and I am glad to recognize that fact.

The March 1946 report of the Department of Agriculture, page 11, says:

> The number of cattle and calves on hand January 1, 1946, was the third largest on record and the potential supply of cattle for slaughter in 1946 is large. While some decline in numbers of steers and in beef heifers occurred in 1945, most of the 2 million head decline in total cattle numbers was in the number of milk stock. The number of beef cows and heifers on hand January 1, 1946, was an all-time high, indicating that production of cattle for slaughter in the next 2 or 3 years will continue large.

Federally inspected slaughter of sheep and lambs in February totaled 2.2 million head, 52 percent greater than in the previous month and 35 percent greater than a year earlier, to set an all-time high for the month.

On May 1, Secretary Anderson told the Senate Banking and Currency Committee that he estimated something like 40 million range cattle at the present time as against 36 million in 1939 and 1940.

Interim Report No. 1295, May 2, 1946, from the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, page 7 says:

Government estimates show a meat supply this year of 150 pounds per capita, the largest amount available to consumers since 1911 and about 20 percent more than the 1935–39 average. Secondly, the evidence shows that there is no shortage of basic livestock numbers for the production of meat. In fact, there is an excessive population of cattle which should be finished for market in order to make more secure the future of the cattle industry.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senate is not in order. There is audible conversation from all parts of the Chamber. I ask for order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let there be order in the Chamber.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Maine. I think it would be good manners, at least, if those who do not want to hear what I have to say would leave the Chamber, and, if they want to do that, it is perfectly agreeable to me. I am not expecting to influence any votes. I merely want to say what I have to say for the RECORD, stating what my position is on what I consider to be the most pernicious and damaging legislation the Congress could further impose upon the people at this time.

Proceeding with my statement, the March 1946 report of the Department of Agriculture, page 10, states:

Pork production in 1946 is likely to exceed 10,000,000,000 pounds dressed meat basis. Hog slaughter probably will continue larger than a year earlier throughout the remainder of the year 1946.

I might add here that these estimates were made prior to the time the Agriculture Department went into the black market business by paying 30 cents a bushel above the ceiling for corn, which undoubtedly will have its effect on the production of both pork and beef in 1947. That is just what the Department did, and the producers had to go into the black market to buy corn because they could not buy it in any other way. Such was frankly admitted by the Secretary before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee a few days ago. Corn is essentially an animal food. To artificially price corn out of the market for poultry and hog raisers and cattle feeders is to lay the basis for poultry, pork, and beef shortages in 1947. On the other hand, wheat is the basic food for human consumption the world over, and to artificially hold the price below its intrinsic value for human consumption so that it becomes profitable to be fed on the farm, rather than marketed, creates a livestock surplus and a bread shortage. That is what a controlled and planned economy does for our business and our country. The controlled price on wheat at subnormal levels and an uncontrolled black market for livestock and meat have been the factors that permitted this condition to develop.

Despite the plentiful supply of meat, the favorable estimates of the Department of Agriculture, the findings and recommendations of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, and the promises of OPA, there is no indication that controls will be voluntarily terminated over the meat and livestock industries. In fact, the termination of controls is resisted from every quarter and by every bureau and by many of those who desire to see bureaucratic government continued in this country to supplant representative government, as we have always known it in the United States.

It is estimated by some experts that probably between forty and forty-five million bushels of wheat were consumed on the farms as livestock feed during January, February, and March of this year, or at the rate of one hundred and sixty to one hundred and eighty million bushels annually. At this rate, we will consume from twenty-five to fifty million bushels in excess of that normally used for livestock feed on the farms during the very period that we are undertaking the responsibility to relieve the starvation that is stalking the European countries. The answer seems simple enough. Eliminate controls and the price of wheat will find its economic level in relationship to its value for food on the basis of supply and demand.

The corn and wheat mess in relation to their relative values for human consumption and livestock feed is only another example of what happens to the whole economy when any segment of it is thrown out of balance by artificial means. OPA ceilings on wheat have helped to produce more meat than we need, but in so doing have destroyed our bread supply. Our last wheat crop was the largest in history. The operation of the law of supply and demand would have ordinarily adjusted these relationships. Instead, the American public, at the expense of the black market, will consume 25 pounds more meat per capita than ever before eaten in this country, and the most precious of all foods will be scarce in both America and in Europe.

During the first three quarters of this crop year—July 1945 to March 1946 inclusive—we consumed approximately 774,000,000 bushels of wheat for all purposes, including seed wheat, leaving less than 340,000,000 bushels for the last quarter. If we are to ship 125,000,000 bushels to Europe in the present quarter, as hoped for by the Secretary of Agriculture, it will mean that our carry-over will drop dangerously low, far less than 100,000,000 bushels. A short crop this year could very well bring about a national catastrophe. Already, excessive rains in April are causing the Department of Agriculture, in its monthly crop report for May 1, to drop this estimate on the winter wheat prospect by 88,000,000 bushels.

The dangers of an artificially controlled economy cannot be emphasized too strongly. It has led to chaos and destruction in every nation of the world where it has been tried. America will be no exception.

The fact that we have the third largest cattle crop in history and a black-market situation in meat that is comparable only to the speakeasies and racketeers of the prohibition era is a warning signal that only the stupid will disregard. To relieve the meat industry of controls will not cure the situation. The racketeers will merely transfer to other fields of operation.

In his appearance before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, on April 16, Chester Bowles said:

Black markets are vastly overrated.

These "little minds" either fail to comprehend the situation, or there is a deliberate attempt to bring about economic chaos.

Secretary Anderson told the Senate Banking and Currency Committee a few days ago, flat-footedly, straightforwardly, and unmistakably, that the black-market situation in the meat industry was so admittedly bad that price controls should be entirely removed if the slaughter quotas that had been invoked failed to relieve the conditions. He begged for 90 days' time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the distinguished Senator know what the result has been under the slaughter quota which has been in effect during the 6 weeks' period?

Mr. MOORE. I think my friend from Nebraska is better qualified to answer that question than am I.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to suggest that statistics have been given to me which show that, under the slaughter quotas put into effect during the entire month of May and for 2 weeks of June, the period which the Secretary asked to have them imposed, and the 2 weeks more since that time, during the last week in the 10 principal cities, constituting the central markets, less than 16 percent of the total cattle received by those markets were slaughtered by legitimate slaughterers. The balance of them were sent on the hoof to order buyers, the racketeers, and the black markets throughout the country.

That is evidence of the complete failure of the quotas. These markets particularly, as the distinguished Senator knows, formerly slaughtered 75 percent of the cattle which came into the market. Now they are down to 16 percent, which is a new low, and with the quotas in vogue for the last 6 weeks, which Secretary Anderson said was the only thing he knew of that might improve the situation, they have finally brought about a decrease in slaughtering by the legitimate firms, as I have said, to a new low, which is the result of the quotas in force for the 6-week period he asked for. Since the plan has been unsuccessful, since a new low in slaughtering has been reached, I think the Senator will agree with me that the only other alternative is to do the "something else" the Secretary said they would have to do if the plan failed; that is, decontrol.

Mr. MOORE. And if the Secretary kept the promise he made when he begged for additional time, he would now recommend the decontrol of livestock.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, previously Mr. Truman, according to the press reports, had expressed views in sympathy with this statement. I think Senators will remember the statement he made. But what happened when CIO-controlled Bowles bore down on the President? The President meekly backed up and denied that either he or Secretary Anderson had meant to say price controls would be terminated in the meat industry. He only meant, he said, that the slaughter controls would be removed if they failed to relieve the situation. I thought that was a pretty embarrassing situation the President got himself into.

Such equivocation is destroying the confidence of the people in their Government, and magnifies the ruthless political power of a CIO-controlled bureaucracy and the complete inadequacy and helplessness of our elected officials.

In connection with the black market in meat, which, of course, could not exist without price control—and let me here make it plain that the black market in the meat industry is an example of what will happen in all industry unless the Congress terminates this entire economic atrocity—I call attention to the report of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, No. 1295, dated May 2, 1946.

Mr. President, I know this report has been published, and it was produced after abundance of testimony had been taken; but, as a matter of emphasis, as a matter of presenting something of prime importance, and as a matter of citing the best authority that can be had, I shall read the report into the RECORD at this time. I quote from the report of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

> The committee is convinced that an extensive and scandalous black market in meat and livestock exists today, and that the Government wartime controls that have been imposed upon the meat and slaughtering industries over a 4-year period have been in a large measure responsible for the black market.
> Surveys made by independent marketing agencies, whom the committee believes to be competent and reliable, showed that in late February 1946, 5 out of 6 retail stores, in 11 representative cities from coast to coast—

Think of that representation—> were charging in excess of ceiling prices for meat—

Yet we called this a price-control law—> and that two-thirds of the meat cuts sold by these stores were sold at over-ceiling prices. The average overcharge for all meats, as shown by these reports, was 20 percent, and in the case of beef it was 26 percent.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point for a moment?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I think that if we could make it understood to the people who are buying meat in the black market, and buying what meat they can get in their regular market, that they are taking what is handed to them instead of getting what they should have, it would open their eyes. To me it is very important in this picture to make it plain that in a great many cases, if not most, the people are not getting what they pay for, even when they buy in the black market. They are taking exactly what is handed to them, and they are taking it because the market has been controlled to such a point that the people become impatient and will accept any kind of poor meat cuts or edibles they can get for their money because they are given no competitive choice.

Mr. MOORE. Even in violation of law.

Mr. HAWKES. Even in violation of law; yes.

Mr. MOORE. Then, what does the Senator think about the idea of continuing this hopeless situation, on the theory that what we have is better than nothing?

Mr. HAWKES. I might reply to the Senator from Oklahoma by saying that I voted to decontrol meat and all dairy products, poultry, and so forth.

Mr. MOORE. I did, too, but the matter is before us to vote on again.

Mr. HAWKES. I am going to listen to what the Senator is saying, then I am going to make up my mind.

Mr. MOORE. I shall use all the power of persuasion of which I am capable to get the Senator not to vote for the conference report.

Mr. HAWKES. I am going to listen to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. MOORE. Then I shall watch the Senator's vote. I like the way many men talk, but sometimes I cannot reconcile what they say with their votes.

Mr. HAWKES. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma——

Mr. MOORE. Oh, I have no personal reference. I am speaking generally, not referring to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HAWKES. I do not want anyone to misunderstand, because I think the Senator from Oklahoma and I have voted very much the same on fundamentals all the way through the last 3½ years.

Mr. MOORE. I think we will do well to continue that course.

Mr. HAWKES. I think that is bound up with the proposition that we may each have to give a little in order to do it.

Mr. MOORE. I quote further from the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

> A repeat survey made in the latter part of March 1946 in the city of Washington, showed that in a 4-week period the overcharge on meat in Washington had more than doubled.

I do not know what the price was; I do not think anyone knows. I think people can buy this meat by paying what is asked for it, and it cannot be bought in any other way. If people do not buy it, there will be some competition. The only competition I know of in America in the purchase of food products is in the black market. Probably if the black market is continued long enough competition will bring about competitive free markets again, and that is a thing we might try.

I read further from the report:

> These surveys were conservative in that reports could not be obtained covering sales to hotels, restaurants, clubs, and other of the more flagrant kinds of black market meat operations.

I continue quoting from the report of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

> For the past several months cattle prices quoted by the United States Department of Agriculture at many of the principal markets have been in excess of the prices that slaughterers could pay for cattle and still comply with Government price regulations. With cattle being sold at these prices, it is obvious to the committee that most beef must be moving in black market channels.

It simply could not be otherwise.

> For example, the average of Government-quoted prices on choice steers at Chicago has been continually above the OPA maximum permissible price for this grade of cattle since early in 1945. Other grades of cattle at Chicago have at most times been equal to or above the permissible prices which the legitimate slaughterers can pay, and stay in compliance. Similar situations were shown to prevail at other important markets as well as at livestock auctions.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I think it should be pointed out, when the Senator uses the word "compliance," what it means. Apparently the average person does not realize what it meant when it is said they can pay such prices and still be in compliance. If the Senator does not mind, I should like to make a statement about that.

The reason why the legitimate slaughterers, who would kill meat and sell it under this so-called legal price the distinguished Senator is discussing, are precluded from buying the meat is that they have to depend upon the subsidy. The subsidy is what is allowed the processor by the Government. The subsidy is withheld if they go beyond the Vinson price range for the different grades of cattle.

The question may be asked, "Why does not that suffice?" It does not suffice, Mr. President, because the legitimate operator is the big man. His records are available. OPA officials can go to the big man and say, "Give us your records. We find from your records that you are not in compliance. Therefore we are going to withhold your subsidies." I know of one firm that bought a carload of cattle but because the buyer could not tell what the live cattle would dress out—and the packers are judged on the dressed beef as to whether they are in compliance or not—that company went over line 1 percent, and as a result subsidies were withheld from it in the amount of $582,000. So the companies whose records can be investigated, the companies with respect to which there is a chance to secure enforcement, stay within the price range. They are obliged to stay within the compliance range in order to get the subsidy payments to make up the losses which would otherwise be incurred in processing the meat.

Mr. President, what happens is this. The black marketeers buy animals on the hoof, they even buy animals on the farms, indeed, they buy them wherever they can get them. The black marketeers do not depend on the subsidy. They depend on selling their meats at high prices, without even selling the offal. They depend on selling the meat for whatever the traffic will bear. Eighty percent of the meat sold is sold in the black market, because the black marketeer buys cattle at prices above the price range. The legitimate slaughterer cannot do so because he must stay in compliance.

I am sorry to have taken so much of the Senator's time, but I thought this point should be explained so the housewives and others may know why they cannot get meat.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have in my hands a summary of price surveys recently made. The survey shows the large number of stores in representative American cities which had been visited by housewives or other representatives of those who prepared the survey, most of whom were typical housewives. They visited, for instance, a total of 1,803 stores. The stores were located in New York City; Providence, R. I.; Newark, N. J.; Washington, D. C.; Chicago, Ill.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Memphis, Tenn.; Houston, Tex.; Denver, Colo.; Los Angeles, Calif. The survey showed generally speaking that in 83.2 percent of the stores visited various cuts of meat were being sold above the price ceiling. If I may intrude on the Senator's time for a moment I should like to give a few figures.

Mr. MOORE. I am glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let us look at the record. First let us take Washington, D. C. Two hundred and forty-two stores were visited in Washington, D. C. Those who visited them purchased 516 cuts of beef, and they found in the National Capital violations of the ceiling prices in 81.4 percent of the sales. Yet it is said that we have enforcement of OPA regulations. These sales of meat in violation of ceiling prices were made within view of the Capitol dome.

Let us consider New York City. Four hundred and one stores were visited. Seven hundred and thirty-nine pieces of beef were purchased. Seventy-eight and eight-tenths percent of the sales were made over the ceiling prices.

I now want to consider some of the cities in which the greatest number of violations of price ceilings occurred. Let us take Houston, Tex. One hundred stores were visited in Houston. Those who visited them purchased 192 cuts of meat. and they found that 94 percent of the sales were in violation of the ceiling prices.

Mr. MOORE. Texas is a little careless, anyway.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish to point out that in Providence, R. I., which is the only New England city in which this survey was made, 35 stores were visited, 69 cuts of meat were purchased, and 77.1 percent of the sales were made in violation of the law. That figure was a little low. But probably the reason is that there is so little meat coming into New England.

If the Senator will yield further, let me say that I was told very recently of a woman who stood in line in a meat market for almost 2 hours, waiting to buy some meat. She was nearly 80 years old. Before it came to her turn to buy, before she arrived at that position in the procession which was waiting for a little meat to be distributed, she had fainted dead away. She had not had any meat for 9 weeks, and so far as I know she has not gotten any meat yet, because after she fainted they had to carry her out of the store and take her to her home.

Mr. President, the figures I have given show us the conditions we now face. All over the country the stores are absolutely barren of meat. In my section, New England, I think the situation is worse than in any other section of the country, if that be possible.

Mr. MOORE. I want to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire, who is a New Englander, that the people there are a little more cautious in their buying, and more careful not to be gypped than are the people in Washington and in other parts of the country.

Mr. BRIDGES. I may say that if anyone is able to buy meat in New England he is bound to be gypped. He either does not get meat, or, if he does, he is gypped, because there is no meat to be gotten unless it is in the "gyp" market.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire for his contribution.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I want to give to the Senate what I consider to be the strongest evidence that has come to me in regard to violations of OPA price controls. If Senators have talked recently with American workingmen about their demands for increases in wages, and have discussed with them the matter of the increased cost of living, as set forth by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, they will have found, as I have found from talking with these workmen who called at my office in Washington and with workingmen and businessmen elsewhere, that the statement generally has been "What is the use of paying any attention to the figures set forth by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, because they are based on the price ceilings which have been established, and we cannot buy goods at those prices. We have to go into the black market, and there is no use in talking about the percentage of increase in living cost shown by the Bureau, because it is not in our lives."

Can Senators point to any stronger evidence of how the OPA and its administration have permeated the whole Nation, when honest workmen admit that they have to and are buying in the black market?

Mr. MOORE. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that of course the working people, and every other class of people, those in every activity, would like to be relieved of the extortionate prices which appear to prevail today in the commodities which constitute the living of the people. If they are led to believe, through the false propaganda and the lies and the pamphlets and other material that go out from the commentators and the radio stations, and the press, and the bureaucrats. to the effect that continuation of OPA will result in a lessening in the cost of living, of course they would be for it, and I do not blame them for taking that position. If they think price control will minimize the cost of living, we would not expect them to take a contrary position. But the people of the Middle West to whom I have talked are almost unanimously of the belief that price control has prevented production, that it will continue to prevent production, and that the final answer to this whole question is to let producers have their head, let them have an opportunity to produce on a competitive basis and sell for what profit they can get, and then when the prices become too high, the people will quit buying. The Senator has heard that statement. The other day I heard a pretty substantial commentator speak in support of the extension of price control. He stated that Harry Truman was a victim of high prices, and that he lost his store by reason of prices being so high, and his inventory so large. When prices decreased and deflation set in he lost his store. But he became President of the United States. After all, sometimes bad things turn out to be good things. Everyone knows that in a competitive economy there are some hardships.

I wish to get back to the proposition I am submitting here today. I believe that every man knows that we are confronted with the question, Shall we restore this country to free competitive markets, in which the law of supply and demand has free play, or shall we commit the country to a planned economy? I have cpposed this system from the beginning. I think it was bad during the war. I do not think it has been helpful. During a war the patriotic motives of the people can properly be appealed to, and the people will respond to a greater extent than they will when there is no emergency. I believe that the appeal for voluntary cooperation in all efforts during the war was much more effective than the compulsion and restrictions placed upon the people. Now that the war is over, I do not think there is any further need for these controls. That is my candid opinion. That is the only reason I am speaking today. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am not pussyfooting in the least. So far as the political angle is concerned, I do not claim to be a political expert.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. MOORE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I appreciate very much the Senator's yielding.

Does not the Senator feel that the discontinuance of any such system, whether it be the OPA, or any other system, no matter how well administered it may be, leaves us with a problem for a certain length of time? Does not the Senator feel, as I do, that the people of the United States must bear a certain burden while we are getting from where we have been back to where we must go?

Mr. MOORE. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. HAWKES. I do not wish to be misunderstood. Merely because I am opposed to the continuation of these regulations, I do not believe that we can immediately move back into perfect balance when they are discontinued, and that everyone will be happy. If we continue this system much longer, I think it will be much more difficult to discontinue it. I believe that no matter what we do, we must be willing to bear a certain burden to get back to the point where a free people can operate in free competition.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the Senator from New Jersey. I agree with him that it is more than likely, when price control is removed, that the prices of some items may advance substantially.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. It will inevitably follow that when the subsidies are removed the people will have to pay higher prices. The Government is now paying $1,000,000,000 in subsidies, which the people will have to pay some day, when the subsidies are removed.

Mr. MOORE. We are merely fooling ourselves and deceiving the people. I think it is a horrible thing for Congress not to say frankly to the people, "If we give you price control, do not be fooled by it. This system will not control prices. The inflationary tendency will continue." When prices are high, whether it be in a black market or in a competitive market, the tendency is toward inflation.

I am not much impressed by the Government economists who are so often quoted by the commentators. After having had some experience with them, I do not see how they could impress anyone. Their purpose is to stimulate propaganda to the effect that the country is going to the dogs unless we have price control. The country is going to the dogs unless the people are given an opportunity to produce the things which are so much needed in the market today.

Continuing with the report of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

> Numerous instances were reported where even the overriding ceiling price on cattle has been violated at local markets and auctions. Hog price ceilings are likewise being flagrantly violated in one way or another and particularly in the South. Cattle feeders frankly admitted to the committee that they were in a position where they had to depend on black market prices to stay in operation, and pointed out that the uncertainty of this situaiton resulted in confusion, fear, and restricted production of livestock and meat.

No one challenges the soundness of the conclusions reached in this committee report. If it cannot be challenged, we are bound to admit that the system has not worked. Yet it is proposed to continue it, when we know that it cannot work, and that we must suffer all the evils which come from it. I cannot understand it. I am puzzled and confused. I do not know what to say. I do not believe that this speech will change any votes. I am not speaking merely to hear the sound of my own voice. I have never been so anxious about anything in my life as I am about seeing the people freed of the oppressions and burdens which the Price Control Act imposes upon them.

Quoting further from the report:

> Prevailing livestock prices prove, without doubt, the existence of a widespread black market in livestock and meat.
> Unprecedented shipments of slaughter cattle from the principal livestock markets can be explained only by black market buying and slaughtering.

This is a considered report. It was made after the testimony was taken. It was made by men of the finest understanding and the greatest influence in the Senate.

> While the current situation is the most serious yet experienced, the committee was impressed by the fact that this diversion of cattle from normal slaughter channels commenced immediately with the institution of price control and has continued to grow to the present.

It commenced immediately with the existence of price control. Of course it did. I am reading about livestock only to emphasize what the system does to all commodities. Let us take the lumber industry. Everyone is more or less familiar with it. We cannot have production of lumber and other building materials until the people have an opportunity to go to work and produce those commodities and sell them at prices which will enable them to stay in business. While I do not come from a State which produces a great deal of lumber, I have had considerable correspondence with lumbermen. A question not infrequently asked is: "Do you want me to liquidate or violate? If I am to stay in business I must violate the law."

I do not know the answer to that question. I am not advising anyone to violate the law. Bankruptcy is a deplorable thing to be approaching, and the loss of one's business is something to be worried about. If I were in business today and approaching bankruptcy, and if I could stave it off only by violating the law, I do not know what I would do. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I am in full accord with what Benjamin Franklin said, "It is hard for an empty sack to stand upright." I do not know whether I would stand upright if I were approaching the loss of my business.

I do not think anyone can gainsay the fact that the complete disrespect for law which has grown up as a result of these controls has bankrupted the country morally. The country is not only bankrupt financially, but it is bankrupt morally, and it is almost bankrupt from the standpoint of statesmanship. That is what the people think. They have lost respect for their Government; and when they lose respect for their Government, it is difficult to regain the confidence of the people. This country is based upon confidence. The banking system and the economic system are based upon confidence. I do not know what this country is coming to, and I do not think anyone can tell. But I believe that today the greatest uplift we could give the people would be to relieve them of this pernicious thing which has been imposed on them to their great detriment.

I read further from the report of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

> Further evidence of the extensive black market is the startling increase in the number of slaughterers during the wartime period. Prior to OPA there were approximately 1,500 commercial slaughtering establishments whose annual sales volume was in excess of $5,000.

That is an important thing to take into consideration. It has been repeated time and again. We had about 1,500 slaughterhouses. The number has now grown to 26,000. There was no legitimate demand for such an increase in the number of slaughterhouses. The law violators were given an opportunity to become rich. There are many instances—and all Senators know about them—of people having become rich by violating the law and practicing extortion in connection with the sale of the things needed to sustain life. When Senators vote to adopt the conference report, when they vote to extend the OPA, they vote to extend this sort of racket in the United States. There is no getting away from that conclusion, I care not what the witnesses may say. That is the situation and that is the morality which is involved in this question. The fundamental question is whether we are to destroy this Government. I have said, and I wish to repeat it time and again, that the issue in this campaign is whether we are to return to a competitive free market, or whether we are to endorse a planned economy. By the vote on the pending conference report the Senate will take a long step in one of those directions. Today millions of dollars are being made by black marketers, and no income taxes are paid on those profits. Yesterday's newspapers carried a story telling of a gesture which is being made by the OPA and the Department of Justice, which say they seek to bring into court those who have been violating the OPA law. That is merely a gesture they are making at this time, when they are begging and pleading for the continuation of the OPA so that it may continue to harass and eventually destroy the people of this country. The Department of Justice and the OPA are trying to prevent the American people from putting the fear of God in the OPA and preventing the OPA from continuing its present activities. But, Mr. President, 2 or 3 months from now when the people go to the polls we shall find what the politics of this matter is. After all, the people are the judges. In the final analysis, they are the ones who have to make the decisions. The people are not quite so dumb as the OPA considers them to be. I thank God, Mr. President, that in the final outcome we can rely upon the judgment of the American people with respect to their Government, because it is their Government that is being chiseled away.

Mr. President, I continue to read from the report of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

These slaughterers were capable of slaughtering all the livestock that came to market and of distributing the resulting meat throughout the country in an efficient manner. During the 1944–45 livestock slaughter-control program, over 26,000 slaughtering permits were issued to commercial establishments by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Before the Senator takes up another point, I wish to refer to the statement he made a few moments ago about the number of slaughterers who have been licensed by the Department of Agriculture. I think the RECORD should also show—and the facts can be obtained from the testimony—that the so-called markets which buy the cattle on the hoof and are killing the cattle which finally come into the black market are known by the Government, they are licensed by the Government, and in many cases the Government even pays them the subsidies. Yet the enforcement against them has not taken the same line of activity at all that has been taken by the enforcement against the markets in the cities which formerly killed 75 percent of the cattle.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I continue to read from the report:

However, only 12,160 commercial slaughterers filed claims for subsidy payments for February 1946. The balance evidently were able to survive without applying for subsidy, even though this subsidy averaged $22.50 per head on cattle and $4.25 per head on hogs. These facts show, first, that Government controls have resulted in an unwarranted increase in the number of slaughterers and, second, that black-market profits are so large that many are able to operate and expand without benefit of the large Government subsidies.

The black market is seriously affecting the well-being and economy of the whole Nation. One of the more obvious results is the apparent shortage of meat brought about by the dislocations in normal distribution. Most of the large centers of population depend upon national slaughterers for a large portion of their meat supply in normal times. Now such slaughterers are unable to purchase livestock in competition with the black-market operator. Therefore, the amount of meat available at ceiling prices for these areas has diminished to the extent that it is actually scarce. The evidence showed that the beef production of many legitimate slaughterers, including national slaughterers, had decreased from 50 to 90 percent by February and March and it has continued to diminish since then.

This decline in cattle slaughter by such representative packers is due to their inability to obtain the livestock at legal prices and not to a decline in the volume of cattle being marketed. The evidence showed that legitimate slaughterers are likewise unable to maintain their hog slaughter and pork production because of the diversion of hogs to black-market channels.

The result is that there are large supplies of meat in some places and extreme shortages in others, depending upon whether the eating place, the wholesaler, the retailer, or the consumer is willing to "pay the price" and patronize the black market.

The surveys made in the 11 representative cities throughout the United States show that at least $1,250,000,000 a year in excess of ceiling prices is being paid by the consumer for meat. In addition, approximately $750,000,000 of meat subsidy per year is being indirectly paid for meat by the taxpayers in this country. The result is that the American public is paying in excess of $2,000,000,000 a year over ceiling prices for its meat.

That is a substantial amount. It is the cost to the American people as the result of black markets and subsidies. Just think of it, Mr. President; it is $2,000,000,000 a year. Is that inflationary? Some economists claim that by hiding the cost of food products by means of the payment of subsidies, such subsidy payments will tend to check inflation. But do they really tend to check inflation, or are subsidy payments in themselves inflationary? What good does it do to buy a certain product at what appears to be a reasonable price, when actually a subsidy is being paid—and of course it is paid by the people who buy the products, and is paid in proportion to the amount of taxes which the people pay in order to make possible the subsidy payments.

I read further from the report:

This represents only the out-of-pocket cost and does not take into consideration the indirect loss caused by the black market such as waste, unemployment, and sickness.

The black market in meat is seriously imperiling the public health. Legitimate slaughterers are subject to constant Federal and local supervision. Their plants are inspected for cleanliness, diseased animals are condemned, and the meat is inspected at all stages of processing, thus insuring that only clean and wholesome products reach the consumer. Many black-market operators on the other hand are not supervised and make no effort to handle their product in a sanitary manner. The evidence before this committee showed that black-market slaughterers are currently operating in buildings wholly lacking in refrigeration, screens, and other sanitary conditions. This committee was shocked by photographs which were submitted showing the horrible conditions under which black-market operators slaughter livestock and distribute meat.

Further, the waste of glands and other byproducts needed for the manufacture of pharmaceuticals is causing a shortage of many vital drugs and preparations such as insulin for the treatment of diabetes, adrenal cortex extract for the treatment of Addison's disease, medicines prepared from pituitary glands for use in childbirth and in surgical cases, adrenalin for the treatment of asthmatic conditions, and liver extract for the treatment of pernicious anemia. Several national pharmaceutical laboratories reported that the situation was critical and that they could not obtain necessary raw materials because the black market was diverting livestock from legitimate slaughterers. This committee believes that the black market threat to the public health is much more serious than any increase in meat prices which might result from the removal of Government controls on livestock and meat.

The open and notorious black market in livestock and meat is doing great harm to the morality of the country. Public observance of the Price Control Act and the livestock and meat regulations is the exception rather than the rule. Disregard of this act and these regulations breeds contempt for all law.

From all the evidence, the committee finds:

1. Government controls and price regulations affecting livestock and meat have completely broken down; price ceilings on livestock and meat are a fiction; and, as a result of the black market and subsidies, meat is costing the American public at least $2,000,000,000 a year in excess of ceiling prices.

2. Most meat is being sold at black market prices. Reliable surveys show that five out of six stores were selling meat at over ceiling prices and the average price of all meat sold at retail was 20 percent above legal ceilings in February 1946. Facts from the surveys also show that the black market has become more serious since that time.

3. There is no shortage of livestock on farms and ranches; in fact, there is an excessive inventory of cattle; but there are severe shortages of meat in some places and in certain stores because of the black market dislocation of distribution and because price controls and subsidies have impeded production by creating fear and uncertainty in the minds of producers and feeders of livestock.

4. The "price squeeze" placed on slaughterers by the OPA from 1942 to date has forced many legitimate slaughterers to close or curtail their operations, thereby fostering the black market.

5. Remaining legitimate slaughterers, both small and large, are willing and anxious to buy livestock at legal maximum prices but are unable to do so because black market operators pay higher prices with the result that livestock is being diverted from the normal channels of slaughter and distribution into the black market.

6. The black market in meat is imperiling the national health through insanitary slaughtering and curtailed production of essential medicinal byproducts.

7. Black market slaughtering is causing a complete economic loss of many millions of pounds of critically short byproducts, such as fats, protein feeds, and hides.

8. Widespread evasion of price controls on livestock and meat by those who are victims of the black market and must overcharge or go out of business, plus the failure of willful racketeering violators to be apprehended, has created a disrespect for all laws, and is rapidly undermining the moral fiber of the country.

9. Thousands of employees with long years of service and valued experience necessarily have been laid off by legitimate slaughterers because such slaughterers are unable to maintain their volume against black market competition. Additional thousands of other employees in these packing plants have had their hours of work reduced for the same reason.

10. Four years of experience with Government controls, culminating in the present scandalous situation, shows conclusively the impossibility of controlling livestock and meat prices and meat distribution through Government laws, regulations, and directives; and any new or reinstated controls on the livestock and meat industry can only create greater confusion and further impede maximum production and legitimate slaughtering and distribution.

11. Removal of price controls and subsidies from livestock and meat will stimulate the marketing of livestock and the production of meat, drive the black-market operators out of business, save untold waste, safeguard the public health, and make a large supply of meat available to all at a competitive price which will be lower than consumers are now paying as a result of the black market and subsidies.

RECOMMENDATION

This committee recommends that all price controls and subsidies on livestock and edible products derived therefrom be removed at once.

Mr. President, I subscribe 100 percent to that recommendation, and I emphasize it with all the power at my command as being expressive of my views. That is the unconditional recommendation of a committee of this Senate, the members of which are the elected representatives of the people, but which has been wholly ignored and overridden by the price experimenters of OPA who are not the elected representatives of the people, who owe no duties or responsibilities to any constituency, and who will continue to ignore and override these and similar recommendations as long as the life of OPA is extended.

We talk about restricting OPA by law and placing certain mandatory provisions in the act. For 4 years OPA has deliberately, and, I say, in many cases maliciously, violated the plain letter and spirit of the law, as well as ignoring the recommendations of numerous committees of the Congress and of industry advisory committees. On the record, there is no reason to believe that OPA will be bound any more by future provisions of law than it has been or is by the provisions of existing law.

Price controls mean a controlled economy. A controlled economy is wrong in principle and will not work under our American system.

No man in America or no set of men can enforce price control, whatever the law may be and regardless of how many snoopers and inspectors and FBI men are loosed upon the people. The enforcement of price controls is as impossible as the enforcement of prohibition. The American people are not ready for regimentation. I have said on numerous occasions, and I want to say it again, that had price controls been removed on VJ-day we would today be experiencing a flood of production that would already have leveled prices off to prewar relationships. Instead, we still experience shortages in practically every field of consumer goods, and we are now going into a period of severe food shortages for the rest of 1946 and for 1947, and until the Congress has the good judgment to take the Government out of business and to return business to private industry, we shall continue to experience such shortages. Price control means that the Government is in charge of every industrial effort in this country. By the manipulation of price control, the inexperienced experimenters determine the destiny of every industry, business, and industrial activity in America. Such is inherent in price control and a controlled economy.

The OPA's Joint Advisory Committee on Cattle, Hog, Beef, and Pork Industries, on April 16, 1946, adopted the following resolution:

Whereas full legitimate production is the only answer to both inflation and the black-market problems. At this late date an increase in livestock and meat ceilings will not get full legitimate production or eradicate the black market. Also, at this late date improvised regulations, such as proposed today to the advisory committees, are not a remedy nor can additional investigators or more vigorous enforcement bring about compliance with OPA regulations. The black market can only be driven out of business if the legitimate meat packer is permitted to compete with them on even terms: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the OPA Industry Cattle, Hog, Beef, and Pork Advisory Committees are unanimously opposed to the proposal that has been submitted to the Advisory Committees and unanimously recommend that subsidies and price controls be immediately removed from the livestock and meat industry.

Mr. President, did Mr. Bowles and Mr. Porter pay the slightest attention to this action of their committee? Did Mr. Bowles keep his word that OPA would rely heavily upon the recommendation of these advisory committees? Did OPA follow the requirements of the statute that they give consideration to the recommendations of this industry committee, which is a creature of the law, just as much as are the offices of Mr. Bowles or Mr. Porter? The facts are, and we all know them, that the Industry Advisory Committees created by OPA have been a sham and a delusion, and in not a single case has OPA paid the slightest attention to the recommendations of these committees. The same has been true in the oil industry, the canning industry, the citrus-fruit industry, the fresh-vegetable industry, and numerous other industries.

Mr. President, provision has been made for a Decontrol Board appointed by the President, the members of which are to be confirmed by the Senate, and are to receive a salary, I believe, of $12,000 a year, with full power and authority to employ clerical staffs, assistants, and do other things which are inherent in a bureaucracy. What is to be done? It has been said by the proponents of the measure that persons may petition the Administrator and make a showing before him that the supply of a certain commodity or article is equal to the demand. The language of the statute uses the word "shall." Does not the language in all similar statutes use the world "shall"? An appeal may be made from the decision rendered in connection with all matters, and all actions are to be under the rules and regulations prescribed by the Administrator. My belief, Mr. President, is that there will be no decontrol. I believe that the entire proposal is quite agreeable to the advocates of the extension of OPA, including the Political Action Committee, the CIO, and all similar organizations of whom many persons are afraid. They are all pleased with the bill, and I believe that the President will sign it. Statements about the President vetoing it are all bunk. They are made only to fool the people. I am not at all impressed by them. There is only one answer, namely, to take all authority away from the OPA and turn it back to the people.

Mr. President, relief with respect to individual prices has been almost as difficult to obtain from OPA as has industry-wide relief. A few relief applications have been granted. Political strategy demands that prices here and there be raised. Moreover, there is that class of price increase which constitutes pure favoritism of one competitor as against another. Of course, favoritism may be exercised in many instances. Some persons like it. There may be some engaged in industry who are doing well, but they are generally those who are favorites of the officials. A condition of that kind is always the product of unrestrained and uncontrolled political, economic, or social power, and no legislative restraints will effectively prevent the dispensing of favoritism.

Deputy OPA Administrator Baker told the Senate Banking and Currency Committee on April 17 that applications for individual relief passed through 187 separate stages of processing before reaching a final conclusion.

It would be very fine for a man living in Colorado or in Oklahoma, for example, to come to Washington and file an application for relief. All he would need to do would be to come to Washington and pay $15 a day for a room, if he could find one, and wait around until the whole matter had gone through 187 separate stages of processing before reaching a final conclusion.

Mr. President, I have said that Deputy OPA Administrator Baker told the committee on Banking and Currency that applications for individual relief passed through 187 separate stages of processing before reaching a final conclusion. He hastened to say, however, that this had been cut down to 78 steps and hoped that it could be cut down some more. In the face of this admitted intolerable condition, Mr. Porter, at the same time, had the effrontry to tell the committee that all the OPA wanted out of the committee was "more appropriations." That statement appears in the record of the committee hearings. Mr. Porter stated that all the OPA wanted was "more appropriations." There are many persons who would like to see the OPA given such appropriations. We have seen evidences of that fact during the past few days. Mr. Porter stated further:

Only one amendment we ask to the existing law and that is one granting us the power to control commercial rents.

A controlled economy leads to an authoritarian psychology which results in the oppression and destruction of individual rights and liberties under a gestapo system. The oppressive and arbitrary action of OPA officials is a story so repugnant and so rotten that it is hard to believe that such could happen within the confines of a constitutional government such as we have in America.

In Oklahoma it is estimated that 15 percent of all grocers have been deprived from selling or handling sugar, for periods ranging from 30 days to the duration of rationing, because of errors or mistakes in following OPA regulations. In some instances, the penalty was imposed as a result of selling some item for 1 cent above the ceiling. This travesty upon justice and freedom has been perpetrated on the retailers throughout the length and breadth of this country. The OPA gestapo has instilled fear in the hearts of every merchant of America. The price control law and its administration is rapidly destroying respect for all law and order. We must be prepared to suffer the consequences in the years to come.

As a horrible example of the unlawful methods of this Government agency—and I should like to have those who are at all interested in this question listen to this as one of the instances of the procedure followed by the OPA—I call attention to the policy that has been adopted by a local OPA office in Fort Worth, Tex., of sending a printed form to all purchasers of used automobiles in that area during the past 6 months. I hold in my hand a photostatic copy of this form, and it is a pretty impressive looking document. The form is headed "United States of America, Office of Price Administration"—and get this—"Subpena duces tecum." That means, I believe, "bring everything you have with you." It is signed by the district director. Here is the language of the so-called subpena:

> At the instance of the Price Administrator, Office of Price Administration, you are hereby required to appear before Roy L. Snodgress, investigator of the Office of Price Administration, at room 631, Fort Worth Club Building, in the city of Fort Worth, Tex., on the 18th day of April 1946, at 1 o'clock p. m. of that day, to testify concerning your purchase of a used automobile or automobiles in the past 6 months.
> And you are hereby required to bring with you and produce at said time and place the following documents—

That may not sound very awful to some of my colleagues, but the time has been when if they had received such a paper, in the absence of the background of experience they now have, they would have had the stuffing scared out of them; it would have looked like an awesome document—

> All papers in your possession pertaining to the above-mentioned automobile, including canceled checks, receipts for cash payments—

It looks as if the law might have been violated there; I do not know; this was in Texas—> certificate of transfer of used passenger automobile, title certificate, registration receipt, dealer's warranty, chattel mortgage, State tax receipt.

> Fail not at your peril.
> DISTRICT DIRECTOR.

That is one method, one of the terroristic methods they employ without authority of law.

The mailing of this document is predicated simply and solely upon the fact that the individual to whom it is directed has purchased a car. It is issued without any evidence that the transaction has been illegal and without any reason to presume that it is, and without any complaint on the part of anyone. But they are at work; they have an office, and they have secretaries, assistants, and facilities, and they have to make a showing. It will be noted that this so-called "subpena duces tecum" is issued and signed by no judicial authority whatsoever. This gestapo practice is so shocking as to gag every freedom-loving citizen of this country. It should bring the blush of shame to the face of every supporter of OPA. No possible purpose can be attributed to such tyrannical methods except the establishment of tyranny itself. No doubt, every Member of this Congress, both in the House and the Senate, has had brought to his attention as I have, dozens of examples of the arbitrary tyranny of OPA underlings. We have been too prone to dismiss them as isolated cases and as a mere incident of wartime controls. We should understand that it is the aggregate of such activities that is destroying constitutional government in America and we in Congress, if we fail to act, must accept the responsibility for the consequences. When centralized government plans and executes the orders, rules and regulations under which wages, work, prices, and production of 140,000,000 Americans shall be controlled, it naturally leads to a government by dictation.

I have often said, and I say it again, because the evidence is so convincing that there is no escape from the conclusion, that a large segment of those supporting the OPA has in view the single purpose of permanently continuing a governmentally controlled economy. I know that there are Members of the Senate who will take issue with that statement, but let me read what Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt had to say in her daily column of April 30, 1946:

> It has been a long fight to put the control of our economic system in the hands of the Government where it can be administered in the interests of the people as a whole. Now, Congress, under the influence of powerful lobbies, is rapidly trying to return control to big business.

Is there a Member of the Congress, save possibly one, who would care to defend such a philosophy?

Compare Mrs. Roosevelt's statement with that of a leading Fascist of the Mussolini regime, as found in Mr. Mario Palmieri's book, The Philosophy of Fascism:

> We see thus the Fascist State resolutely enter the economic field to dictate what shall be from now on the relationship between capital and labor, employer and employee, landowner and farm hand, industrialist and worker.

Compare, also, Mrs. Roosevelt's statement with the announcement of Hitler of October 18, 1936, in which he advised the German people that he had appointed Hermann Goering to control and direct, on behalf of the Government, the economic life of the German Nation.

OPA's propaganda for self-perpetuation is confined to two propositions: First, that it has held the line; and, second, that without OPA price controls we will have runaway inflation.

I was very glad to hear our majority leader say yesterday morning that he indulged himself in no wild predictions as to what would happen if price controls were released.

If it can be shown beyond any reasonable doubt that both these propositions are fallacious and, on the contrary, prices are high and shortages exist because of OPA, then certainly, no one who believes in our form of constitutional government and the freedoms guaranteed under it would argue for a continuation of this agency.

Let us then examine the claim of OPA that it has held the line. The Smith committee of the House investigating executive agencies has found that the confused policies of OPA have actually increased inflation and created scarcities in essential goods with resulting widespread black markets and needless rises in the cost of living. It would be an illuminating experience if every Member of the Congress could take the time to read the testimony of Mr. Koppel Wexelblatt, Price Executive, Home Furnishings Branch of OPA, and Mr. Samuel W. Levitties, Price Executive, Apparel Price Branch of OPA, given September 27 and November 30, 1945, respectively, and appearing in part 6 of the hearings before the House Committee To Investigate Executive Agencies. These gentlemen were examined with respect to specific conditions existing either as to market prices or to shortages concerning dozens of items of household furnishings and wearing apparel, and the reasons that caused the issuance of certain orders, rules, regulations, directives, price adjustments, production quotas, roll-backs, cost-plus orders, and numerous other arrangements of OPA.

I have had many years of business experience, and I say frankly that the explanations of these OPA officials are incomprehensible to my mind, and I believe to the mind of the average man.

Grudgingly, Government agencies admit increased cost of living above prewar levels of from 30 to 35 percent. If subsidy payments, deterioration of quality, and black markets could be determined and included as factors in the cost of living, we all know that the index would look more like 135 percent.

Mr. Robert A. Seidel, vice president and comptroller of the W. T. Grant Co., a student of prices and values, states that consumers spent 84 percent more money in 1945 than in 1940 for the same amount of goods. In the year following March 1945, the price of men's shirts, including quality deterioration, has risen 93 percent, women's cotton dresses have risen 147 percent. We have held the line! A recent poll of merchants in Central-Western States shows that 64 out of 100 clothing merchants do not have shirts, 54½ percent are out of hosiery, 90 percent are out of men's knit underwear, 96½ percent are out of oilcloth, and 75 percent are out of cotton piece goods. These figures do not mean that we are out of shirts, but they do mean that we are out of shirts at prewar prices, and the merchants refuse to stock shirts at newly established prices made by new factories or made by old factories on styles that warrant new prices, running from $16.50 for prewar $8.50 grades, to $24.00 for prewar grades of $16.50. Hosiery, and particularly nylons, cannot be kept in stock. Price controls have driven thousands of women to purchase three, four, and five times their hose necessities.

In 1940, 3 pounds of bulk coffee could be bought for 39 cents. In 1945, the same brand and quantity cost 50 cents. Ten pounds of sugar in 1940 could be bought for 39 cents; the 1945 price was 64 cents. In 1940, tomatoes were selling 3 cans for 25 cents. Today, they cannot be had at any price. The 1940 price of chickens was 39 cents a pound. Today, they range from 50 to 60 cents a pound. These figures are taken from a survey made and published by the United Automobile Workers.

The American Meat Institute has demonstrated before both the House and Senate Banking and Currency Committees that the American public today is paying an average of about 20 percent more for meat than ceiling prices. In the better cuts this is as high as 57 percent. This does not include subsidy payment. Officials of the American Meat Institute estimate that inclusive of black market margins and subsidy payment, AA grade steaks are costing the American public not less than $1 per pound.

Representatives of the South Florida Canners Association, testifying before the House Banking and Currency Committee on March 15, told the committee that as the result of OPA price ceilings there is not at the present time a single cannery operating in southern Florida. That is the result of what we have done. The canneries are being offered for sale at below book value because the owners cannot operate at prices set for their production by OPA. Let us remember that March, April, and May cover the peak of the canning season in southern Florida. Is there any doubt that we will experience even more severe shortages of canned vegetables than we did last winter? Representatives of the South Florida Canners Association told the committee that the canned tomato pack for 1945 was 64 percent less than the 1942 pack, due almost entirely to OPA activities. Representative PATMAN wanted to know if this was due to a small crop. The answer was:

> No; there was as large if not a larger crop in 1945 than in 1942. The tomatoes rotted in the field because OPA had deprived the canners of their regular marketing channels.

At this point a letter from Mr. W. L. Wilson, director of State markets for Florida, was read into the record, urging upon the Congress the immediate termination of OPA, which the representatives of the canners stated expressed the stand of the entire canning industry. It is a fact that it is not possible to buy canned tomatoes in the stores today. On the contrary, four packaged, artificially ripened tomatoes are being offered at prices ranging from 39 to 42 cents.

The utterly pathetic effort to control the price and production of potatoes is another example of the impracticability of an artificially managed economy. The first potato control order was issued by OPA November 9, 1942. The 1942 crop of 370,000,000 bushels was about normal. The yield was about 13 percent above normal, and the acreage about 14 percent below. The New York price was fixed at $2.15 a hundred, in new bags f. o. b. shipping point. Farm prices were set at $1.83, leaving a differential of 32 cents. That year the Maine and New York crops were normal. Ordinarily, New York prices are about 29 percent above Maine. The 1942 New York ceilings, however, were only 13 percent above Maine prices. By January of 1943 the establishment of these subnormal prices followed by the rationing of canned fruits and vegetables encouraged abnormal consumption of potatoes and we went into the crop year 1943 with a shortage. Seed potatoes were labeled and sold for consumer use. OPA hastily put a 75-cent premium on seed potatoes, but without avail, and the premium was soon removed. The Nation experienced a potato famine. In New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, and even in St. Louis potatoes brought $10 a hundred in the black market. Potato chip manufacturers begged for increased prices. The OPA responded by permiting them to reduce the weight of the potato chips in each bag, and congratulated themselves on holding the line and tricking the public.

As a result of this artificially created situation the "little minds," as would be expected, called for a 17 percent increase in acreage for 1943. Fifty cents a bushel subsidy was offered to the farmers which averaged $7.50 per acre for about three and a third million acres of potatoes. Thc result was an increase of 23 percent in potato acreage. Nineteen hundred and forty-three was a marvelous year for potatoes.

The acreage being high and the yield good, we produced 465,000,000 bushels of potatoes, or 9 percent more than the largest crop in history. The increase in acreage and the subsidy payments to farmers cost the American taxpayer $25,200,000 exclusive of administrative cost. We produced a 75,000,000-bushel surplus and the Department of Agriculture then spent $20,000,000 to dispose of the surplus, exclusive of administrative expense. This was done as quietly as possible and with a minimum of publicity. The Government purchased potatoes and shipped to institutions which had not ordered them or had no use for them. Potatoes already graded and labeled on cars for consumers were put back in storage.

I am reciting this only to give an excellent example of what is done under this managed economy. In Maine, the Government acquired potatoes that had been frosted in the fall. When warm weather came, the bins had to be cleaned out. Unprecedented losses occurred through spoilage. Transportation was tight, but still these unneeded potatoes were shipped long distances for conversion into starch, pulp, alcohol, and so forth. Potatoes were even shipped into the West where sugar-beet factories were altered to convert the potatoes into pulp, at Government expense. Later, these factories had to be reconverted to handle sugar beets. Thousands of bushels of potatoes spoiled on the way to beet factories and some spoiled at the plants before the technique of handling the pulp could be learned, and had to be dumped as garbage. Finally, the railroads placed an embargo on potatoes. Cities protested the unsanitary conditions that were being created. Problems arose as to the disposal of the dried pulp. Some of it was eventually used for livestock feed at $50 a ton, although it had cost the planners $300 a ton to produce it. Thus, our planners spend $45,000,000 to produce and dispose of the surplus potato crop in 1943. Mr. John Q. Public took the loss.

But the "little minds" were persistent, and in 1944 they recommended only a 2 percent increase in acreage—why, no one will ever know. Thanks to the good sense and judgment of the farmers, they planted 12 percent less and because of a poor crop year, the yields were 7 percent below 1943, and the 1944 crop was substantially in balance with our consumptive demand. But still the "little minds" had not had enough, and as usual, an expansion of acreage was requested in 23 States for 1945, but the farmers were beginning to understand that the "little minds" were not potato raisers and only 4 States followed the recommendation. For some strange reason, decreases were recommended in some States. About one-third of the farmers in these States complied. The average acreage decrease was about 3 percent that year, but the weatherman tended the crop well; acreage yields were the highest in history; and we turned up with the third largest crop ever produced in this country.

New York ceiling prices for the 1945 crop were set just after the potatoes had come through the ground. Little could be known about the crop and ceilings were boosted. The deluge of potatoes was such, however, that the ceiling could not be sustained and finally, on September 14, 1945, price control on potatoes was suspended. This was planned economy.

This story can be duplicated, Mr. President, in dozens of commodities, and yet, we in the Congress who have the responsibility, sit by and talk about gradual decontrols and lend our support to the simple experimenters that are destroying our country under our very noses. Mr. Bowles and Mr. Porter were never elected by the people. They have no constituency. They have no obligations or responsibilities of elected representatives of the people, as you and I have.

What happened as to the price of potatoes when controls were suspended? The Department of Agriculture reports that the average quotations on the Chicago market, based on Idaho, Colorado, and Texas "old" potatoes as of April 15, 1946, was $4.39 a hundred. On April 15, 1945, under price control, and the third largest crop in history, the Chicago quotation, based on the same sources, was $5.32 a hundred, and $6.96 a hundred, if the Texas "new" is included. Thus, the Chicago market for April of this year, without price control, is 93 cents less per hundred on "old" potatoes than a year ago, under price control, and $2.57 less when the No. 1 Texas "news" are included in the price computation.

On the same date, April 15, 1945, the New York quotation per hundred, based on Maine, New York, and Florida potatoes, was $4.52, under OPA controls. A year later, April 15, 1946, the quotation on the New York market, based on the same sources was $4.33 per hundred without price control. Without rhyme or reason price ceilings were reimposed on potatoes a few days ago.

Does this indicate that the farmers are incompetent to gage the supply and demand situation of this country? Does it indicate that the farmers are any more incompetent to deal with the hazards of weather than the "little minds" of OPA?

Although control of potato prices was suspended last September, the OPA did not get around to decontrolling potato chips, potato salad, potatoes julienne, and potatoes shoestring until May 15, 1946. What disposition will be made of potatoes mashed, french fried, au gratin, hash brown, cottage fried, and boiled has not yet been disclosed.

I repeat, if Congress will renew its confidence in the good judgment of the people and restore to them their government and their economy, we need have no fear of scarcities or inflation.

Millions of veterans are returning to civilian life, and no quality clothing is to be had for them. Cheap, shoddy suits are being offered in very limited quantities at exorbitant prices. Two suits, a pair of shoes, a hat, six shirts, when they can be had, six suits of underwear, and necessary accessories are costing the average veteran in excess of $300. I was told by a recently discharged youth that he had scoured every store in Washington and had failed to find a single suit in his size. He did find a sport coat for $95. This is what OPA is doing to this great productive country of ours. If that is what you want, then I suggest OPA should be continued.

Nine months have expired since VJ-day, and except for military vehicles that have been converted to civilian use, it is a pitiful fact that we have fewer cars on the road today than we had at the close of the war. The few cars that have been produced have been held in warehouses and showrooms, awaiting the pleasure of OPA to fix a price on them. Only a few days ago, when it was announced that Pontiac production must be curtailed, did OPA get around to giving this matter their serious attention. And what are the prices of new cars? If you have had any experience in pricing them, you will find that although the base price has only increased some 10 or 15 percent over 1941 levels, you are now required to buy a car fully equipped with every gadget in the catalog which you may not want, but which must be bought in order that the dealer can meet his increased labor, parts, and other operating cost.

So long as shortages are artificially made, these conditions must necessarily exist. As long as the shirt manufacturer, the clothing manufacturer, the underwear manufacturer or any other manufacturer, can make new styles, new models from less expensive material, and obtain high ceilings, the American public will not get low-priced quality goods.

The indisputable truth is that OPA has not held the line, nor has it prevented shortages. On the contrary, the evidence on every hand is that it has caused inflation and created shortages. A striking example is reported in the House Committee Investigating Executive Agencies that emphasizes the policy followed by OPA. An established manufacturer of low-priced window awnings required a retail price rise of from $1.59 to $1.79 to cover increases in production cost. OPA refused to allow the increase and the manufacturer was forced to abandon the product, but—and I quote from the report—

> A vastly inferior awning of the same size, made by a newcomer to the field, sells at retail for $3.26 with OPA approval.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to point out to the distinguished Senator that not only does the new business get an opportunity to establish higher prices, but the old businesses, in order to place merchandise on the market profitably, must resort to substitutions. Testimony from representatives of department stores who appeared before our committee was to the effect that out of 120,000 items sold, more than 75,000 were substitutions. That is why the long-pointed cowboy shirts take the place of white broadcloth shirts. That is the reason for the $76 child's dress which I bought in New York, which before the war sold for $5.95. It had three additional buttons on it, and a little flare which made it different from the model prior to that time.

If an Arrow shirt cannot be obtained for $2.24, what good does it do to have a maximum price on such a shirt? All the buyer is offered is a substitution. The testimony is undisputed that in the department stores, out of 120,000 items more than 75,000 are substitutions, at prices which in many cases are three times the prices which would have to be paid for the legitimate article.

There was the incident of the Barbizon slip. I sent out a buyer in New York to get a Barbizon slip. Twelve stores were supposed to handle this particular brand. The buyer went to every one of those stores. There was not one to be had until the buyer reached the last store, and it was size 46. Of course, not many women would want to buy a size 46 slip.

The distinguished Senator from Oklahoma is making a wonderful contribution. I merely wished to invite the attention of the Senate once again to the fact that legitimate merchandise is not in production. As the Senator from Oklahoma has pointed out, there is a scarcity. If we wish to buy clothes today, we must accept substitutions. We must accept something that does not have the value of the legitimate article, something which in many instances is sold for three times the price it ought to bring. We cannot get rid of that practice under OPA, because it is growing, and has greatly increased in the past 3 or 4 years.

Mr. STANFILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me so that I may ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. STANFILL. What do Mr. Bowles and Mr. Porter have to say? What is their answer, if the Senator from Nebraska can enlighten us?

Mr. WHERRY. They really have no answer. They say that we are magnifying what has happened. They go back to the old story that legitimate merchandise is being produced. They say that we are greatly exaggerating these incidents. With respect to the exhibits which we have shown Senators, they say that they are not typical, and that after a certain number of months they have got those items off the market; that they were sold at prices which were too high, and that the OPA is really enforcing the law.

I will say to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky that we challenged Mr. Bowles. We had not only testimony from representatives of department stores, but also testimony from operators of variety stores, which handle the lower grades of hardware. One of the items involved was a paring knife. Formerly it was possible to buy a paring knife for a dime. If anyone tries to buy the old paring knife for a dime, he does not get anything like the former quality, and he pays 25 cents for it.

A man from Florida, whose name I cannot now recall, but who owns four stores in Florida, testified that in his stores he handled 11,000 articles of merchandise. He stated that 65 percent of all that merchandise consisted of substitutions, including war materials and inventories which someone wanted to get rid of, the prices of which were far beyond what he ought to have paid.

That is what it means today to do business under the OPA. Yet when Mr. Bowles is confronted with the evidence he says, "That is just an isolated case," and that as fast as those who are manufacturing such articles can be reached the prices will be controlled. But it cannot possibly be done. Think of policing 75,000 items in a department store. Think of policing 11,000 items in a variety store. Think of policing 26,000 slaughterers throughout the country. We cannot possibly get the manpower to do the price enforcement job which must be done.

Mr. STANFILL. What do Mr. Bowles and Mr. Porter say about buying Arrow shirts? Are they able to find them?

Mr. WHERRY. At that time, in December, Mr. Bowles said, "Senator WHERRY, the trouble is that they are withholding the Arrow shirts." At that time we had repealed the excess-profits tax, and Mr. Bowles said everyone was holding them back because it was desired to place them on the market after the first of January. Everyone knows that that was not true, because all the testimony was to the effect that the shirts were not to be had. They could not be made and sold for $2.24.

Finally, the day arrived when the excess-profits tax was no longer effective. Was the situation improved in January, February, and March? No. There were not as many shirts as before. The difficulty was that under the MAP Arrow shirts could not be produced.

A lady in Kansas City named Nellie Donnelly produces women's dresses. Senators should read her testimony if they wish to learn what the maximum-price regulation does to a manufacturer. The situation in her business was similar to that in connection with Arrow shirts. She could produce only a certain quantity at a certain price, because under the maximum price regulation a manufacturer must produce the same number, the same quality, and the same value in all lines, or he cannot produce any line.

Mr. STANFILL. The evidence before the committee showed that to be the situation; but I am interested to know what the OPA enforcement officials have to say. Do they admit the existence of such a situation, or do they deny it?

Mr. WHERRY. I do not believe that Chester Bowles ever admitted anything about the enforcement of OPA. If one reads his testimony and looks at his charts and statistics, he will see that he has a good argument and a defense for everything. What I am trying to say is that he has no real answer. But even though there were an answer, the thing which the Senator from Oklahoma is pointing out is the actual result in the market place. That is the test as to whether or not we are getting production. The test is not Mr. Bowles' charts and statistics. As I stated yesterday, we cannot eat charts and statistics. We must have food. We must have clothing. The test of whether or not there is production is in the market places of the country. The distinguished Senator says that one cannot buy shirts. Recently a shirt has come on the market which sells for $4.94. Production of such shirts is just starting. It is not like the old Arrow shirt. It is a broadcloth shirt, but the production is very limited.

The only way in which we can get real production is through the old competitive enterprise system. Manufacturers must be permitted to produce at a profit. Competition will settle the price. That is what we must have; and the sooner we can get back to it the better.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I do not have the floor.

Mr. O'DANIEL. If the Senator from Oklahoma will yield to me, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question.

Mr. WHERRY. Before the Senator asks his question, I should like to complete my answer to the question asked by the Senator from Kentucky, if the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma will yield for that purpose.

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to read a paragraph from a letter which I recently received by air mail from a friend of mine in Canada, to show what free competition will do in a country which does not have these controls. I should like to read all of the letter, but this is the important part:

We are enjoying it here, seeing stores loaded with meat and merchandise. This is the land of plenty—strawberries 25 and 29 cents a quart. I canned 7 quarts today; had 10 quart baskets and 3 pounds of sugar mixed overnight and brought to a boil in their own juice. I hope they keep. This is a good place to spend a holiday. Tell your friends in the United States to come to Lindsay for a belly full of beef, etc.

That is what they are doing in Canada. Yet we are continuing to impose these restrictions and these impediments upon our domestic economy; and instead of getting plenty, we are getting a continued economy of scarcity.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I wish to tell the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Nebraska that we on this side of the aisle are interested in this discussion—all of us over here. [Laughter.] I am particularly interested in the statement which the Senator from Nebraska has made with reference to ladies' attire. He seems to be an expert on that subject. [Laughter.] I notice that he sent someone to visit the ladies' wear shops and to buy ladies' clothes. In view of the news that has been published in the newspapers lately, I wish to ask whether he sent Sally Rand out? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I guess there is only one answer to that question: I did not send Sally Rand.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Kentucky, and the Senator from Texas for emphasizing the point I am making by the additional examples which they have submitted.

Such conditions can only be brought about by the ignorance of inexperience or by deliberate design. In either event, let us not condone it by further extending the very set-up that has made these conditions possible. What good would it do to tell OPA that the first manufacturer must be given a profit, measured by 1941 standards on quality goods, when the new competitor is by law pegged at a profit by 1946 standards on low-quality goods? It is worse than stupid to believe that we can write into the law detailed administrative provisions that will prevent these inequities that naturally stem from a controlled economy. Nor will the apprentice mechanics of economy that swarm in and out of OPA like termites in a decaying house ever devise workable formulas to adjust these inequities. The answer, and the only answer, is the termination of OPA; and the quicker we do it, the sooner a sick and discouraged Nation whose health has been seriously injured by the patent medicines of the quacks, will start the long road to recovery.

As a further glimpse into these "little minds", I read in part from two press releases issued May 7 by Mr. Sheets and May 8 by Mr. Kritini, respectively, of OPA. The first release reads in part as follows:

An interim price increase of 12 percent over March 1942 prices—enough to cover fabric cost increases—was granted to manufacturers of awnings by the Office of Price Administration today.

The increase, effective May 8, 1946, applies to sales through distribution channels only, and will be absorbed by wholesalers and retailers before reaching the householder, OPA said.

If a manufacturer sells direct to household consumers or commercial or industrial users, the increase is limited to 7 percent.

It would appear from this press release that a manufacturer could sell to wholesalers and retailers and collect a 12-percent increase which the wholesalers and retailers must absorb, or, if he sold directly to the householder, he could collect only a 7-percent increase. Conversely, if the consumer bought from a wholesaler or retailer he would only be required to pay the 1942 frozen price, but if he buys from a manufacturer he will pay the 7-percent increase. Do you know of any sane person that could figure that one out?

The May 8 release reads in part, as follows:

To keep distribution of live and dressed lamb, yearlings, and sheep in normal channels and to maintain retail cuts of meat from these animals at or below ceiling prices, the Office of Price Administration today announced custom slaughtering limitations on this livestock.

The action, effective May 16, 1946, requires any meat packer custom slaughtering on a fee basis lamb, yearlings, or sheep purchased by a seller of meat cuts—particularly a retailer—to pay his customer an amount which will keep the cost of the dressed meat to his customer at or below the ceiling on the dressed meat for a sale by the packer to the customer.

In order that the slaughterer will be able to determine how much he must "kick back," the purchaser of the live animal is required to notify the slaughterer of the amount he paid for the livestock.

Today's action has a twofold purpose. One object is to discourage custom slaughtering of lamb and mutton animals for retailers, thus repairing the break in normal distributive channels.

Can anyone tell me from this press release who pays who and for what?

Let us examine for a moment the prophecy of doom that is being made by Mr. Bowles and other OPA spokesmen—that if price controls are removed the Nation is headed for certain disaster. They cite the imaginary spiral of runaway inflation the Nation is supposed to have experienced during what they refer to as the "boom and bust" years of 1919, 1920, and 1921 following World War I. The record fails to bear out the statement of these gentlemen. Actually, prices immediately following the close of World War I went down. Oil, for example, dropped from $3 a barrel with a 50-cent premium to $1 a barrel. Cattle feeders throughout the country who were feeding large quantities of beef cattle were caught in the slump, and many went broke. The record shows that foodstuff, including such items as bread, flour, fowl, meat, potatoes, canned fruits and vegetable, fresh fruits, sugar, butter, fats and oils, went down, not up, during early 1919 and through 1922. If anyone doubts this, let him examine the newspaper advertisements of those years and the record that are available in those industries.

Why did these prices go down? It was because America was geared to wartime production which carried on into peacetime, and we actually had in the early years following the war a production that brought on some deflation, rather than inflation.

In the latter part of 1922 and in 1923 production tapered off, consumption and prices increased, and the speculation spree that finally led to the stock market crash in 1929 and 1930 got under way. Cheap money and loose credits had swung the pendulum back, and we went through a period of inflationary pressure from 1922 to 1929. But such was and is the hazard of a free enterprise and a free economy. During the period following the last war the industrial expansion, home building, and the material benefits to a free society were, notwithstanding the ups and downs of our economy, greater than in any previous decade in history. It is true that after the temporary depression that immediately followed World War I we had high prices in many commodities, but the price tags were out in the open. The price was in accordance with quality. The people indulged themselves in luxuries.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The important thing to remember is that at that time there were not any black markets or any black-market prices. Is not that correct?

Mr. MOORE. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. There was legitimate merchandise and there were legitimate prices.

The cure for high prices themselves is to get back to an economy which is not controlled.

Mr. MOORE. Of course it is. No one will deny that in a free economy—it frequently happens that some people are hurt. But the question is whether it is better for a country and better for a people to have a free economy or a planned economy. I desire to emphasize time and time again that the issue before us today is whether we are to have a competitive, free, untrammeled economy or whether we are to have a planned economy. By the vote we cast on the pending conference report, we shall determine our stand on that issue and our decision regarding it.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I am sure the Senator from Oklahoma will also agree that people are hurt in a controlled economy. The Senator has said that no one will deny that people are injured in a free economy. I myself think that many more people are injured in a controlled economy, with the ultimate extermination of freedom itself, because that is what finally occurs.

Mr. MOORE. For whatever benefits we receive under a planned economy, we pay with the loss of our freedom.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I should like to repeat to the Senator a good definition of a bureaucrat which I heard the other day. I was told that a bureaucrat was a Government official who could draw a straight line from an unknown assumption to a foregone conclusion. [Laughter.]

I believe that when it is realized that in the preparation of all the charts about which the Senator has been speaking, and those which I have examined, only one side of the argument had anything to do with them, namely, the desire of the fellow who wanted to prove something by the charts, the correctness of the Senator's statement will be readily understood. We must beware of charts.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may propound a question to either the Senator from Oklahoma or the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MOORE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHITE. I come from a shoe manufacturing town in New England. One of the great difficulties confronting us there is the apparent total absence of kids and skins which are normally available on the American market. I have been told that hides which used to come in substantial quantities from Brazil and other points, have, because of the OPA price ranges, been entirely diverted from the American market, are unobtainable there, and have been going to England and elsewhere.

I have also been told that the shoe manufacturers of my section of the country find it almost impossible to obtain hides and leather. I am also told that that condition exists because a large portion of the cattle in this country is in control of black-market operators, who are interested only in the meat of the cattle and throw away the hides. Is there substantial truth in that statement?

Mr. MOORE. There must be truth in it. It is unlawful to buy, slaughter, and sell cattle on the black market, and the operators cannot afford to fool with the hides. They cannot afford to allow the hides to remain around as evidence of the illegality of their acts. The hides are destroyed.

Mr. WHITE. Boston is a market for skins and hides. I am told that buyers who have given their whole lives to the shoe business in the purchasing of hides have combed the Boston market and are utterly unable to find hides, which are an essential basis of the shoe-manufacturing business. As I understand, the black market takes the meat and throws away the hides.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I may answer more fully the Senator from Maine. The condition about which the Senator complains is not only true in relation to hides, but offal as well. The operators of the slaughtering plants, who do not wish their black-market operations to become known, dispose of the offal.

Another factor is involved. It is difficult to feed a steer and produce hides which in turn can be manufactured into the high quality of leather which buyers in Boston, Mass., have in the past been accustomed to buying. The class of cattle which is being marketed today does not produce the quality of leather which high-grade shoe manufacturers insist upon using. We do not now produce the long-fed cattle, and we do not, therefore, produce the thick and high-quality hides which we used to offer to the market. That is because the OPA has made it impossible for the feeder of cattle to feed his animals. It would be impossible to add up all the impediments which have been placed in the way of producing high-quality animals. We first could consider the black-market operators, and then the fact that the prices which are paid to cattle feeders do not permit proper feeding.

The OPA ceilings have blocked the production not only of leather but also of textiles. A vast network of impediments has been placed in the path of production of many articles and commodities. That situation, so far as cattle are concerned, will not be eliminated until we have a free competitive system under which the producer may use his own judgment as to how long he should feed his steers, what quality of hides should be produced, and so forth. A high quality of hides is essential, but it is one of the items in the production of cattle.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, as I was saying when I was interrupted, the ups and downs in business cause an inflationary and deflationary trend, but they are natural to a free economy. They are bound to take place. During the period following the last war the industrial expansion, home building, and the material benefits to a free society, notwithstanding the ups and downs of our economy, were greater than during any previous decade in history. It is true that after the temporary depression which immediately followed World War I we had high prices in many commodities, but the price tags were out in the open. The price was in accordance with quality. The people indulged themselves in luxuries. They boldly exercised their constitutional freedom to live as they pleased. Today they meanly slip up back alleys to indulge in black markets for the necessities of life. Luxuries are reserved to the black marketeers. No one knows the true price of any commodity on today's market. Who can tell the true price of meat, sugar, leather, cotton, hard minerals, oil, and dozens of other commodities that are being subsidized from the bottom and black marketed from the top?

In the ninth report of the House Special Committee on Postwar Economic Policy and Planning, Appendix No. 4, page 42, are listed 64 items on which controls have been removed and on which the price history is specific. The price on 18 items remained unchanged, 8 rose 5 percent or less, 7 rose 10 percent or less, the increase in 20 items was in excess of 10 percent, and the price on 11 items has actually fallen below the previous OPA ceiling.

The United States Department of Agriculture, with respect to the demand in the price situation on meat, in the March 1946 publication of the Bureau of Agriculture Economics, forecast that—

> Present indications are that without ceilings retail meat prices would advance 15 to 20 percent.

According to the admissions of the Secretary of Agriculture and a wealth of other testimony submitted to the House and Senate committees, this increase would be under the black-market prices today.

The same bureau, with respect to livestock and wool, in their March and April 1946 publications, says:

If price ceilings on meat were removed, the average retail meat price in the second half of the year probably would be 15 to 20 percent above present reported levels and somewhat higher than this for the better grades and more desirable cuts. Present reported levels are OPA retail ceiling prices.

The recent experience in the strawberry market is an example of what production can and will do to prices. Following OPA's release of controls, prices rose sharply, but today, strawberries are selling below the former ceiling. The strawberry crop is fair. Supply, demand, and competition fixed the price, strange as it seems, without the aid of OPA. Nowhere is there evidence to support the claim that termination of OPA would result in runaway prices.

OPA officials have had much to say about the experience of price increases on citrus fruit following suspension of price controls. Let it be noted that price controls on grapefruit and other citrus fruits were removed just ahead of the 1945 Christmas holidays, at the tail end of a short crop. Mr. Carl Loos, representing the California Fruit Growers Exchange, told the House Banking and Currency Committee on March 20, that in spite of the statements to the press by OPA, prices at the peak of the nonceiling rise reached a maximum average of only approximately 2 percent above ceiling prices and had dropped to below ceiling prices at the time OPA reinstated price control. He pointed out that the peak rise during Christmas week was due almost entirely to a shortage of Florida citrus fruit because of bad weather and the inability of the California growers to get their products to eastern markets because of the acute freight car shortages. The witness stated that the citrus fruit industry—oranges, grapefruit, and lemons—had increased its production an average of 50 percent over prewar levels. Can there be any fear of runaway prices in this industry if price controls are removed?

As a further example of the dishonest propaganda that is chilling the housewives of this country with fear, Mr. Chester Bowles, the "Don Quixote" of OPA, in a clash with the windmills over the radio April 24, 1946, said:

For 15 months in 1919 and 1920 prices and rents zoomed upward at a dizzy pace and then came the crash and huge paper profits were turned to losses.

Corporation profits were entirely wiped out in a single year. There were $11,000,000,000 in inventory losses alone. There were 106,000 bankruptcies, and don't let's forget that this time things could be a whole lot worse.

What are the facts? Dun & Bradstreet report 6,546 bankruptcies in the year 1919, 8,880 in 1920, 19,656 in 1921, 23,676 in 1922, and 18,720 in 1923.

In the depression years of 1931 and 1932 we had 28,284 and 31,824, respectively. Mr. Bowles' hand has been forcibly called on this gross misrepresentation by at least one radio commentator and numerous editorial comments. I have not seen or heard of any defense or explanation from Mr. Bowles. The reason is plain. Dishonesty is indefensible.

Those of us who were in business following World War I and those who remember or will take the time and care to check the facts, will find that Mr. Bowles' statements with respect to prices and business failures are simply not true. If it were possible to compare postwar prices after World War I to the inflation that we are suffering today under subsidies, deterioration of quality, black markets, and high ceilings for products of new manufacturers, made of shoddy and cheap materials, we would certainly find the balance strongly in favor of World War I prices. The business failures of 1919–20–21–22 are a mere drop in the bucket compared to the thousands of small businessmen who are closing their doors today because of OPA regulations and the impossible situation under which they are forced to conduct business. I am told by an employee of the Bureau of Internal Revenue that every mail brings stacks of final reports from small businessmen who are closing out. Which is better—a free enterprise and an honest bankruptcy, or to be driven from business by a Government that is leading us to governmental monopoly and regimentation?

I emphatically deny that the termination of OPA would result in runaway inflation. High prices in themselves are a cure for high prices, because when prices reach a peak beyond which the public will not pay, business is forced to bring them down in order to survive. Shortages and nonproduction are the seeds of inflation. High production is the antithesis of inflation. We are constantly told that when production is in balance with demand, price controls will be removed. The OPA has repudiated this statement by its actions with respect to many industries, such as oil, meat, fruit, and vegetables.

So far as durable consumer goods are concerned, we can never have production in balance with demand so long as price controls remain.

The greater part of my life has been spent in business. I think I have some conception of the factors upon which production must be predicated. Every businessman of experience knows that production does not roll up of its own accord. It is something that does not just happen. Production is dependent upon labor, markets, financing, and the availability of raw materials. Production programs include expansion and the building of factories, increased pay rolls, advertising campaigns, the building up of inventories, sales, and marketing surveys and campaigns, all of which must be planned 2, 3, or 5 years ahead. But what businessman today would risk his capital or his credit to increase production when he knows that young, inexperienced, left-wing experimenters in Washington are in control of the prices he can charge for his product? Where could business turn for private financing under these circumstances? What banker of experience would risk his depositors' money in a venture under the circumstances existing today? These are the things that the OPA boys do not understand. They do not understand them because they are men without experience and who are out of sympathy with our capitalistic system. But men of experience who realize and take seriously the responsibility they owe their stockholders and their investors will not venture capital under such circumstances. That is the reason we cannot have production of durable consumer goods until price controls are removed.

These facts are simple. They are true. They cannot be refuted. And if the Congress is to put this country on its feet again, we must recognize these simple truths.

In the fields of basic raw materials such as oil, coal, and hard minerals, and agricultural products and livestock, it is possible for good fortune and nature to give us production equal to our demands, notwithstanding planned production programs. Such, however, is not true of durable consumer goods that must be manufactured and marketed to the public through a system of wholesale and retail distribution.

Does anyone who will examine the operations of the OPA, its unreasonable regulations, its gestapo methods, its complete disregard for constitutional rights and guaranties, doubt that the underlying objective is the implanting in this country of a controlled economy? Let me read from a recent letter of Chester Bowles, speaking of the housing shortage. Listen:

No one believes for a moment that we can get this housing by giving the construction industry its head. No one who argues for reliance on the industry and upon traditional methods is arguing that we ignore the problem we face. * * * If we are going to achieve our goal, I believe we have to abandon traditional methods, just as we abandoned them during the war.

Is there anyone who fails to understand this language? Is it not clear that the inner circle of the planners believe that we must abandon our American tradition of private enterprise and substitute therefor a system of planned economy under a centralized authority?

Representatives of the lumber industry have paraded before committees of both the House and the Senate by the score, explaining that the housing shortage cannot be relieved until we do give the building industry its head and until building materials may be produced free of the restrictive hand of government.

Millions of veterans are tramping the streets of our cities today looking for shelter for themselves and their families. They have long ago ceased to express any choice as to where or how they will live. Any shelter will do. To these homeless men and women the regimenters are holding out the propaganda of price control, priorities, and the revolting promise of a socialized housing plan. Take controls off building material, curtail our exports, and this country will experience a building boom the like of which we have never seen, and, what is more, the competition of such a program will bring the price of houses within the purchasing range of the buyers. The truth about this so-called veterans' housing program is that the veteran's name is being used and the veteran is being duped to make it politically possible. The veteran who was told that he was fighting for a free society is being used to bring about a controlled society.

One of the important supports on which the OPA has relied is rent control. I readily recognize the serious situation confronting some 16,000,000 tenants in this country, and if it should be deemed wise that protective measures must be taken against the pressure of increased rents because of the severe shortage in which we find ourselves, and if the Federal Government is to undertake this task, there is no reason why this authority cannot be transferred to the National Housing Agency, or other appropriate agency. Certainly the retention of rent control should not be used as an excuse to perpetuate OPA and all of the iniquities that go with it. It is my own opinion that the States themselves are entirely qualified to administer any rent-control law that the people may find they need and desire. Varying circumstances and conditions in the various States would make State control of rents where necessary far more practical in my view. Certainly it would be more in keeping with our constitutional system of government by and for the people.

It is clear from even a casual survey of OPA operations that they have resulted in shortages, high prices, and poor quality goods. I think it clear that the productive forces of this country are such that competition in a free market would in a short time level prices off to prewar relationships. But, for the sake of argument, let us agree that high prices would follow termination of OPA. I pause to ask the very serious question—Are high prices too great a price to pay for liberty and freedom, the preservation of constitutional government, and the continuation of our private enterprise? The founders of this great country found the dangers and hardships of a revolution preferable to the tyranny of taxation without representation. Are we today to be less mindful of the blessings of liberty than the men and women of '76?

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6429) making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54 to the bill, and concurred therein.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5990) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67 to the bill and concurred therein; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71 to the bill and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, and that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 to the bill.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH, 1947—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. OVERTON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6429) making appropriations for the legislative branch, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, and 53, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$187,100"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,340"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendment numbered 54.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will not the Senator state briefly what the report covers?

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the House agreed to all the amendments of the Senate with the exception of two. One related to furnishings in the Library of Congress. The other had to do with salaries in the Library.

The result of the conference was that the increases made in the Senate were reduced by one-half. The changes I have mentioned were the only ones made.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection.

Mr. OVERTON. I move the adoption of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILSON obtained the floor.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILSON. For what purpose does the Senator ask me to yield?

Mr. TAFT. For the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, there are very important committee meetings being held at the present time, and I know that Senators attending them are anxious to complete their work. I will not yield for the purpose of the Senator suggesting the absence of a quorum. I would appreciate it if the majority leader would return to the floor. He has been temporarily called out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCLELLAN in the chair). The Chair has no control over the majority leader.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps a message could be sent to him.

Mr. President, the Members of the Senate must be convinced that an extensive and scandalous black market in meat and livestock exists today, and that the OPA controls which have been imposed upon the meat and slaughtering industries over a 4-year period have been responsible for the black market.

It must be admitted that price control has completely broken down at all levels in the livestock and meat industry.

It is equally clear that in addition to the annual cost of more than $2,000,000,000 in excess of ceiling prices, the black market wastes meat, hides, bones, offal, and grease worth many millions of dollars annually.

We all know that a large percentage of black-market meat, under Federal inspection standards, is wholly unfit for human food and is a serious threat to the public health.

It has also been established that because of black-market waste and destruction of huge quantities of glands and other materials, stocks of many pharmaceutical products are being depleted, and, if present conditions continue much longer, there will be an extreme shortage, if not an entire lack of essential drugs such as insulin, bile, pituitaries, thyroid, and antianemic preparations. This can and may cause the death of many people.

These facts are and have been known to the Office of Price Administration, the Office of Economic Stabilization, and the Department of Agriculture for many months. It has been obvious that if this situation was to be corrected Congress would have to do it.

The Senate fully appreciated that the public interest required that ceilings and other controls be removed from livestock and meat at an early date, and the Senate bill accomplished this result with the McFarland amendment.

The Senate conferees agreed to delete these decontrol provisions and the Senate is asked to concur for two reasons: First, that if the Senate insists on decontrol of meat it may mean no price control at all; and second that the conference report contains decontrol provisions which will bring about speedy decontrol of meat.

Mr. President, let us examine the conference bill and find out whether these reasons are sound and should prevail.

As to the first reason, while not admitting that it is necessarily true, I respectfully submit that if the Senate must choose between price control and the continuation of this scandalous, criminal, demoralizing, and disgraceful black market, our plain duty and the public interest requires us to vote to end the black market and put this important element in our daily diet back in respectable, legitimate, and law-abiding channels. That, in my opinion, is the far lesser of the two evils.

As to the second question, I do not believe that the adoption of the conference report holds out any hope or expectation of any administrative decontrol of meat in the near future.

If past performance is any evidence of future conduct, the prospects that either Messrs. Porter, Bowles, or Anderson will take any steps to decontrol meat is very slim. That the decontrol of meat was the only remedy for the black market has been obvious and admitted for months. Yet no steps have been taken and the black market has continued to grow worse day by day.

I have examined the conference report with care and I fail to find any mandate or any formula that assures that livestock and meat will be decontrolled at any time in the near future. The most that can be said for the conference report is that it contains a pious wish that the Secretary of Agriculture, or the Decontrol Board, will do so and thus remove from Congress the awful responsibility of not doing something about this scandalous situation when it had the duty and the opportunity to correct it.

Mr. President, let me repeat, I am unable to find either a mandate or formula that is certain to result in an immediate removal of controls from livestock and meat.

The formula which the conference bill sets up deals with "short supply" which is another way of saying that supply equals demand. While it may be ascertained with some certainty what the supply of meat is, how can the livestock and meat industry establish what the demand is?

What legal proof can be submitted on this issue? Can anyone prove what the demand might be when the Office of Price Administration will not permit the laws of supply and demand to function?

Mr. President, I respectfully submit that it would be much better for the Congress to be frank and tell the people that livestock and meat will be decontrolled only when the Secretary of Agriculture, in his uncontrolled discretion, as far as Congress and the courts are concerned, decides that it should be done.

Secretary Anderson, on April 4, 1946, before the House Committee on Agriculture said that he did not know what the present demand for meat is; that he thought it might be as much as 190 or 200 pounds per capita. It is perfectly obvious that the Secretary will not decontrol livestock and meat unless Congress makes it mandatory. I quote the Secretary's testimony:

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Secretary a question: Is there any scarcity of meat in the country at the present time, in view of the large cattle population which we have?

Secretary ANDERSON. Well, there need not be a scarcity of meat. There is sufficient cattle population to produce all the meat we need.

Mr. COOLEY. In other words, the supply has reached demand levels; is that right?

Secretary ANDERSON. I do not know how much meat this country would eat if you put on the shelves unquestionably unprecedented levels. We got up to 165 pounds, and it was not too much at all. We had never eaten anything like it. I think if you put 175 pounds or 180 pounds per capita average on the shelves at the present time, this country would wipe it up just as rapidly as it got there. So I do not know what the demand is. I know of no one who does know what the demand is.

I repeat, Mr. President, the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture, who is to have control of decontrolling, that "I know of no one who does know what the demand is."

Mr. COOLEY. Well, is not the relationship more or less normal at the present time; the supply and demand relationship?

Secretary ANDERSON. I am awfully sorry. I do not mean to dodge the question, but I want to say to you that I do not know what the demand is. I say to you that we have a sufficient supply of cattle on the range.

Mr. COOLEY. We never know what the demand is, do we?

Secretary ANDERSON. We have been able to calculate it pretty well here before. But what I am saying is that there is a sufficient supply on the range so that it ought to be able to take care of any demand which the American people may have and it would be a good thing if that demand could be supplied; because we have too many cattle on the range now, and I would like to see them slaughtered.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Secretary, in regard to the demand situation: In your opinion, does not the subsidy, by lowering the price, stimulate the demand?

Secretary ANDERSON. Yes; I have said that a good many varieties of meat are almost too cheap, because the demand tends to build up because of the fact that it is a very cheap form of food.

Mr. COOLEY. Well, was not the only justification for ceilings the fact that there was a scarcity of commodities?

Secretary ANDERSON. No; the justification for subsidies was to stabilize the cost of living.

Mr. COOLEY. I say the ceilings; the justification for OPA ceilings was the fact that there was a scarcity of commodities and you wanted to make those commodities go around and give the poor man the same chance as the rich man had in the market. Now, if supply reaches demand levels, I would like somebody to tell me, you if you can, what justification is there for price ceilings?

Secretary ANDERSON. If you can tell me what the demand level is, I could help you with the answer; but I have not been able to find out what the demand level is.

Mr. COOLEY. Somebody ought to be able to determine what the demand level is with regard to supplies, because they made the determination initially when we put the OPA into effect. We were told then that the demand was greater than the supply. Now, certainly somebody should make a determination somewhere along the way.

Secretary ANDERSON. All I will say to you is that in the second quarter of 1945 the supply level had gotten down to about 117 pounds, and there was ample demand to take care of it. Then it moved up to 140 pounds, and there was plenty of demand to take care of it. Now it has moved up to 175 or more, and the demand is still there; and the same would be true if you moved it to 200.

Mr. COOLEY. The determination will ultimately be made, either by those of us in Government, now or at some subsequent date. It will have to be made, because certainly these ceilings are coming off at some time in the future. My question is: Why can't the determination be made now so that Congress can intelligently legislate with regard to price ceilings in the future. I would like an answer if you can give it to me.

Secretary ANDERSON. I simply go back to the answer I have given. I know of no one who is able to say what the demand for meat is. It seems it is unlimited, for at present at least, and I suggest to you that it would move up at least to 190 pounds if there was a supply on the market.

Mr. President, if the distinguished majority leader will indulge me, for the purpose of clarifying the conference report in my own mind, I should like to ask him a few questions.

Official Government reports show that the total meat production in the United States in 1945 was 17 percent in excess of 1941 production, more than 20 percent in excess of the 1940 production, and 20 percent in excess of the meat production average for the years 1934–44, and that meat production in 1946 will be close to the high of 1945.

Does the majority leader think, under these circumstances, that the Secretary could, under the conference bill, certify that meat is in short supply and thereby permit the OPA to continue ceilings and other controls on meat after August 1, 1946?

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the terms of the conference report the Secretary of Agriculture is charged with the duty of making monthly certifications to the Price Administrator of agricultural commodities which are in short supply; and all those which are not so certified are to be taken from under controls, and ceilings are to be lifted. Taking the over-all production of cattle in the United States into consideration with consumption, it is my opinion that the Secretary of Agriculture would not be justified in certifying to the Price Administrator that meat or cattle are in short supply.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the able majority leader.

Goverment estimates for 1946 show a meat supply this year of approximately 150 pounds per capita, the largest amount available to consumers since 1911 and over 20 percent more than the 1935–39 average.

Is supply in balance with demand as a matter of law under the conference bill, and does the bill prohibit the Secretary of Agriculture from certifying that meat is in short supply under these circumstances?

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the Senator asking me another question?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator please repeat it?

Mr. WILSON. Government estimates for 1946 show a meat supply this year of approximately 150 pounds per capita, the largest amount available to consumers since 1911, and over 20 percent more than the 1935–39 average. My question is, Is the supply in balance with the demand as a matter of law under the conference bill, and does the bill prohibit the Secretary of Agriculture from certifying that meat is in short supply under these circumstances?

Mr. BARKLEY. My answer is the same as before, with this variation: Of course, the Secretary of Agriculture is to be the judge as to whether there is a balance between supply and demand. The Secretary's testimony before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate was that he thought that the imposition of the new quota system would improve the meat situation. When he was asked how long he thought it would take to determine that, he said 90 days. He was asked, if the problem were not solved in 90 days, what would be the remedy? His answer was, decontrol. So with the supply of meat, whether slaughtered or unslaughtered, and with the increased consumption of meat, which is due in part to the fact that people have more money with which to buy meat than they have had heretofore, and also in view of the fact that restaurants and hotels are getting a larger proportion of meat than they have had heretofore, my answer would still be that the Secretary of Agriculture would not be in a position, under those conditions, to certify that cattle or meat are in short supply.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILSON. I have two more questions.

Mr. TAFT. In connection with the statement of the Senator, I think it would be well to have in the RECORD Mr. Anderson's exact statement on this subject.

Mr. WILSON. I have some further questions. The Senator may insert the statement following those questions.

Mr. TAFT. It is related to this question.

Mr. WILSON. Another question is, if the majority leader will indulge me:

On January 1, 1946, according to Department of Agriculture estimates, the number of all classes of meat animals was well above the 1935–44 average. Beef animals numbered approximately 41,000,000 head, 10,000,000 head more than 1940, and 6,000,000 head more than the 1935–44 average. Approximately 39,000,000 head of dairy cattle is 3,000,000 head more than 1940, and 2,000,000 head more than the 1935–44 average.

Would the majority leader be willing to say that under the conference bill supply of beef cattle is in balance with demand, and that the Secretary would be prohibited from certifying that beef cattle are in short supply, and that, therefore, all ceilings on live cattle will be removed August 1, 1946?

Mr. BARKLEY. My answer to that question is no different from my answer to the others. It is the same question in a different form.

Mr. WILSON. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is nothing in the conference report which would prohibit the Secretary of Agriculture from making a certification that anything is in short supply. But the Secretary of Agriculture is an honest man. He is an intelligent man. He is a faithful public servant, and I do not for a moment suggest that he would deliberately misconstrue the law so as to be arbitrary with respect to the certification of anything that is in short supply or not in short supply.

While I do not wish to impose my own opinion or judgment on that of the Secretary of Agriculture, I think he would be justified, under this formula and under the conditions which the Senator has stated, in omitting beef and cattle from a certification of those things which are in short suppy.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I agree with all the fine statements which the majority leader has made with regard to Secretary Anderson. But the conference committee has brought in a bill, and I am asking the Senator for his interpretation of its provisions, not Secretary Anderson' interpretation.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the figures which have been given to us, and the figures which Mr. Anderson himself gave in his testimony before the committee, are accurate—and I am sure they are—my own opinion is that beef cattle are in full supply; that there is a balance between the cattle now in existence and the demand for meat. Whether those cattle will be slaughtered or kept in pasture is another question. But they are in existence, and in my judgment that existence creates the supply, regardless of any delay which may be brought about in their slaughter, and regardless of who may slaughter them.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the majority leader. I should like to ask one further question, if he will indulge me:

On January 1, 1946, there were more than 62,000,000 hogs on farms, which is more than 1,000,000 head in excess of the figure for 1940, and 7,000,000 more than the 1935–44 average.

Under these facts, does the conference bill automatically decontrol live hogs on August 1, 1946?

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator ask me if the conference bill would automatically decontrol?

Mr. WILSON. Through the certification of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BARKLEY. I believe that the production of hogs has not been increased as rapidly as that of cattle. I believe that the supply of cattle, in proportion to previous demand, or even present demand, is greater than that of hogs. My information is that for one reason or another there has been a decline in the production of hogs for the past several months. But in spite of that, if the figures given by the Senator are accurate, my answer would be the same as in the case of cattle, that there would be a sufficient supply of hogs to supply the demand for pork.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the majority leader very much.

Mr. President, a majority of the Members of the Senate are fully conversant with the facts establishing the existence of a country-wide black market in meat. It is fully understood that the only cure for the black market is the removal of all ceilings and controls from livestock and meat products.

It is clear, Mr. President, that the conference bill does not, as a matter of certainty, require the immediate decontrol of livestock and meat, but leaves the decision to the uncontrolled discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Apparently, Mr. President, Mr. Bowles, by his propaganda, has made this matter a political "hot potato." If such is the case, it is not a sporting thing for the Congress to pass this "hot potato" to Mr. Clinton Anderson. While we all agree that he is a fine upstanding gentleman and administrator, why should we expect him to have any more moral courage than the Congress has exhibited?

Mr. President, a vote for the conference report is a vote to extend the black market in meat for another year. So far as I am concerned, I am not willing to do it.

Mr. TAFT obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will yield to me, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hart	Myers
Andrews	Hawkes	O'Daniel
Ball	Hayden	O'Mahoney
Barkley	Hill	Overton
Bridges	Hoey	Pepper
Brooks	Huffman	Reed
Buck	Johnson, Colo.	Robertson

George	Millikin	Walsh
Gerry	Mitchell	Wherry
Gossett	Moore	White
Green	Morse	Wiley
Guffey	Murdock	Willis
Gurney	Murray	Wilson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, for the information of the Members of the Senate I believe that I should advise them that we shall attempt to remain in continuous session until the pending conference report has been disposed of. I have been asked, privately, many questions with respect to the matter, and I think it is well to advise all Members of the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, before stating the reasons why I believe the conference report should be agreed to, I wish to refer to one section of the report in order to state my views, inasmuch as a question has been raised.

On page 4, paragraph 6, of the conference report, the following language is found:

> No maximum price and no regulation or order under this act or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any service rendered with respect to any agricultural commodity, unless a regulation or order establishing a maximum price with respect to such commodity had been issued under this act prior to April 1, 1946.

Mr. President, that particular provision attempts to deal with cotton, and to provide that if an article had not been regulated during the war it should not be regulated now. The question has arisen whether it applies to an article such as cream, for example. Milk was regulated during the war and before April 1, 1946, but cream itself was not regulated. My interpretation of the language, and I believe that of the committee, is that in a case of that kind the agricultural commodity is milk, and that if milk was subject to a general order fixing a maximum price prior to April 1, 1946, all the products of milk such as cream, butter, and so forth, may be regulated hereafter even though they were not regulated before.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that milk has been controlled only since about June 1. Am I correct?

Mr. TAFT. No. Milk has been controlled right along. Maximum prices were fixed with respect to butter, but no maximum prices were fixed with reference to cream.

Mr. WHERRY. That is what I mean.

Mr. TAFT. The question has been asked, whether the language to which I have referred would prohibit the imposition of maximum prices on cream. The dairy interests, for example, were concerned because they wished to have controls continued on cream if they are to be imposed on butter and other products of milk. My only purpose in making this statement is that, in our interpretation, the words "agricultural commodity" apply only to the original commodity.

Mr. WHERRY. Which is milk.

Mr. TAFT. Which is milk, and do not apply to articles such as cream, processed from the original commodity.

Mr. President, with regard to the OPA, just as in past years I now find myself in a curious position, namely, between two extremes. Yesterday I listened with interest to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and to those of the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], both of whom will vote against the conference report, although for completely different reasons. The issues do not involve, basically, any fundamental principle of government. I believe that in this matter I take a moderate position, and I believe that the fact that there is such a violent opposition on both sides shows that at least the moderate position may be right.

Mr. President, the bill to continue the powers of the Office of Price Administration, as aprpoved by the conference committee, is a constructive proposal to deal with the pricing and inflationary problems during the reconversion period. Those problems are entirely different from the war problems, and there is no reason in the world why the legislative or administrative policy should continue exactly as it was during the war.

The bill is designed to accomplish the following policy:

First. It continues price and rent controls until June 30, 1947, and subsidies at a decreasing rate until April 1, 1947.

Second. It establishes a definite policy of gradually reducing price control and then terminating it on July 1, 1947. Section 1A says:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress * * * that the general control of prices shall be terminated * * * as rapidly as possible and in no event later than June 30, 1947, and on that date the office of Price Administration shall be abolished.

This was drafted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the majority leader, and he stated that Mr. Bowles had no objection to it. In short everyone agrees that price control in time of peace is inconceivable and the only difference is regarding the speed with which it is terminated. The bill, therefore, sets up the machinery by which the Price Administrator, the Secretary of Agriculture, and a Decontrol Board shall release commodities from price control as rapidly as they come into sufficient supply.

Third. The bill attempts to encourage production by requiring fair prices for each product produced, manufactured, or processed, and also gives the customary peacetime margin to wholesalers and retailers. It recognizes that many shortages today have resulted from the pricing policy of the OPA in requiring certain products to be sold at a loss or at cost. It aims to destroy the theory that you can increase wages in the absence of increased productivity without increasing prices. This theory that we could all get something for nothing lies at the base of the inflation which has already occurred and is likely to go further, no matter what is done with this bill. The new pricing formula destroys the "overall industry standard" which required one product to be sold at a loss if a profit is made on other products, and also changes the 1936–39 profit base for which there was never any legal authority. The new pricing formula simply requires that in fixing prices today, producers be allowed to add the increased cost per unit to the prices they charged in the base period fixed in the original Price Control Act, namely, October 1 to 15, 1941. The additional cost to be added is the average increase in cost of the entire industry, and so there is no guarantee of profit to any operator. No one can question the justice of the principle. The smear attacks made upon it only confirm the fact that the OPA has been forcing people to sell products at a loss, and is therefore responsible for the absence of many products from the market. I may add that the formula is to be applied by the OPA after evidence is presented and time given for consideration.

Fourth. The general effect of the bill, therefore, is to permit increases in price caused by increased costs, but to prevent those resulting from speculation and a great excess of demand over supply. That should be the only purpose of price control in the reconversion period. The only final solution for inflation is increased supply. To obtain that, we must encourage production by prices adequate to justify increased investment and extraordinary effort.

Fifth. The bill imposes no specific decontrols, and I am greatly disappointed in particular that it does not decontrol beef. I do not think there is any solution of the beef problem except decontrol, and it will remain a national scandal until such action is taken. Unfortunately, the House has twice voted against such decontrol, and if there is to be any bill at all I believe we must compromise with them. The Secretary of Agriculture is given the power to decontrol beef the day after the act passes, and I think he is inclined to do so. I think we should do so, but we could not get the House to agree.

The remarks of the Secretary of Agriculture made in the Senate committee I think are well worth reading. He said:

> Well, Senator, if I may, I would say to you that there have been many times when I have debated with myself very seriously as to whether or not the removal of many of these controls on meat might not be a good thing in view of the surplus population of our ranches—

At that time the Secretary had no power to do it, but of course he had considered the question—

> I would say that about as far as I have been able to persuade myself to go is to regard this present period when we are trying to reestablish slaughter controls as about the last effort to see if it will work. If with slaughter controls and with the increased force that OPA is now putting on this we are not able to direct these cattle back into decent channels, if we are not able to persuade people that they have got to buy in compliance, and if we are not able to get food for the American people at decent prices, then we surely ought to try something else; and the only other "something else" is an abandonment of these controls. I would hate to see that happen until we again have made a vigorous effort.

Then the late Senator Bankhead asked him:

> Mr. Secretary, right there you have made a very important statement—it impresses me—about your views. How long do you think it will take to make a fair test of whether the new program will be effective?
>
> Mr. ANDERSON. That is an awfully hard question for me to answer, Senator. They should do something with it in 90 days or abandon it.
>
> Senator BANKHEAD. Ninety days?
>
> Senator BARKLEY. Ninety, did you say?
> Mr. ANDERSON. Ninety days, or abandon it; yes.

Mr. Anderson was testifying on the first day of May, so that 90 days would expire on the first day of August.

I say to you if you cannot stop the black market that exists, if you cannot stop the situation that the large packers upon whom we have to depend for a good deal of the meat that we ship in export—and that is my principal interest just now—if they cannot handle something like a normal volume of it, if it all goes out where it is wasted, then something is wrong.

So, Mr. President, while we cannot persuade the House to decontrol, it seems to me that the Secretary of Agriculture to whom we have given this power is himself committed to a decontrol policy, certainly if present conditions continue, and I see no evidence to indicate that they will not continue.

There is no reason why petroleum and tobacco should not be promptly decontrolled. I have myself always been more doubtful about hogs, dairy products, and poultry because of the shortage of feed. When we first considered this matter that question had not arisen, but the mere shortage of feed itself is likely to cut down the supply of poultry, the supply of hogs, and the supply of dairy products, so that there will be a shortage simply because of the shortage in the supply of feed, and the demand for food and feed throughout the world.

The immediate decontrol of these products might precipitate a serious price rise in many foods because of the shortage produced by the shortage of feed.

Sixth. The bill provides an over-all, constructive policy for the liquidation of war controls which all agree must be abandoned as promptly as possible. It does not present a fundamental question between radicalism and reaction; it simply presents a question of degree, as to how fast we shall go.

In the conference the Senate conferees did everything they could to insist that the House accept specific decontrol, although I myself had some doubt about the wisdom of some of it.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] and I refused to sign the report because we felt we were acting in a representative capacity, that we represented the Senate and our colleagues, and that they felt there should by all means be decontrol of all these commodities. So we did not sign the report. But in spite of that, I feel we should now vote for the conference report in the Senate, and I propose to do so.

Mr. President, I am inclined to think that if we now reject this report we will be ending price control and will be defeating a bill to continue price control and rent control, because there is no evidence that we can reach any further agreement with the House. This is the final vote. We can request another conference, but the House has already voted specifically twice against the decontrol of beef, and I see no reason to think we can get them to change. So price control would be ended, because the two Houses could not agree. In other words, the Congress would end price control.

Of course, those who desire to end price control should therefore vote against the report. From the beginning I have thought that was a debatable question, but I came to the conclusion long ago that the proper thing to do was to continue limited price control throughout the ensuing period of 6, 9, or 12 months, and get rid gradually of the powers which have existed throughout the war.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. For those of us who are in favor of another effort being made to get a conference and an agreement on decontrol as to meat, poultry, poultry products, and dairy products, is there any other mechanical method we can use other than to vote down the conference report?

Mr. TAFT. No. The next motion would be a motion to ask the House for another conference. The House might or might not accede. I rather doubt they would accede. Even if they agreed to meet, having already voted twice against the decontrol of beef, I see no reason to think they would yield. I do not think we can assume that we have anything before us except one choice. It is an unfortunate choice. I should like to have the decontrol of beef in the report. I think it should be there, but I do not think it should be a determining factor in the whole policy.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. What would the Senator's answer be, however, if there were to be a further conference? That is the only mechanical procedure which can be followed by those of us who would like to see the conferees meet again and bring back a conference report which would provide for decontrol of livestock, dairy products, poultry, and poultry products. That is the only method we could use; it is the usual procedure, and it has been done. Often we have asked to have the conferees discharged after the vote has been taken. I am not in favor of that.

Mr. TAFT. The conferees, I may say, are automatically discharged by a vote against the report. They are then through.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that.

Mr. TAFT. And it then becomes necessary to begin all over again with a new conference committee.

Mr. WHERRY. But the usual procedure is that the same conferees are appointed unless objection is made to their reappointment. What I am trying to get at is, Are we to stand here and not make another effort? Is it simply futile to do anything? Must it be said that a vote against the conference report is a vote against price control, when there are those of us who feel that decontrol of meat should be provided for in the report? In view of the statement by the majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky, in answer to the questions asked him by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], and also in the light of the remarks made by the Senator from Ohio, it would seem that we are all agreed that meat ought to be decontrolled. It is very clear that we cannot get meat controlled under the terms of the present conference report. Then why should there not be another effort made with respect to meat?

Mr. TAFT. I think we come to a time in every bill when we either have to vote "aye" or "no" on the bill as it is, and we are always faced with that problem. We always have a package wrapped up for us with some things we like and some things we do not like, and we have reached that point in this bill, that is all. The House has twice voted the other way, and I do not think we will get an agreement along this line with the House. I say that if the House will not agree with us, I want to agree with the House, and that is what I am urging the Senate to do, even though the report contains one item which we do not like.

Mr. WHERRY. It has been brought out time and again that the House has voted against decontrol. I looked up the record which I mentioned on the floor yesterday, and I find that on the question of decontrol of meat there was a difference of only five votes. It was not until after the Senate had receded from its position respecting decontrol of meat that the question went back to the House for a vote. It was after the Senate receded from its position that the House later took a vote on the question. I ask the distinguished Senator if, in the light of that vote, he does not feel that if the bill were sent back to conference we could get the decontrol of meat in the report.

Mr. TAFT. I think there would be a disagreement, and no bill.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. The Senator from Kentucky, the majority leader, said the other day that if we did not vote for this bill we would be without price control. If the 1st of July comes and we have not agreed on price control, that does not preclude the Congress from enacting another bill, does it, even after the 1st of July? Is that not true?

Mr. TAFT. Of course, the OPA will expire the 1st of July, and I suppose if we enacted a bill on the 2d or 3d of July it would retroactively put everything into effect again, or at least we could so provide in the bill which might be passed.

Mr. MOORE. Or at any time in the month of July.

Mr. TAFT. In the meantime those in OPA could not draw salaries, and anyone could charge any price he wanted to. I think the situation would become so out of control if we let it go for more than a day or two that we would not be able to regain control of it.

Mr. MOORE. Would not that depend largely on what pressure the people of the country might bring on Congress?

Mr. TAFT. I think all the pressure that can be brought on Congress has been brought to bear on the left, on the right, and on every other side that I can think of. I do not see how the pressure can be any greater than it has been from all directions.

Mr. MOORE. Anyway, there would not be any reason why we should not try to reenact a price-control law if necessary.

Mr. TAFT. No; but, on the whole, I think this is a good bill. It is only respecting the decontrol of meat that I strenuously disagree with its provisions. But that is only one feature in a very wide economy. I know that in this Chamber it has been built up to more importance than all the other features of the report put together, but, as a matter of fact, it is only a small percentage of the total economy of the United States. While I greatly regret the situation with respect to meat, and I think it is a scandal, I think the machinery the conference report provides will decontrol it, so I think we may well let the House have its way here, and vote for the whole bill.

Mr. President, there is another possibility. If we pass the bill and the President vetoes it, I say that in that event, so far as I am concerned, the President takes the responsibility of ending OPA. In my opinion we are not going to try to pass any bill over his veto or pass any continuing resolution. When he gets this bill he has the same choice we have. He can either sign it and continue OPA on these terms, or he can refuse to sign it and end OPA himself, and it will be his responsibility and not ours.

Today we face that question. Are we going to end OPA or are we going to continue it on what I think is a reasonably restricted basis designed to encourage production, to eliminate the worst features of the checks OPA has put on production, even though we do not accomplish everything that some of us think ought to be accomplished?

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOSSETT in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. There were suggestions made here a few minutes ago that if OPA lapsed and was not renewed for a few days, no harm would be done. I think it is safe to say that all over the United States today dealers and speculators have acquired products of industry and agriculture which they are holding until the first day of July. They know they cannot lose by holding them. They know there is a chance to make money by holding them. Can the Senator imagine what would happen if OPA lapsed and there was a probability of its being renewed again a few days later? We would see $1,000 automobiles—if there are any such in the country now—selling for four or five thousand dollars apiece during those days. We would see meat that ordinarily sells for 18 cents a pound selling for 30 cents a pound by the carload because it would not be illegal to do it. We would see all other kinds of commodities sell for perhaps two or three times their actual value. In other words, during the 2 or 3 days when OPA lapsed there would be a speculators' and gamblers' heaven in the United States, and hundreds of millions of dollars would be made during that time when it would not be illegal to charge prices with only the sky as the limit. I dare say that there are many in this country today who are banking on that very thing happening. If by any chance this bill should go over until next week without any action being taken on it, the gambling fraternity and the speculative fraternity in the United States would be justified in erecting a memorial to Congress, because we then would have been the greatest benefactors they have ever known.

Mr. TAFT. I believe it would be most unfortunate to have a day or two intermission. I do not agree with all the threatening results suggested by the Senator from Vermont, but things would certainly move in that direction.

Mr. AIKEN. Gamblers and speculators would move awfully fast, too.

Mr. TAFT. I want to say only one word. The choice is whether we want OPA at all or not. I feel very strongly that OPA during the war was essential. I feel very strongly that with a $50,000,000,000 deficit we would have had a price rise that would have caused the greatest distress, the greatest upset of econmic stability that could possibly be imagined. Every country in the world had price control during the war simply because of the necessary inflation resulting from war. I think it was better administered in England and better administered in Canada than it has been administered here, but they did have it. And when prices broke loose, as in China, and some of the countries that are today under occupation, they went to three and four and even one hundred times what they were before the war. I think that anyone who calmly examines the question must conclude, no matter what the faults of price control, if we are going to incur annually a $50,000,000,000 deficit to conduct a war, it is necessary to have price control. I have no compunction for the part I played in establishing such control.

Now the question is, Shall we end that all at once on July 1? Shall we take all controls off? Shall we let everything go? Or are we still somewhat in the period when we are suffering from the results of that $50,000,000,000 deficit? We have not got back to a balanced budget. We are getting somewhere near there, but we are not there yet. The effect of that deficit is still felt. We still have great shortages—not shortages brought about as the result of OPA, but brought about by the war and by nature. Even the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] admits that we should continue control of rents, because rents would go up if we removed the control. Why? He admits the principle that a great shortage still exists. If we are to have control in the rent field, why not in other fields where the shortages exist? Shortages exist today in feed and flour, largely because of the demands throughout the world. We all know that they exist in feed. We hear that every day from people in every section of the country who wish to feed livestock. There is a large shortage of edible fats today in the world. It is calculated I think that there exist only two-thirds of the edible fats that are required. If control is released drive butter, lard, and every other edible fat will be driven to a point away beyond the prices of today. Certainly there is still a tremendous shortage of sugar. If there is no control over the price of sugar there will be a tremendous increase in the price of sugar. After the last war sugar went to 25 cents a pound after controls were taken off.

There is a shortage of lead and zinc which apparently is going to continue for some time. There are other serious shortages. If we take control off everything at once I think we are still in a period when there must result a serious increase in all prices far beyond anything that we have to pay today, more than is justified by present costs, simply because of the speculative demand created by war conditions. We are still from this standpoint in the war period. Therefore I believe that we would face a large increase in prices which would be speculative and beyond any cost increase. The result would be to create hardship and economic instability, and almost certainly to bring on a depression when prices come down, as they are bound to come down if we permit them to get out of all proportion to costs. So I feel very strongly that it would be a mistake to take off all price controls tomorrow or the next day. I think that the Office of Price Administration should be reasonable. One of the greatest handicaps we have had is that the present Price Administration is not reasonable. It wishes to hang on to every control, and hold it just as tightly as it did in time of war, although conditions are very different.

We have been denounced by Mr. Bowles at every opportunity during our consideration of the bill. One of the byproducts of the bill which I think would be of the greatest benefit to the entire country would be the resignation of Mr. Bowles, which he threatens to give us if this bill goes through. That certainly would be a very desirable result.

I agree that we are faced with a dilemma. We must take price control as administered—possibly under the present Administrator—or have no price control at all. We have tried to impose very definite rules on the Administrator, to see that his control is reasonable, does not interfere with production, and is abandoned as soon as it ought to be abandoned.

Certainly Mr. Bowles is entirely justified in thinking that the passage of this bill is a vote of no confidence in him. There is no other reason for authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture or a decontrol board to decontrol, except that this Congress has not the slightest confidence in Mr. Bowles. So the passage of this bill is evidence of no confidence, and I hope it may result in his resignation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Just a moment.

If it were not for the position of the Administrator, I should be in favor of simply continuing price control without any limitations, and leaving it to any man who sincerely desires to get rid of control as quickly as he can determine that it should be done.

I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I very much appreciate the tremendous labors which the members of the conference committee have performed in bringing out this report. I thoroughly sympathize with them in the job they have to do. But I was very much impressed by the statement of the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], who, in speaking about the provision to be found on page 11, in subsection (d) of the rewritten section 6, expressed the fear that the right of advisory committees in every industry to petition for an adjustment of price ceilings, and the provision which makes it mandatory for the Administrator to render a decision within 60 days, would result in producing confusion upon the one hand, and inducing producers of commodities with respect to which applications for increases are made to withhold those commodities from the market.

I quite agree with the Senator that production is the only effective answer to inflation, and I think the introductory paragraphs of this bill are excellent in that respect. It seems to me that if business and the OPA will cooperate in administering this law for the purpose of aiding production, we may, and probably will, enjoy great benefits from the act, even though it is subject to some criticism. But the criticism made by the Senator from California seems to me to be of such tremendous import that I should like very much to have the comment of the Senator from Ohio on the question, since I understand that he is largely the author of this provision.

Mr. TAFT. Let me say to the Senator that, regardless of what kind of price control we have, an industry advisory committee or an individual may always apply for a price increase, and he may wait, hoping that he will get it. That has been done. It is bound to happen. If we wish to avoid that danger, the only answer is to say, "There will be no price increases from now on," in which case we shall have no production of many articles. Many commodities are so priced that they cannot be sold except at a loss.

Furthermore, I suggest that the best thing for the Price Administrator to do is something which he has not done, namely, to sit down with the Industry Advisory Committee immediately, talk the question over with them, and give them the increase prescribed by the standards established in this bill, and give it to them at once. If he misses it by one-tenth of a cent, what difference does it make? If we wish proper enforcement of price control, we must have the cooperation of the industry. If the Administrator can reach an agreement with the Industry Advisory Committee as to what is a proper price increase and what is the proper application of this standard, he may make such an agreement tomorrow, and price increases in that industry are through, and individual operators in that industry are through with applications for price increases.

It seems to me that the objection made by the Senator from California is not sound.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator care to say anything about the suggestion of the Senator from California that this provision might provoke hoarding? We have had that experience.

Mr. TAFT. Today anyone may apply for a price increase; and if he thinks he is likely to get it—and he is often entitled to it—he may hold back some of his goods until he gets it. That is human nature.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The point made by the Senator from California was that since the decision must be made within 60 days, there would be an incentive to hoarding.

Mr. TAFT. All those people hope that the answer will be given within 60 days. They have been disappointed over and over again, but they always come back. They hope that the answer will be given in 60 days. Usually they are promised that it will be given in 30 days. Then the papers remain on someone's desk, and are finally sent to someone else. So the process takes quite a while.

I do not understand the point. If applicants are entitled to an increase, it seems to me that the more promptly the Price Administrator decides the question, the less hoarding there will be.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator from Ohio will recollect that when the debate was had on this amendment I spoke against it, on the ground that industry did not have the facilities for cost-pricing each individual product. At that time I made the assertion that no more than 20 percent of the units produced by the multiunit producers—that is, producers of various articles—were priced on the basis of cost. The Senator's amendment requires the finding of the 1941 cost and the intervening increases in costs.

To corroborate the position which I took at that time, I sent eight telegrams to well-known accountants throughout the country, and I have received six replies. The question which I asked in each case was the following:

> In connection with debate on stabilization laws, would appreciate your opinion by collect wire on following question: How generally could manufacturing and processing industries present to OPA, on reasonably reliable basis for pricing purposes but without conducting special accounting studies: First, unit total costs (including all manufacturing, selling, and administrative costs) of each major product they produce; and, second, the increase since October 1941 in unit total costs (including all such costs) of each such major product.

I shall not transgress upon the Senator's time to read all the replies. If he will permit me, should like to read one telegram. It comes from Mr. E. L. Kohler, president of the American Accounting Association. I think it would be well to read it into the RECORD at this point, because it bears upon the remarks made by the Senator from Wyoming as to the difficulties which may result from cost-pricing. The telegram reads as follows:

> CHICAGO, ILL., June 12, 1946.
> Senator BRIEN MCMAHON,
> Senate Office Building:
> OPA, with staff and time limitations, has no way of passing judgment on unit costs which industry might present. Individual previews are essential to each such presentation since the present temper of business enterprise in too many instances would result in unfairly loaded costs and hence inflationary prices. The spread of manufacturing overhead offers many alternatives, permitting, under current cost accounting principles, wide cost ranges while the spread of selling and administrative costs over different products is almost always impossible, both theoretically and practically. Only solution, in my opinion, lies in permitting OPA to pass on fairness of projected over-all profits of individual companies under proposed price schedules.
> E. L. KOHLER,
> President, American Accounting Association (Practicing Certified Public Accountant).

Telegrams to the same general effect have been received from T. Dwight Williams, president of the American Institute of Accountants; C. Oliver Wellington, past president of the American Institute of Accountants, and a partner in Scovell, Wellington & Co., certified public accountants; Carman C. Blough, director of research, American Institute of Accountants; and P. K. Knight, a partner in Arthur Andersen & Co., certified public accountants.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these telegrams be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> LOS ANGELES, CALIF., June 13, 1946.
> Hon. BRIEN MCMAHON,
> United States Senator,
> Senate Building:
> Your telegram forwarded to me here. With exception of larger companies in certain industries most multiproduct manufacturing and processing industries do not keep cost records on basis which would show unit product costs including allocated selling and administrative expense. I believe certified public accountants retained by individual companies could make reasonable estimates, somewhat similar to those used for renegotiation of war contracts, of such costs without too detailed studies which might serve as reliable guide to pricing policies. Will telephone you at first opportunity to be sure I have understood your question correctly.

> T. DWIGHT WILLIAMS,
> President, American Institute of Accountants (Practicing Certified Public Accountants).

> NEW YORK, N. Y.
> BRIEN MCMAHON,
> United States Senator:
> Answering telegram eleventh, manufacturing and processing industries cannot generally present total unit costs of each major product without special accounting studies. Certain businesses are reasonable simple and can determine substantially accurate total costs of major products, but most companies produce more than one product, with attendant difficulties of proper allocation of costs to each product. While a single company might present substantially accurate total costs for each major product, other companies in same industry probably would not determine costs on comparable basis. Special accounting studies made by me for certain industries have demonstrated lack of comparable figures.

C. OLIVER WELLINGTON,
Past President, American Institute of Accountants; Partner, Scovell, Wellington & Co., Certified Public Accountants.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 13, 1946.
Hon. BRIEN MCMAHON,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building:

Official reply to your telegram of eleventh instant not possible in time available and referred to me for personal opinion. Determination of unit total costs (including manufacturing, selling, and administrative costs) would require special studies in most industries. In many industries such studies would not require detailed accounting investigations provided reasonable estimates would be acceptable. Absence of reliable cost systems in some large companies, but particularly in smaller companies, however, would require the acceptance of assumptions and estimates so broad as to be dangerously unreliable unless detailed accounting studies were made. The problem of determining rise in costs since 1941 would require similar estimates as to 1941 costs. Since unit costs depend upon volume, any estimates of future costs would require the acceptance of assumptions and estimates as to probable future volume, as well as price and wage levels.

CARMAN C. BLOUGH,
Director of Research,
American Institute of Accountants.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 12, 1946.
Senator BRIEN MCMAHON,
Senate Office Building:

Although manufacturing costs after adjustments for recent substantial increases could be compiled readily by most companies, I seriously doubt that total costs, including selling and administrative expenses, could be presented by very many manufacturers or processors. In my opinion, comparatively few companies have developed unit total costs sufficiently reliable for pricing individual products. In many cases the available cost data reflect arbitrary and untested allocations of selling and administrative expenses.

P. K. KNIGHT,
Partner, Arthur Andersen & Co., Certified Public Accountants.

Mr. MCMAHON. I should like to say to the Senator from Ohio that this only bears out what I said at the time. The Senator has succeeded in inserting in the bill a price formula amendment which I think will make it impossible—if not impossible, certainly extremely difficult—to hold any price control at all. Frankly, I am in a bit of a dilemma as to whether or not to vote for the conference report. I think we all are. That is a decision which each Senator must make for himself.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, let me say in reply to the Senator from Connecticut that in the first place the OPA has followed exactly this formula with respect to cotton textiles, and also with respect to another industry. The Price Administration was not required to place this system in effect. It did so on its own initiative, as a method of determining what the increase should be.

Furthermore, the burden of proof is on the industry advisory committee. It must assemble the figures to prove the need for the increase. If it does not do so, the industry can obtain only the increase which it substantiates to the satisfaction of the Price Administrator. So it seems to me that the objections are not sound.

Mr. President, I have only to conclude. As a matter of policy we should continue price control in a modified form for another year. I would prefer to continue it for 9 months, but a continuation for a year does not make very much difference. Congress will be back here by then, and Congress can end it. I hope that under our general directive, price control will be ended sooner than that. I hope it will be gradually ended, as we have directed. I think it would be a great mistake to bring it to an end now.

Although I think provision for the decontrol of meat should have been included in the conference report, nevertheless, under all the circumstances and in view of the provision that the Secretary of Agriculture shall be permitted to exercise his discretion and in view of his well-known views, I believe that he will decontrol beef, even though we have not been able to persuade the House of Representatives to vote to do so.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Ohio a question. All the arguments which have been advanced in favor of the conference report certainly could have been advanced prior to the conference itself. I do not wish to ask a personal question; but as I understand the situation, the distinguished Senator from Ohio did not sign the conference report.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I now understand that the Senator from Ohio is going to support the conference report.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I wonder what has happened between the two points in time. Has anything happened which fundamentally has changed the Senator's mind in regard to the matter?

Mr. TAFT. In the first place, as a conferee I felt that I was representing the Senate's viewpoint, and I intended to insist upon it to the last moment. Therefore, because of my position in that regard, and also in view of the fact that I felt that a majority of my colleagues on this side of the aisle felt the same way, and because I felt that I was there in a representative capacity, I voted against the report. But I told the conferees on the part of the House that if they would take the question of decontrol to the House and have the House vote upon it, and the House turned it down, I would yield.

Mr. WHERRY. That was with respect to the decontrol of beef, was it?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

But now I think I should vote for the conference report to continue price control for a reasonable period of time on what I think are perfectly logical and reasonable terms. I admit that maladministration may occur. But Congress cannot possibly administer any of the laws it passes. That is a chance which Congress has to take. The administration of the laws is the responsibility of the administration—in this case, of the present administration. If it falls down in the work of administration, that is its fault. It is our job to adopt what we think is the proper policy, assuming that there will be some kind of reasonable administration of the policy.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator from Ohio has been assured in any way by the Department of Agriculture that there might be an early decontrol of meat.

Mr. TAFT. No; I simply read what the Secretary of Agriculture said. He himself said that if the slaughtering quota policy did not work in 90 days, there would be only one thing to do, and that would be decontrol. That was his opinion.

Now we give him the power to decontrol. Under the circumstances, I think he must follow the well-known position he has taken, if we give him the power to carry it out.

Mr. WHERRY. I am asking these questions because I wish to obtain the interpretation which the Senator from Ohio makes. I can readily understand why the Senator remained in complete accord with the record made in the Senate, and why he refused to sign the conference report.

Now, because it is the Senator's personal right to vote as he pleases, according to his opinion, I am asking whether he feels in his own mind that meat should be decontrolled.

Mr. TAFT. I think beef should be decontrolled. I have always been doubtful about the decontrol of pork. The decontrol of pork will decontrol corn. The two cannot be separated. The decontrol of pork will decontrol lard; and the decontrol of lard will mean the decontrol of all edible oils, of which a great shortage exists. That will force a tremendous increase in the price of fats at the present moment. I have always been doubtful about that. As a matter of policy, I tried to see whether we could separate the decontrol of beef from the decontrol of pork and the decontrol of dairy products. I think it could be done, just as a technical matter.

But I received no support upon that suggested compromise from either the conferees on the part of the Senate or the conferees on the part of the House or from other Members of the Senate. So I decided that all of it had to get together, and that we either had to decontrol beef and pork and dairy products all at once, or not decontrol any of them. I was doubtful whether the decontrol of all of them would be wise.

As to the decontrol of beef, I have no question about that, because beef has reached a point where it cannot be controlled. It has reached a point where we are bound to have a continued black market in beef if we continue to attempt to have control over beef.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOSSETT in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. In the light of the statement the Senator from Ohio has just made, namely, that beef and pork and grain should all go together——

Mr. TAFT. I do not agree to that. But I said that I could not obtain any support for my view that they could be separated.

Mr. WHERRY. In view of the statement the Senator from Ohio has made relative to the short supply of pork, and I believe the Senator made such a statement, does he believe there is any chance of decontrolling any of those products during the life of this measure?

Mr. TAFT. Yes; I think beef can be decontrolled very easily.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator from Ohio believe that anything in addition to beef can be decontrolled during the life of this act?

Mr. TAFT. I think probably dairy products can be decontrolled after a reasonable time.

Mr. WHERRY. Within the life of the act?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator from Ohio believe that can be done under this act?

Mr. TAFT. Yes, of course; if there is a sufficiently large corn crop, perhaps pork can be decontrolled.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it the interpretation of the Senator from Ohio that that could happen? Does the Senator from Ohio believe it can be done?

Mr. TAFT. I think it can be done. Of course, we require the administration to decontrol all unimportant commodities by the 1st of January, before the Congress will return. Certainly we indicate our belief that the administration should decontrol the other things just as quickly as possible, and we require the Secretary of Agriculture, if he is to continue to control, to certify that they are in short supply. In other words, if the controls are to be continued, the Secretary of Agriculture must certify that the goods so controlled are in short supply. He does not need to say they are plentiful. He does not need to step in and say, "Decontrol." All he must say is that, "I cannot any longer certify that these things are in short supply." Then they must be decontrolled.

So the formula is all right, if it is administered in good faith, in compliance with the intent of Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Earlier today the Senator from Iowa [Mr WILSON] told the Senate that official Government reports show that the total meat production in the United States in 1945 was 17 percent in excess of 1941 production, more than 20 percent in excess of the 1940 production, and 20 percent in excess of the meat production average for the years 1934–1944, and that meat production in 1946 will be close to the high of 1945.

Under those circumstances, does the Senator from Ohio believe that the Secretary of Agriculture could, under the conference report, certify that meat is in short supply, and thereby permit the OPA to continue price ceilings and other controls on meat after August 1, 1946?

Mr. TAFT. Yes; I think he can so certify, but I do not think he would do so. I do not know; I have not studied those figures. But the general impression from all the evidence we have would bear that out.

Mr. Anderson himself said there is no solution except decontrol if the present system fails—and it has practically failed since he testified 2 months ago. That seems to me to show that he will wish to decontrol if he possibly can. The evidence seems to show that he can, so far as I am able to analyze it.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask one other question. Would the Senator from Ohio agree with the answer given by the majority leader to the question propounded by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] relative to the decontrol of meat?

Mr. TAFT. I agreed with his statements. I did not hear the last answer, the one with regard to pork. I agreed with the statements with regard to beef.

Mr. WHERRY. If pork were in a favorable position, as the figures which the distinguished Senator from Iowa gave for the year 1946 would show, would the Senator from Ohio agree with the position taken by the majority leader?

Mr. TAFT. In the first place, let me say that I do not know what his position was. I happened to be out of the Chamber at the time.

Mr. WHERRY. He took the same position on it as he did regarding beef, provided that the figures cited by the Senator from Iowa were correct.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I am not sure about pork, because I think the figures were that there were a million head more than there were at a previous time. On the other hand, the demand for fats may have increased. I am not prepared to answer as to pork.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. REED. I was very much attracted by the statement of the Senator from Ohio that the conference report would be adequate if the OPA carried out its administration in good faith, in accord with the intent of Congress. Can the Senator from Ohio recall a period when the OPA has done that?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I previously stated my full opinion of the present administration of the OPA Act. I did so when the Senator from Kansas was out of the Chamber, I believe. However, of course in this case we have given the administration of the act to persons other than those in the Office of Price Administration. We have created a board entirely outside the Office of Price Administration. The members of the board are to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and the board is to serve with respect to the question of decontrol. We have given the Secretary of Agriculture, whose views we know, very wide power both to increase prices and to decontrol agricultural products. So I think there is every reason to believe that the policy laid down by Congress will be followed in good faith, at least by those officials.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Ohio that those provisions are a very definite improvement. But I always have had the suspicion, which I think the Senator from Ohio shares, that heretofore the OPA in virtually all of its administrative acts has treated with contempt the intent of Congress and the expressions of Congress. I believe that much of the trouble now arising comes from the failure of the OPA to administer the law with some sense, in accordance with the intent of the Congress and the words of the Congress.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kansas is correct.

Mr. President, all I have to say is that I believe the conference report represents a reasonable method of gradually liquidating price control over the period of the next 12 months. I believe that to be a policy which Congress should adopt. In spite of some lack of confidence in the Office of Price Administration, in spite of my apprehensions of the manner in which the act may be administered, and in spite of the fact that we shall not have the decontrol of beef which I think we should have, required by an act of Congress, I believe the welfare of the country demands that the Senate agree to the conference report.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, far be it from me to prolong this debate, which has perhaps been prolonged too far already. I rise, however, because the distinguished Senator from Ohio stated that we are going to give to the President a law, and if it does not work the blame will be upon him. That is what I understood the Senator from Ohio to say. If I am correct and he is not correct, and if some of the leading accountants of the United States who have replied to my inquiry are correct, the Senator from Ohio will, it seems to me, have to bear a great share of the responsibility for the nonworkability of this law which we are about to hand to the President of the United States. If results occur which neither he, I, nor any other American desires, I believe the American people will be in a position to judge intelligently as to the quantum of blame which should rest at the door of the senior Senator from Ohio, and that which should rest at the door of the President of the United States. So, Mr. President, only the future can determine the answer to the question.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 2543. An act to require weekly newspapers enjoying mailing privileges to make sworn statements with respect to their circulation;

H. R. 6064. An act to extend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6084. An act to amend the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, so as to provide an increase in pay for personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I have prepared some extended remarks to make on the subject of the OPA later in the debate which is now taking place. At the present time I wish to make a few preliminary remarks with reference to some telegrams which I have received today.

Yesterday I had the idea that if all the Senators who would like to see the OPA abolished would join in a movement to discuss fully on this floor the OPA, I would be glad to assist them and we could talk until Monday morning. That would result in the expiration of the OPA at midnight Sunday night, and the citizens of America would be enabled to wake up Monday morning and find themselves again under the American flag and not under the Communist flag.

There seems to be hesitation on the part of some Senators to completely abolish the OPA by the method which I have suggested. I have received no promise of any assistance. I received none yesterday, and I have received none today. Indeed, it would be a very difficult task for one man to talk about the OPA continuously from now until Monday morning, although there is plenty which could be said derogatory of the OPA Act. Enough could be said to consume much more time than one human being, speaking under constant pressure, could occupy during the period of time intervening between now and next Monday.

The statement which I issued to the press yesterday has been received throughout the United States, and has resulted in many telegrams coming to me today. I have wondered if perhaps the same persons who are telegraphing me are not also telegraphing other Senators and asking them to assist me to abolish the OPA. I have very little evidence in that direction, but I believe that what I have stated is probably taking place.

I appreciate very much the time which has been consumed today by some of the Senators who are opposed to the OPA. I appreciate the splendid work which has been done by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE], by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], and other Senators who have spoken. I have received more support than I expected to receive, and none of it was promised to me.

Mr. President, I now wish to read some of the telegrams which I have received from persons throughout the United States. I understand that Senators often receive inspired messages with regard to a particular subject which may be before the Senate. But the telegrams to which I have referred are spontaneous, and they come from the rank and file of the American citizens who are voicing their opinions with regard to OPA.

I am surprised that I have received as many telegrams as I have received because, under the oppression of the communistic bureaucrats who operate the OPA, the people of this country have been regimented until they have almost given up hope. They believe that their Government has gone. I am surprised that some of them would even take time and spend the money necessary to send me the telegrams which I have received. I am sure they have done so because they see a little ray of hope in the United States Senate. The life of the OPA rests at the present time with the Senate. The life of that Communist organization may be snuffed out if Senators will continue to discuss the matter and give to it the consideration which it needs before they decide that they are ready to vote on the conference report which has as its purpose the extension of the life of the OPA.

I may say, Mr. President, that I have also received telegrams from persons who approve the OPA. They do not wish to have it abolished. I will read those telegrams as well as the telegrams which I have received from persons who are opposed to the OPA. It will not take long to read them. They are very few in number. [Laughter.]

Perhaps I should read them first and get them out of the way. Here is a telegram from Texarkana, Ark.:

TEXARKANA, ARK., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:

Believe repeal price control this time would result in repetition 1919 and disastrous to white-collar salaried workers. Respectfully submit price control should be retained another year, but also believe its administration could be greatly improved. Uncontrolled prices for 12 months would pile debt upon white-collar salaried employees that would take years to repay. They are in no position to have living costs doubled.

OTTO ATCHLEY.

Here is a telegram from Emporia, Kans.:

Am railroad man. Kill OPA any way possible.

G. M. HOBROCK.

Mr. President, that telegram got into the wrong pile. The sender of it asks that OPA be killed in any way possible. [Laughter.]

Here is a telegram from Babylon, N. Y.:

BABYLON, N. Y., June 27, 1946.
Senator O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:

I bet you are afraid to pull a filibuster. Talk is cheap.

DR. M. W. BROWN.

I have no intention of pulling a filibuster. I merely wish to discuss the subject, and everything which I shall say about the OPA will be germane.

I have also received the following telegrams:

WILMINGTON, DEL., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL:

Please don't try to veto the OPA bill by a filibuster. Let the majority rule.

WALTER BINDER.

DALLAS, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

You say OPA is un-American. Good Americans agree filibustering is far more un-American.

E. W. FAGER.

PORT ARTHUR, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:

We really do not expect this telegram to change your attitude on price control but wish to let you know that we deeply resent that attitude. We think Chester Bowles has been a friend of the American housewife, and you evidently are not. We regret that we voted for you.

Mrs. A. F. FERRIS.
Mrs. R. F DOERGE.

[Laughter.]

Naturally, a Senator would expect to receive a telegram like that from persons who regretted that they had voted for him.

I have also received the following telegrams:

HOUSTON, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Request your abstaining from filibustering or voting against OPA extension.

JOHN K. GRAVEN.

DETROIT, MICH., June 27, 1946.
Hon. Senator O'DANIEL of Texas,
Care Senate Chamber,
Washington, D. C.:

Press reports you are promoting filibuster to kill OPA. Hope it becomes a boomerang which will sadden your days and your associates exactly as you are planning against the American public.

BENJAMIN NEWMAN.

SHERMAN, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:

As the poor man's friend we are depending on your support of OPA Senate bill. Don't let us down.

H. C. SCOTT.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Please do not use unfair filibuster defeat majority both Houses.

Mr. and Mrs. ROY ROPER.

Mr. President, I have read about eight or nine telegrams all in favor of the OPA. I believe that I have a few more in the same pile. I wish to be fair, and I shall read all the telegrams which I have received on both sides of the subject.

Here are some more telegrams:

BAY CITY, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate Floor,
Washington, D. C.:
Join the other immortals of great Texas in your fight for freedom. We are all for you.
Your friend,
EARL F. SELMAN.

ST. LOUIS MO., June 27, 1946.
Senator O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:
We are with you through your fight to get rid of the OPA
BUSIEKS MARKET.

Mr. President, the next telegram comes from a market which probably has bare shelves.

I read the following telegrams:

DALLAS, TEX., June 27, 1946.
W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:
Am for you one hundred percent. Keep on filibustering until the thirtieth and make OPA die a deserving death. Get the bureaus of OPA out of Washington and so far back into the hills that they will never bother anyone again.
NEIL L. NEWTON.

Here are the telegrams:

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:
Thank God your courageous fight for American rights. We must win.
Mrs. NANCY GREGORY.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senator from Texas,
Washington, D. C.:
Good luck on your OPA filibuster. Chester Bowles and his bunch worse than the Russians.
PHILIP B. WELD.

Mr. President, I am reading these telegrams in the hope that the report of the telegrams pouring in will reach the ears of more disheartened American citizens who have been subjected to abuse and regimentation, so that they will know that there are still some people in the United States who believe in fighting this monstrous thing, and possibly more telegrams will come in.

I have also received the following telegrams:

ENDICOTT, N. Y., June 27, 1946.
Honorable Senator O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:
Senator O'DANIEL threatens to kill OPA by filibuster. You will do your country one of the most distinguished services of recent times.
WALTER L. JOHNSON CO.

Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
House of the Senate,
Washington, D. C.:
Do any and everything to kill OPA. We're for you.
Mr. and Mrs. LUTHER BUNCH.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:
Hold that line. The future of America depends upon your success. We are with you 100 percent.
SAN ANTONIO BREAKFAST CLUB.

AUSTIN, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator LEE O'DANIEL,
Statehouse, Washington, D. C:
More power for your long talk from now till—
E. B. NORWOOD.

HACKENSACK, N. J., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:
Thank God there is one real American left.
FRANK W. PACKARD.

KANSAS CITY, MO., June 27, 1946.
Senator O'DANIEL,
Senate Building,
Washington, D. C.:
If you want food for your country get the Senate floor and hold it until OPA bill dies a natural death. You will be your country's hero No. 1. I wish you well.
HOMER C. WHITE.

DALLAS, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Hon. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senator, Washington, D. C.:
Stay in there and pitch hard. I am for you.
WILLIAM H. HODDE.

AMARILLO, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:
Congratulations on the filibuster. Don't quit till OPA is killed. All thinking honest people behind you.
LELAND W. ABBOTT.

DELHI, N. Y., June 27, 1946.
Senator O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:
If OPA is continued as is will force remaining egg producers in this section out of business. My 2,000 layers go to butcher next week if you don't help us now. How many Congressmen can operate with larger outgo than income.
M. C. RUSSELL.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:
Get rid OPA and let's get Uncle Sam back in America. Whole set-up is phony. Four hundred thousand tons potatoes permitted to rot; all our rice shipped abroad. OPA prices prevent selling or buying. OPA makes everything scarce, therefore cost more. OPA harbors and produces strikes and absolutely violates all American laws. Give them —— and stick. Am for you forever.
R. M. BRUNER.

It will be noted that the telegrams come from all over the United States. Here is another one from Texas—and Texas is still in the United States:

SAN ANGELO, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:
You are right. Stay right in there. Don't let them outdo you. We are all for you.
PETE RECTOR.

FORT WORTH, TEX, June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:
Texas will be grateful if you will filibuster OPA. My information from many parts of the State indicate the feeling that we cannot afford OPA and just rise in prices to induce production and people will not buy bonds as long as OPA exists.
HARLAN K. BAKER.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Capitol, Washington, D. C.:
We are back of you, fight on.
MR. AND MRS. GEO. D. GRAY.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., June 27, 1946.
Senator O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:
Congratulations and good luck to a true American.
IVAN H. BROWN.

CLOVER, S. C., June 27, 1946.
Senator O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:
Congratulations on your American way and democratic principles.
W. W. MCCONNELL.

MEXIA, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:
Stay in there. We are for you. Forty head of beef cattle in my pasture. Not 1 pound of beef in 10 days in my store.
C. E. HEROD.

Mr. President, is not that a ridiculous statement? There is a man running a store who has 40 head of beef in his pasture, and not a pound in his store.

I have also received the following:

TYLER, TEX., June 27, 1946.
W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:
I am for you, Pappy. Give them the works, and God bless you.
W. EDWARD LEE.

ALTON, ILL., June 27, 1946.
Senator LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:
Best of luck on your filibuster—hope you succeed.
PELOT BOTTLING CO.

PEARSALL, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator LEE O'DANIEL:
Congratulations, do hope you will succeed.
Mrs. G. R. SANDERS.

FORT WORTH, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:
Stay in there and talk it to death. Be the David to Goliath.
P. E. GLENN,
LILLIAN GLENN,
JESSE COLE,
EMMA COLE,
VIOLA MCLEOD,
JAMES MCLEOD.

PEORIA, ILL., June 27, 1496.
Hon. Senator O'DANIEL,
United States Senate Building,
Washington, D. C.:
Hold the floor, stop the OPA, we want meat.
WILLIAM H. KECK.
JOSEPH W. LEE.

There are many people who want meat, and there is plenty of meat, but OPA has headed it off. It has the cattle in another pasture.

Here is a telegram from Mary R. Long, of Dorchester, Mass.:

DORCHESTER, MASS., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Good luck. Keep talking. Americans want free markets, not black markets.

MARY R. LONG.

It is said about 80 or 90 percent of the beef is going through black markets. Someone is buying it. There are many people in the United States who would rather buy in the black market than starve to death.

Listen to these telegrams:

FORT WORTH, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Eyes of Texas on you. Kill obnoxious OPA.

CHARLIE STOWE.

LOMBARD, ILL., June 27, 1946.
Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

May your filibuster against the OPA be successful. Millions of Americans support you.

Ten members of Lombard's Women's Republican Club:

MRS. E. G. GODDARD,
Legislative Chairman.

That is quite a number of millions. I also present the following:

CROSBYTON, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Stay in there and fight. Restore the American form of government. Vote against OPA.

M. L. WILLIAMS.

KIRKWOOD, MO., June 27, 1946.
Senator LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:

You have our full support in your fight against OPA.

LITZSINGER GROCERY.

NEW YORK, June 27, 1946.
Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Congratulations on your courageous stand. Do away with bureaucracy and return to free enterprise.

FORMER NEW DEAL DEMOCRAT.

It seems that he has become converted to Americanism.

WICHITA FALLS, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:

Talk 'til Monday. We are with you.

PITMAN GRAIN CO.

CROSBYTON, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Keep the floor, Senator. Let's kill OPA once and for all. People down here have a bellyful of Government intervention in our business.

JACK ARTHUR.

That is Texas plain talk, Mr. President. They have not a stomach full of very much of anything else. There is a shortage of food in Texas, where we have enough cattle to feed the whole United States, if the other States would secede and let us ship meat to them. In Texas we are still under the United States rule. We did not used to be, but we are now, so we have to abide by the OPA rules, as everyone else in America has to.

Listen to this message:

DALLAS, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:

We understand that you are going to try to filibuster the OPA out of existence. Stay in there. We are with you.

E. C. DEATON.

This comes from Lillian Chandler, of Dallas, Tex.:

If by the same dauntless courage you have always shown, you on the expiration date help abolish OPA, you should be made—

I am too modest to read the remainder of that telegram. That is making too much out of me. However, many people in Texas think a great deal of me.

Here is a telegram from J. M. Carrington, of Paxton, Ill.:

Thank God for one American in the Senate. Keep talking until OPA dies. Small business needs more like you.

I wish we could get all Senators who want to see OPA abolished to rise on the Senate floor and vote against this report.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1654) to provide for the registration and protection of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 34.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 7, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 35, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with the the following amendments: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Act; or

"(d) at any time in the case of a certification mark on the ground that the registrant (1) does not control, or is not able legitimately to exercise control over, the use of such mark, or (2) engages in the production or marketing of any goods or services to which the mark is applied, or (3) permits the use of such mark for other purposes than as a certification mark, or (4) discriminately refuses to certify or to continue to certify the goods or services of any person who maintains the standards or conditions which such mark certifies."

On page 44 of the House bill strike out beginning with line 18 down to and including line 2 on page 45 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The term 'certification mark' means a mark used upon or in connection with the products or services of one or more persons other than the owner of the mark to certify regional or other origin, material, mode of manufacture, quality, accuracy or other characteristics of such goods or services or that the work or labor on the goods or services was performed by members of a union or other organization.

"The term 'collective mark' means a trademark or service mark used by the members of a cooperative, an association or other collective group or organization and includes marks used to indicate membership in a union, an association or other organization."

And the Senate agree to same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the Federal Trade Commission may apply to cancel on the grounds specified in subsections (c) and (d) of this section any mark registered on the principal register established by this Act, and the prescribed fee shall not be required."

And the Senate agree to same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and on page 18, line 23, of the House bill strike out "hereof." and insert the following: "hereof; and

"(4) no incontestable right shall be acquired in a mark or trade name which is the common descriptive name of any article or substance, patented or otherwise."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(7) That the mark has been or is being used to violate the antitrust laws of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

CLAUDE E. PEPPER,
JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
A. W. HAWKES,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

FRANK W. BOYKIN,
FRITZ G. LANHAM,
FRED A. HARTLEY, JR.,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

I will say, for the information of the Senate, that the conferees were unanimous. The conference report provides for the registration and protection of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the conference report has already been adopted by the House of Representatives. A similar bill passed the House three times, and passed the Senate, I believe, at least twice. As I have said, the conference report is unanimous.

Before the matter is acted on, I should like to have an opportunity given to the able Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] to make a statement which represents the interpretation and intent of the conferees in connection with the report.

Mr. HAWKES. I thank the Senator from Florida.

Mr. President, I desire to say, so far as I am concerned, that I think this is the consummation of a very important piece of work which has been under consideration by the Congress for more than 8 years. A similar bill has passed the House, I am told, four times, and has passed the Senate three times, but never in the same session of Congress. It is a matter in which business throughout the United States is vitally interested, and I am sure it will make practically everyone in business throughout the United States happy to know that we have finally brought the matter to a conclusion.

I should like to read into the RECORD practically the same statement of intent as was read into the House day before yesterday when the conference report was adopted by the House. The statement of intent was read into the RECORD in the House by Representative LANHAM, who is the author of the bill:

The legislative history of this act is long and extensive. Many hearings have been held over a period of almost 8 years. Those hearings may, and probably will, be referred to by the courts in construing and interpreting the provisions of the act. However, there is one provision in the act which has no recorded legislative history, and in order that the purpose and intent of the Senate may be made perfectly clear I wish this statement to appear in the record as an explanation of our intent and as a part of the legislative history of the act.

This Trade-Mark Act places in one statute all the Federal law relating to the subject and repeals the prior laws specifically referred to in its provisions. It reenacts much prior legislation and creates new rights, some of which are substantive and others procedural. It implements our international commitments and brings the trade-mark law of the United States down to date, recognizing the changes in business and commercial practices since the act of 1905 became the law.

Mr. President, I might save the time of the Senate by asking unanimous consent to have the remainder of the statement printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks at this point, inasmuch as, with the exception which I will now read, it is practically the same as the statement which was put into the RECORD in the House of Representatives day before yesterday. I should like to add that the exception is that when the trade-mark is used to violate the antitrust laws, then such violation of the laws can be used as a defense against one who sues for infringement.

I should like to read this statement:

This exception means, and should mean, that a trade-mark owner who sues another user for infringement must come into court with clean hands, and if he is using the mark to violate the antitrust law he is subject to be contested and to have his violation used as a defense.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the statement may be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the remainder of the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Senate amended the act and the conference committee has reconciled its differences. I believe it necessary, however, that specific reference be made to one amendment in order that its interpretation may be made clear.

Paragraph (b) of section 33 of the act has been amended by adding subparagraph (7) in the following words:

"(7) That the mark has been or is being used to violate the antitrust laws of the United States."

The prior statutes enacted by Congress on this subject provide that the certificate of registration shall be prima facie evidence of ownership and the right to use the mark. H. R. 1654 changes this rule and provides that "the right of the registrant to use such registered mark in commerce for the goods or services on or in connection with which such registered mark has been in continuous use for five consecutive years subsequent to the date of such registration and is still in use in commerce shall be incontestable" if the conditions of section 15 of the act are met. Section 33 (a) of this act reenacts the prima facie evidence rule which is applicable from and after the date of registration of a mark under the act of March 3, 1881, the act of February 20, 1905, and under this bill. Section 33 (b) provides that where the registered mark has become incontestable under section 15, the certificate of registration shall be conclusive evidence of the registrant's "exclusive right to use the registered mark in commerce on or in connection with the goods or services specified in the certificate."

However, section 33 (b) contains seven exceptions to the rule that the certificate of registration shall be conclusive evidence of the rights of the registrant even where the provisions of section 15 have been met. Some doubt has been expressed on the following points:

(1) Do these seven exceptions, including the amending paragraph (7) with reference to the violation of the antitrust laws of the United States, lay down substantive rules of law or substantive defenses which go to the validity and enforceability of the mark, or do they relate only to the weight of evidence to be given to the certificate of registration?

(2) What is the meaning of the words "used to violate the antitrust laws", as found in paragraph (7) of paragraph (b) of section 33?

It is clear from the language of the act and from the congressional history of the act as it is found in the hearings and reports that the seven defenses or defects listed under paragraph (b) of section 33 are intended to relate to and to affect the weight of the evidence to be given to the certificate of registration where the owner claims the benefit of the incontestable rule and where the opposite party can, by the weight of the evidence, establish any one of the things listed in the seven paragraphs in paragraph (b); but these seven paragraphs are not intended to enlarge, restrict, amend, or modify the substantive law of trade-marks either as set out in other sections of the act or as heretofore applied by the courts under prior laws. A trade-mark registrant who is shown to have used his mark to violate the antitrust laws is denied the benefit of the rule that his certificate of registration is conclusive evidence of his right of ownership and his right to the exclusive use of the mark, and such use by the language of section 33 (b) of the bill is made a defense just as proof that the use of the mark was obtained fraudulently is a defense. Under these circumstances, his certificate of registration is only prima facie evidence of his right and he must be prepared to carry the additional burden of proof as is necessary under the laws and statutes as they existed prior to the passage of this act. One of the valuable new rights created by the act is the incontestable right after 5 years' use of the mark, and the corollary thereto that the certificate of registration is conclusive evidence of ownership and the right to the exclusive use of the mark. This new and valuable right is denied to any trade-mark registrant who is shown to have used his mark to violate the antitrust laws, but this provision does not and is not intended to deprive the registrant of any rights he would possess or enjoy if this act were not enacted into law. Stated in other terms, proof of violation of the antitrust laws of the United States by a registrant in the use of his mark does not under this act destroy the validity of or the right of the registrant to continue to use the mark, but it places on him a burden of proof in the event of litigation which others do not have to carry, by diluting the weight the court is to give to his certificate of registration as evidence of ownership and the right to use the mark. This is the intent and effect and the only intent and effect of the seven subparagraphs of paragraph (b) of section 33.

Although the words "used to violate the anti-trust laws of the United States" are general in their nature, their meaning is clear. A registrant of a trade-mark might violate the antitrust laws by entering into an agreement to restrict output or to suppress competition and yet the use made by the registrant of his trade-mark in his business might have no legal, causal or efficient relation to the violation of these laws. The relation of the trade-mark to these illegal acts might be purely physical or coincidental. If a trade-mark should be used as the legal, causal and efficient instrumentality to effect a contract, agreement or arrangement which violates the anti-trust laws, then the actual use of the mark to carry out such a scheme would constitute a use in violation of the anti-trust laws; but if the mark is in no true sense an essential legal element of the unlawful conduct, then the fact that the registrant may have violated the anti-trust laws independently of the mark or its use would not bring paragraph (7) of paragraph (b) of section 33 into operation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUFFMAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I have just been advised that during my absence from the floor the conference report on House bill 1654, the trade-marks bill, was considered and agreed to. I thought that I had had an understanding with the other conferees on the part of the Senate that no effort would be made to bring up that conference report unless I was present on the floor. There were some comments which I desired to make. It is my understanding that the action to which I have referred has been taken.

Mr. President, while I have no objection to the conference report, I feel that inasmuch as there has been some discussion of it, an opportunity should be afforded to discuss more fully the report and explain its purpose. I doubt whether it is necessary, in order to gain my objective, to ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the conference report was agreed to, be reconsidered.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should be very glad to have that done.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I believe that it would be advisable to do that.

Mr. PEPPER. I shall be glad to try to clear up the matter of the adoption of the conference report. I moved a little while ago that the conference report be agreed to because of the request of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES]. The Senator from New Jersey put into the RECORD a statement upon the part of the managers concerning the conference report. The Senator from New Jersey understood that the Senator from Wyoming was agreeable to the amendment. I am sure that neither the Senator from New Jersey nor I would desire to have the conference report agreed to without being certain that the Senator from Wyoming was completely satisfied. I believe, in justice to all of us, that it would be advisable to request that the vote by which the conference report was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the conference report was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without the Senator from Texas losing the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor, and he is entitled to protect himself.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no desire to take the Senator off the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the conference report was agreed to is reconsidered.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042), to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I am reading telegrams that have been coming in to me today from citizens of the United States expressing their opinion as to what should be done with OPA. The senders of eight or nine of them would like to continue OPA. The senders of the rest would like to see OPA abolished.

I read a telegram from Charles Cray, of Miami, Fla.:

> Save Nation. Filibuster OPA. Congratulations. Don't weaken.

I read one from Ralph H. Rolston, of Muskogee, Okla.:

> We have wired our Oklahoma Senators to assist you in your filibuster so that the American people can return to the form of government they have been so long without.

Mr. President, I am very glad to say that both of the Senators from our sister State of Oklahoma needed no prodding. Both have spoken against this monstrosity, OPA, many times. The junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] made a speech against OPA on the floor of the Senate today lasting over 3 hours, and the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] has very kindly consented to let me have this time to read these telegrams, prior to another speech he is to make about OPA. I appreciate his kindness in this respect. The telegram from Mr. Ralph O. Rolston, in which he says he has telegraphed the Oklahoma Senators, might be an inspiration for other American citizens to telegraph to their Senators. I know that all Senators, of course, want to pay attention to what their constituents say and what they desire.

I read a telegram from Ray Boltz, independent market operator, Los Angeles, Calif., as follows:

> Filibuster is the name. May you never fail.

I read another telegram from Walter Peckham, Jr., of Houston, Tex.:

> Congratulations on your courageous move to fight the OPA. We need more men like you.

A telegram from Rochester, N. Y.:

> Admire your courage filibustering OPA. Keep up the good work.
>
> Mr. and Mrs. H. A. S. READ.

I read another telegram from Auburn, Maine:

> More power to you. It's time somebody in Washington took a stand for the American form of government.
> EVERETT GREATON.

Those are strong words, Senators, coming from American citizens.

Mr. President, there are many people in this country who think Americanism has already been abolished in America, and I am one of them. I used to go back to Texas and tell the people that unless they ousted the New Deal we would lose our American form of government. I do not have to tell them that any more. We have already lost it. I should like anyone who disagrees with the statement that we have lost our American form of government to give me the name of one person in the United States who is running his own business without dictation from some bureaucrat in Washington. Is that Americanism? Just because we have lost our American form of government is no reason why we cannot recover it, but it is time for us to get busy and recover it before it is eternally too late.

I read a telegram from William Smith, of Miami, Fla.:

> Keep up your courage for a free and unshackled democracy. Kick Chester Bowles and OPA out. You will be much appreciated by the hampered legitimate businessmen of America. Stamp out OPA-encouraged black market.

Mr. President, that is a part of the New Deal proposition. They have got all their friends running black markets. Of course the New Deal wants to keep the OPA. It keeps their friends in the black-market business so they can make contributions to the political campaigns of these New Dealers.

I read a telegram from Early Vandeventer, of Wichita Falls, Tex.:

> Your fight to destroy the vicious principle of price fixing is watched by every freedom-loving American. OPA, with its power to punish without trial, with its whimsical and changeable orders, with its threats and arrogant claims, is the greatest menace to individual rights that has arisen in this generation.

That is the voice of the people I am reading to Senators and to visitors in the galleries. There are many indictments against OPA. Those indictments have not all gotten into the telegrams. When I get into my main speech I will tell the Senate what skulduggery the OPA has practiced ever since it was originated by Congress.

I read a telegram from Miller Chevrolet Co., Don L. Miller, president, St. Joseph, Mo.:

> May God give you strength to carry on your filibuster against OPA, since OPA is destroying our trust and respect for our own Government.

No truer words were ever spoken. There are very few citizens in the United States who have any respect for the words of any official in this New Deal administration. They pay no more attention to what the New Deal officials say. The New Dealers promise to do whatever you want them to do, but do they keep their promises? They seldom do.

I read another telegram from C. C. Patterson, of Shelby, N. C.:

> More power to you in your fight against OPA.

Another telegram from Huntington, W. Va.:

> Rooting for you. Our heartiest support to kill OPA quick.
>
> DR. AND MRS. CHARLES O. REYNOLDS.

From Utica, N. Y., comes the following telegram:

> We hope your filibustering will doom the OPA. Lots of luck.
> E. SIMON DAMSKY SONS,
> Wholesale Grocers.

Another telegram from Saginaw, Mich., as follows:

> I agree with you it would be swell if the American people could wake up Monday morning under the American form of government.
> S. A. SOMMERS,
> President, A. T. Ferrell & Co.

Yes, Mr. President, that would be a "swell" thing. I would like to see that happen.

A telegram from George W. Armstrong of Fort Worth, Tex.:

> Hurrah for you. Stay with them until that place freezes over.

He does not say which place.

Another telegram from T. G. Pool, of Port Arthur, Tex.:

> Fight them to death. For you 100 percent.

A telegram from Gretna, Va.:

> We are glad to know one Senator in Washington has some guts. Carry on.
>
> DELLIS & AMOS.

I read a telegram from H. W. Hibbard, Cleveland, Ohio, as follows:

> Big home economics convention here. Everyone talked with sure OPA has failed. Production only means of holding and lowering prices. Throw them out. We are for you.

From Odessa, Tex., comes this telegram from A. D. Kirklian Grocery and Market:

Thanks for your courageous stand against the OPA bill to restore us to our freedom again.

Good old Odessa. That is where the mayor blacked the eye of one of the OPA stooges. Now he is running for governor.

GLENDALE, CALIF., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:
Hope you filibuster the OPA bill. Finest thing any Senator could do. We are for you 100 percent.

WICHITA, KANS., June 27, 1946.
Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate:
Millions of long-suffering people are hoping you will carry out your filibuster on OPA. As soon as the victims of Bowles' propaganda learn that life will go on as usual without OPA you will be a national idol. If our country could supply the world in war surely it can take care of its own in peace.
W. G. KESSLER.

Not only could our country supply the world in time of war, but the State of Texas could feed the entire Nation if OPA were abolished and the people of Texas given free rein.

DALLAS, TEX., June 27, 1946.
W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senator from Texas,
Washington, D. C.:
Filibuster OPA to death and Texas will return you to the Senate without a run-off.

Senator LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:
Filibuster today. Monday we wake up real Americans again. Hooray.
LOUIS HORNS,
Thrift Market.

Would it not be a grand and glorious feeling to wake up free in America? Some folks might not like it, but if they could not stand America, they might get transportation to Russia, and have an OPA over there, just as we have it here, only in a more advanced stage.

AL YAEGER.

FAYETTEVILLE, N. C., June 27, 1946.
Senator O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:
Filibuster OPA controls until they are removed, particularly on meat, poultry, lard, and textiles.
I. T. WARREN.

These poor people throughout the United States had given up hope. They thought that their country was gone. They received information that the Senate was going to rush this bill through and shoulder the people with the iniquitous OPA for another year. Now they can see a little ray of hope. They hope that other Senators will take courage and rise to their feet and speak.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL UNEMPLOYMENT TAX ACT AND SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of obtaining unanimous consent to introduce a bill at this time?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I am glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to amend the Federal Unemployment Tax Act and the Social Security Act so as to authorize any State to use amounts contributed by employees to the unemployment fund of such State to pay cash benefits of individuals with respect to their unemployment by reason of their disability. This is a bill in which the State of California is very vitally interested, in order to broaden social-security coverage.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2381) to amend the Federal Unemployment Tax Act and the Social Security Act so as to authorize any State to use amounts contributed by employees to the unemployment fund of such State to pay cash benefits of individuals with respect to their unemployment by reason of their disability was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President——

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the present speaker has already spoken twice today on the same subject, and that he is now out of order in asking for the floor again. He yielded first for the consideration of a conference report, without any reservation whatever. He has now yielded for the introduction of a bill, which in my opinion, if I correctly understand the rules of the Senate, constitutes yielding the floor. If recognized again, he would be recognized for the third time in one day on the same subject. I make the point of order. [Manifestations of applause from the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURCH in the chair). Under the precedents of the Senate, if the Senator from Utah insists upon his point of order the Chair will have to sustain it.

Mr. MURDOCK. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I have been expecting something like this from these New Dealers. They do not want the people of the United States to be heard on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I insist upon a ruling on my point of order. The Senator has already been recognized twice.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Bridges	Bushfield
Andrews	Brooks	Byrd
Ball	Buck	Capehart
Barkley	Burch	Capper

Carville	Kilgore	Reed
Chavez	Knowland	Robertson
Donnell	La Follette	Russell
Downey	Lucas	Smith
Ferguson	McCarran	Stanfill
Fulbright	McClellan	Stewart
George	McKellar	Swift
Gerry	McMahon	Taft
Gossett	Magnuson	Taylor
Green	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Guffey	Millikin	Tobey
Gurney	Mitchell	Wagner
Hart	Moore	Walsh
Hawkes	Morse	Wherry
Hayden	Murdock	White
Hill	Myers	Wiley
Hoey	O'Daniel	Willis
Huffman	O'Mahoney	Wilson
Johnson, Colo.	Overton
Johnston, S. C.	Pepper

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Seventy Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Is the subject now before the Senate debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair be sustained as the judgment of the Senate? That is a debatable question.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I wish to debate it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I just got in trouble by yielding; consequently I must ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Kentucky without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to get the Senator out of trouble.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I appreciate that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky, with the understanding that by so doing he will not lose his right to the floor?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may yield under those conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that may be done. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I was absent from the Chamber when the matter which resulted in the quorum call arose. I have no desire to restrict the Senator from Texas or any other Senator in debating the conference report. I am sure that every Senator, including the Senator from Texas, realizes that it is not only my duty but the duty of every other Senator to try to bring this matter to a determination as soon as possible. When a Senator who has the floor yields for the consideration of a conference report, or for the insertion of matter in the RECORD, he technically loses the floor. If he yields for a quorum he loses the floor, and it is counted as one speech in the rule which prohibits making more than two speeches on the same day on the same subject.

I have no desire to take a technical advantage of any of those rules. However, if an obvious effort were in progress to prevent a vote, it would be my duty to take advantage of any rule of which I could take advantage in order to bring the conference report to a vote. Therefore I wish to say to the Senator from Texas, and to all other Senators, that I hope that during the continuation of this debate no effort will be made to take the Senator from the floor by the consideration of conference reports. No conference report could be considered which could not await the disposition of the conference report which is now before the Senate. It is a privileged matter and it is now pending. There is no conference report or bill, of which I have any knowledge, which cannot await the disposition of the conference report which is now pending. I shall be compelled to object to the consideration of any other business while the pending conference report is under consideration.

Mr. President, as evidence of the fact that I have no desire, certainly at this juncture, to interfere with the right of the Senator from Texas to make his speech——

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am sure that I would be the last one to try to take technical advantage of any Member of this body. But, Mr. President, telegram after telegram was read by the Senator from Texas until they amounted, in number, to 25 or 30, and all of them were on the same subject. It seemed to me that it was wasting the Senate's time during the closing days of this fiscal year to proceed with that type of presentation. If the Senator from Texas had been speaking instead of reading telegrams, I should never have attempted by a point of order to invoke the rule of the Senate as I did. It seems to me that when telegram after telegram is read, all dealing with the same subject, there should be some end to it. Had it not been for that situation, I would not have invoked the rule against the Senator. I do not wish to interfere with any Senator when he is making a speech, and I never do interfere with Senators when they are speaking. However, in this instance, I felt that the Senator was not speaking, but, instead, was reading what, in my opinion, became extraneous matter. That was the only reason for my making the point of order.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, earlier in the day the distinguished majority leader asked me if I would yield for the consideration of a conference report. I yielded without making any reservation with respect to holding the floor. I gladly yielded because the request was made in good faith. I am in hearty accord with the position which is now taken by the majority leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I am sure that the overwhelming majority of Senators wish to bring consideration of the pending conference report to a final vote.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. A few minutes ago I became an innocent party to this situation. The Senator from Texas very kindly yielded to me for the purpose of introducing a bill. There was no intention whatever, on my part, that the Senator, by his courtesy, would lose the floor. Therefore, insofar as I may be able to do so, I should like to prevent any possibility of his losing the floor at this time. I do not agree with the Senator in the position which he takes, and I expect to vote against his position; but I would not wish, merely because of a courtesy on his part in yielding, to see the Senator from Texas permanently lose the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is for that very purpose that I urge Senators not to inject others matters into the consideration of the Senate while the conference report is the pending business. There is not a single insertion for the RECORD which cannot wait until after the vote is taken on the conference report. There is no other bill which could be considered which cannot await the disposition of the pending conference report, which is a privileged matter and which is now before the Senate. I urge Senators to pursue the course which I have suggested in order that no Senator will have any ground for taking advantage of a rule which would take a Member of the Senate off his feet.

I may say to the Senator from Texas that I was somewhat disturbed by the statements in the newspapers last night and this morning to the effect that he intended to try to talk the conference report to death. I do not hesitate to say that, considering the present condition of the country and our legislative program, it would be a legislative disgrace for the United States Senate not to be allowed to vote on the pending conference report by the time the present act will expire. I heard the Senator's statement when he began his remarks that he had something of the kind to which I have referred lurking in his mind, but that he had not received much encouragement and could not carry it out all by himself. However, I had no belief that the Senator would try to prevent a vote on the conference report. I have no desire to preclude him from saying anything which he wishes to say about the OPA or the conference report, but I feel that I should resort to every right at my command to bring the conference report to a vote as soon as possible. Therefore I should like to enter into an agreement fixing the hour for a vote, but giving to the Senator from Texas or any other Senator all the time he needs to discuss the matter before the vote is taken.

I have already announced that we will hold a night session as long as the Members of the Senate are willing to remain. I believe that we must vote on the conference report or discredit the United States Senate before the country and before the world. There are other matters of legislation which the Senate must also consider. Appropriation acts for various departments will expire at midnight next Sunday, as will also the present OPA law, unless the conference report now pending is agreed to and the appropriation bills are passed. However, we can pass appropriation bills next week and they will take effect July 1.

Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Texas and other Senators to agree that not later than 9 o'clock tonight the Senate will vote finally on the pending conference report.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I must object to the request. Later on, if I may continue my talk, I shall give consideration to an agreement fixing the time when the Senate will vote.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator. I am satisfied that the Senator and I can make an arrangement.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I shall be glad to discuss the subject with the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. In view of what has happened on the floor since I made my point of order, I now withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the point of order?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the withdrawal of the point of order automatically withdraws the appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the withdrawal of the point of order would eliminate the appeal, and the question would recur on agreeing to the conference report.

Without objection the point of order made by the Senator from Utah is withdrawn, and the Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, it looks as if we were right back where we started. Out of the goodness of my heart I tried to follow the custom which has prevailed since I have been a Member of the Senate. So I yielded for what I considered a very important matter, the transaction of business. I am not sorry I did. I always try to take my stand on the side of right and justice. I am glad I was able to accommodate the two Senators, one on each side of the aisle. I have no remorse whatever. Even if I had lost the floor permanently, I would still be proud of the fact that I was generous enough to yield to my friends.

Mr. President, I make very few speeches in the Senate. Some of them may be distasteful to some of the other Senators, and if so I am very sorry, but my speeches express my true sentiments, and I still believe any Senator has right to stand on the Senate floor and state what he honestly and conscientiously believes to be facts and to express his opinions.

As a child I was taught Christianity, honesty, hard labor, and thrift. I firmly believe in the old adage that there is no fruit without great labor. Throughout my life I have been guided by teachings of that nature. All through my life I have labored long and hard, and through diligent effort I have met with a reasonable degree of success. At least, I have been able to provide for my family, and enjoy some of the necessities of life, without having to sacrifice my honor, and become a tool to some higher-ups in Government, who are only too glad to promote a man's personal welfare if he will submit to their rule and play their game with them according to their own underground system of ironclad rules.

To become one of these great New Deal statesmen, if you please, I would have to lay aside the honesty that was taught me in my childhood and wipe the feet of the New Deal kings with my hair, and because I did not choose to do those things, I have been subjected to all kinds of ridicule, criticism, and abuse, and received very little consideration where consideration, I believe, has been due from some of my colleagues.

My family has suffered at the slimy hands of these New Deal statesmen. Despite all this, I have stood on my own feet. Mr. President, I have fought for what I thought was right, fair, and honest during my tenure as United States Senator, regardless of what it meant to my own personal or political welfare, and I am happy that I can stand in the United States Senate today with a free conscience, that I can lie down at night and sleep peacefully without nightmares brought on by a guilty conscience, and, last but not least, I still enjoy my own company.

I am sure there are men in the New Deal administration who cannot boast of those blessings, men who cannot bear to sit alone with their conscience and review their own actions, knowing, as they do, that they have served as dummies for the New Deal dynasty. Their every act and every word have been dictated by the New Deal administration. They have stumbled blindly along, accepting the great praise and the many favors bestowed upon them, kidding themselves into believing that they are not responsible for selling the people of this Nation down the river.

But there comes a day of reckoning for all, Mr. President. I do not profess to be infallible, but I do claim to be honest, sincere, and a true American, and I shall fight to the bitter end for America and all that is near and dear to us Americans. If we must have Government officials who cherish communism and are determined to inflict that deadly thing on America, I suggest that they take their belongings and go to Russia, where they will get plenty of that type of government, but, by the grace of the almighty God, let us not permit them to bring Russia over here and force communism upon the great and good people of America.

Mr. President, when I stand on the floor of the Senate and attempt to bring to the attention of Senators the opinions of the downtrodden American people who have almost lost hope, I think I am within my rights. These telegrams have been sent to me without solicitation. They came to me as a result of news dispatches which went out from the Nation's Capital yesterday, to the effect that I expect to speak on OPA, and that if I could secure sufficient support from enough other Senators I would do my part toward talking until Monday morning, in the hope that this iniquitous OPA bill would die at midnight Sunday night, and the American people wake up Monday morning under the American flag.

Mr. President, those who sent these telegrams believe in that. They believe in abolishing OPA. I realize that there are some very good people—though I think they are mistaken—who believe that OPA should be continued. I have no criticism of them. If they believe in OPA, that is all right. Some of them may have been misled, but I am sure they are wrong; I am sure there is no place in America for OPA. It is unconstitutional, purely communistic and socialistic.

Under the great form of American Government that was set up by our wise forefathers, as written into the Constitution, they gave the American citizen certain rights, and if any American citizen has any article which belongs to him, it is his property, and he should be the one and the only one to say what he would take for that article.

The minds of buyer and seller must meet before there is any freedom in the setting of a price. No man has wisdom enough, even if he be the fairest man on earth, to set a price on every commodity in the United States which would be satisfactory to both producers and consumers. It is absolutely impossible for that to be done. We are tinkering with that thing. We are trying to do the impossible.

The OPA was brought forth under the guise of being a war measure, and when this Nation was engaged in war it behooved every one of us to support anything our Commander in Chief said was necessary to the winning of the war. But the war is now over, and every one of our enemies, through the efforts of our brave boys on the field of battle, in the air, on the sea, has been beaten into unconditional surrender. The enemy nations are gone.

Now, Mr. President, those who are interested in the administration of OPA for some reason or other want to continue to foist this un-American agency upon the lives of American citizens, after our boys have fought for our freedom. I am against it, and have been against it ever since it was proposed. I am against it now more than ever, and I would to God that a sufficient number of Senators would join with me and discuss this report until OPA expires Sunday night. I have never made the statement that I could expect to do it all alone, and I have repeatedly made the statement that I had received no promises of any support. It is up to each Senator to decide what he wants to do.

Mr. President, I am of the opinion that every Senator wishes to abide by the desires expressed by his constituents, or at least a majority of them. I realize, of course, that every Senator has a right to disregard his constituents, if he desires to do so, and to use his own judgment. I believe in that form of government. But I think we should take time here today, while this bill is under consideration, to give full consideration to every phase of it.

So these people throughout the United States have sent these telegrams to me. Some may think they are monotonous telegrams. I say they are the voice of the people. No two of the telegrams I have read so far have been alike. I am reading them from both sides. I am absolutely fair in reading the telegrams from those who approve OPA and those who oppose OPA. A reading of the many telegrams which oppose and want it abolished may be just a little obnoxious to the ears of some who approve OPA and want it extended. I am very sorry if that is the case, but I believe it to be my duty, since American citizens have sent these telegrams to me, to read them, and I believe I have that right and privilege on the floor of the Senate. I should like to know what is more important in this Republic than for the citizens themselves to have a voice. Since they are not permitted to enter this Chamber, but go to the expense of paying for telegrams and sending them, I think they certainly should have the right to expect their telegrams to be read, and I am proud to stand here and read them.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. If I ask the Senator from Texas to yield, and he yields without obtaining unanimous consent, am I correct in understanding that he will lose the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the precedents of the Senate, the Senator can yield for a question without losing his right to the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield for a question if I may have unanimous consent that I do not lose the floor thereby.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has the right to yield for a question without obtaining unanimous consent.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I understand that, but I wanted the double protection.

Mr. WHERRY. I wanted to ask the Senator a question. The Senator just made a statement that the telegrams which he received were not alike. I ask the Senator if it is not true that the telegrams he has received have come to him from all parts of the State, and if they are not coming to him from individuals; farmers, housewives, merchants, and the whole citizenship of the Senator's State? That is true with respect to the telegrams coming to me from my State.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I am glad to answer the Senator from Nebraska by saying that, of course, I do not know the vocation of the signers of each one of the telegrams. Some specify the sender is a housewife or is operating a store of some kind or a market. The telegrams come to me not only from my own State, but from various other States.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield further for a question?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHERRY. The question I ask this time is rather to clarify the first one. Are the telegrams which the Senator is now receiving different from what we call "pressure" telegrams? Do the telegrams which come to the Senator come from individuals who are interested in either the extension or the discontinuance of OPA?

Mr. O'DANIEL. The telegrams which come to me are from individuals and are not what the Senator calls "pressure" telegrams. Earlier in my remarks I brought out the fact that they are not inspired telegrams; that they are telegrams which come from the hearts of the American citizens who have read in the news reports or heard over the radio that there are some in Washington who want to have OPA abolished, and they are sending these telegrams. That is one reason why I am reading them. Another reason why I am reading them is that I surmise that the same individuals who are telegraphing to me are telegraphing to other Senators. As the telegrams come from citizens of other States, I presume those citizens are telegraphing their own Senators. I know there are many Senators who would like to see OPA abolished, and if they could receive a little encouragement from home they might join in trying to abolish OPA.

Our majority leader has been perfectly frank in saying that he will use all tactics at his command to obtain a vote on this question at the earliest possible moment, and I shall be perfectly frank to tell him that I should like to see OPA abolished, and I shall also repeat what I said a while ago, that I do not expect to talk this bill to death until Monday morning unless I can get some help. Unless there is sufficient interest among other Senators to talk the bill to death, I cannot do it alone. That is physically impossible. I have made the suggestion, I have planted the idea in the minds of Senators, and I have invited all Senators who want to participate, to get into the fight with me. That is for them to decide. The telegrams which are coming in to me, if similar to telegrams coming to other Senators, may help them decide. I do not know. I am merely trying to fight for what I believe is a righteous cause. I do not believe there is any place for OPA in America in time of peace. I shall read some more of these telegrams so the people in the States will know I am doing my duty.

I now read a telegram from Angie Souther, of St. Louis, Mo.:

Congratulations. Thank God for one Senator who wants a free America. Trusting others may join you.

Mr. President, that is for other Senators to decide.

I read another telegram from Atlanta, Ga.:

ATLANTA, GA., June 27, 1946.

Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Don't let your courage fail. Filibuster until Christmas if necessary. Relegate OPA to its place of conception to the innermost depths of hades. Veterans are not allowed to live in their own homes. Have failed after 4 months to get mine. Down with dictators!

J. E. B. STEWART.

Mr. President, he wants to get rid of OPA so he can get his home back. I read another telegram from Nashville, Tenn.:

Thousands of Tennesseans hope and pray for you. May God give you strength to carry through your courageous program.

A. C. TISSELL.

I have a telegram dated St. Louis, Mo., from Rath Bros. Market. Of course I know from the telegram that Rath brothers have a market. I presume they do not have very much in it to sell, but the telegram shows they have a market. They say:

Let's have free enterprise. Abolish OPA.

They want to get rid of OPA.

Another telegram from Fitchburg, Mass.:

With your thoughts to foresee and do, we cannot lose through the OPA.

WILLIAM O'KEEFE.

A telegram from Cleveland, Ohio:

More power for your filibuster regarding OPA. Will gladly furnish sustenance during your labor.

HUGH G. SELBY.

I will say that a person might be able to talk longer on this subject if it were not for OPA rationing. OPA has cut down the energy and the ability of the American citizen. One simply cannot work without the proper food to eat, and one cannot get the proper food to eat now because of OPA.

I read a number of other telegrams as follows:

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., June 27, 1946.

Senator LEE O'DANIEL:

Papers quote you tonight in opposition to OPA control. I hope you stay in there and pitch. We are all for you and wish you lots of luck.

AL BUCHANAN.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 27, 1946.

Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building:

Heartily agree with your denouncement price controls. All best wishes for success of proposed filibuster.

A. W. TINKHAM.

McKEES ROCKS, PA., June 27, 1946.

Senator O'DANIEL, of Texas.
United States Senate:

Thank the Lord we have one man in the Senate that has guts enough to fight the snake in the grass, the OPA. Let supply and demand regulate prices and give the country back to the people that fought for us. More power to you.

WILLIAM C. SMYTHE.

That is plain language.

Here is a telegram from Albany Stockyards, Albany, Ga. I did not know there were any stockyards left in operation in this country. But apparently there is one left. The telegram is as follows:

Congratulations on your attitude in filibustering OPA. Too bad we do not have more men with your ability. Hope you are successful.

ALBANY STOCKYARDS,
W. M. STORY.

I read a number of other telegrams, as follows:

JUPITER, FLA., June 27, 1946.

Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate:

Filibuster until the end of time and you have won boys' vote for the next President of the United States.

JOHN ZIEGLER.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 27, 1946.

Senator O'DANIEL, of Texas:

More power to you. It's time we had one American in the Senate. Thank God for you.

HARRY YARNELL.

FITCHBURG, MASS., June 27, 1946.

Senator O'DANIEL, of Texas,

Three out of four real Americans are with you. Reds and radicals don't count. May you talk long and loud and good luck.
WILLIS RICHARDSON.

HARRISBURG, PA., June 27, 1946.
Senator O'DANIEL:
Grocers and meat dealers everywhere approve your stand and hope you kill OPA. Give business chance to operate in an American way.
S. S. POMEROY,
Grocer.

FITCHBURG, MASS., June 27, 1946.
Senator O'DANIEL, from Texas:
May God give you courage, speech, and health, so we can go back to our American way of life without OPA.
LOUIS CERIER.

MIAMI, FLA., June 27, 1946.
Hon. Senator LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate:
Keep your courage up for a free, unshackled democracy. Kick Chester Bowles and OPA out. You will be much appreciated by the hampered, legitimate businessmen of America. Stamp out OPA encouraged black markets.
WILLIAM SMITH.

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y., June 27, 1946.
Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Chambers, Washington, D. C.:
OPA unconstitutional, inconsistent, unreliable, fanatical, dishonest, underhanded, confusing. Kill it.
NORBERT J. BATT.

Here is one from Peoria, Ill.:

PEORIA, ILL., June 27, 1946.
Senator LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:
By filibustering the OPA out you will go down in history as one of the greatest of Americans of all times. God is the only one who can regulate supply and demand—not man, not OPA. The American housewives are the smartest women in the world so there is no fear about price. God is on your side so fight to the finish.
E. D. DONNELLY,

Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:
Not lifting ceiling on dairy products will retard make of butter, encourage the black market on butter, which has prevailed not only in Philadelphia but all over the United States for many months. Believe that 80 percent of the butter sold in the United States is going into black-market channels from 80 cents to $1 per pound. If ceilings removed, feel sure legitimate prices will not advance above current black-market prices. Also the manufacture of butter will increase to such volume that prices will drop in a few months according to supply and demand. We were established 1870, employing at present 50 employees. Lost our last creamery April 26, due to not paying above ceilings. Success in your fight for the manufacturers and legitimate butter dealers and consumers of the United States.
I. WALTER BICKLEY,
A. F. BICKLEY & SON.

Everyone knows that OPA is entirely responsible for the fact that one cannot get butter today. Recently the OPA announced that it was raising the price of butter 11 cents a pound. That will give the American people an opportunity to save more money, if they operate according to the philosophy of the boy who voted for the proposal in a certain city to raise the street car fare from 5 to 10 cents. He was asked why he voted to raise the street car fare from 5 to 10 cents. He said that he lived only 3 miles from his job, and he saved only 5 cents each way by walking to and from work, or 10 cents for the round trip. If the fare were raised he would save 20 cents a day. The same philosophy is suggested with respect to butter. If the price of butter is raised 11 cents a pound and one cannot get butter, he saves 11 cents a pound more than he had been saving.

We are in back of you 100 percent in your fight to end price control, especially OPA control of meat and meat products. We urge your continued efforts to take OPA control off of meats.
JACOB BAUER SONS.

Mr. President, that is what the majority of the Senate voted to do. The majority of the Senate voted to take controls off of meat. Yet the Senate's desires, as expressed by that vote in this Chamber, have been completely ignored, and that part of the bill has been stricken, so that the controls on meat are not to be eliminated. Yet we are promised that if we adopt the conference report giving the Administrator of the OPA authority to eliminate controls on meat, he will eliminate the controls as soon as the supply equals the demand. How can we be expected to believe anything that anyone in the OPA says? If the OPA does not believe what the Senate says, why should the Senate and the Senators believe what the OPA promises? If the OPA is sincere in its promise to take the controls off of meat when we give it authority under the pending measure, why does the OPA object to taking off controls under the measure the Senate passed? Everyone knows the answer to that. It is because no one has any faith in the integrity or honesty or the spoken word of anyone in the OPA.

Mr. President, these further telegrams have come to me:

We must have food either legitimately or through black markets. Is OPA going to make storekeeper and housewives criminals? We walk miles to buy scarce items in black market and will walk more miles to save pennies. But we must be able to find merchandise in stores. Sent telegram to President Truman last night from housewives, will he listen to us or to Chester Bowles?
Mrs. PHILIP FISCHER,
President, Consumers Betterment Organization.

Mr. President, it appears to me that under our American form of government the people of the United States, the citizens of this great Republic, should not be obliged to listen to the President of the United States or to Chester Bowles with reference to buying a pound of meat or a pound of butter. If I correctly understand the Constitution of the United States, we are a nation of laws, and the policy of this Nation is decided in accordance with what is written into the statutes, and the only department of our Government which can legally write a law is the Congress of the United States. The Congress is the exclusive, one and only policy-making body of this great Nation, unless we delegate that authority to some other department or some individual. It appears to me that the citizens of the United States have a right to expect the Congress to formulate the policies, without requiring the citizens to go hat in hand before the President of the United States, whose main constitutional duty is to see to it that the laws of this Nation which the Congress writes are faithfully executed. I think the people of the United States should realize that everything good in this Nation is the result of the laws which are passed by the Congress; and everything bad in this Nation, including the OPA, can be laid at the door of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I have also received the following telegrams:

Thousands poultrymen south Texas, hundreds of whom are your personal friends, jubilant over your stand. American poultrymen must be freed from bondage OPA ceilings or perish. Keep up the fight.
WARREN TAYLOR,
Secretary, South Texas Poultrymen's Association.

Mr. President, down in the Gonzales section of the great State of Texas there are hundreds of farmers who are engaged in raising broilers and fryers for the market. Many of those poultrymen have been entirely put out of business by the OPA. Pleas have been made recently on the floor of the Senate, and I have heard them, for the poultrymen of the northeast section and the northwest section of the United States. The oppression of the poultrymen of my State has been constant ever since the OPA was established. As I have said, hundreds of these poultrymen have been put out of business. I have personally gone to the OPA and have discussed this subject with the representatives of the OPA, and have asked them why they wanted to hold the ceiling price of poultry in Texas below the cost of production. They informed me that for the protection of the consumers, it was necessary to hold the price of that poultry 5 cents below the cost of production. We then obtained statements from the grocery stores that bought the poultry from those poultry raisers, and in those statements the grocery stores agreed to pay 5 cents a pound more for the poultry and not raise the price of the poultry to the consumer 1 cent. Yet the OPA would not permit that increase of 5 cents a pound to enable those poultrymen to stay in business—thus admitting that the OPA's objective is not to hold down the prices to the consumers, but that its objective is to put the poultrymen out of business. That is exactly what the OPA has accomplished, regardless of whether that was its objective.

Mr. President, I now read the following telegrams which I have received:

L. ROGERS.

Mr. President, I believe that is the first telegram which I have received in which any mention was made of rent controls. Those who own property for rent have received no encouragement, whatever, regarding the abolition of rent controls. I assert, however, that, in my opinion, the rent-control law is more responsible for the housing shortage throughout this country than is anything else. With respect to the city of Dallas, Tex., for exemple, I have received a report from a responsible person to the effect that 3,500 apartment units and houses there are vacant and will remain vacant so long as the OPA is in control of rents. The owners of the properties have found that they have fewer rights than do the tenants. They lose control, absolutely, of their property when they allow anyone to move in, so they prefer vacancies to tenants.

Press reports you are to filibuster OPA. All citizens who believe in our form of government are with you. We, the thinking citizens, are hoping for enough Republicans in the next Congress to help you restore this Government to the people.

Mr. President, that telegram shows how desperate the people in a Democratic State have become. Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senator From Texas,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Congratulations. Keep up filibuster. Kill OPA.

HAYWARD ROLFE.

Mr. President, the reason that so many of the people in Texas are in favor of abolishing the OPA is that they have no faith in its management. The OPA has never done anything that it has promised to do, unless it was purely accidental. The people cannot trust the OPA to administer correctly any kind of law. Any price-control law which the Congress might write—it would make no difference what the law happened to be—would be administered by the OPA in the way it wanted to administer it, regardless of what the law required.

I have heard some talk to the effect that the President will veto the OPA bill. I do not know what the President will do when the OPA bill comes to his desk. That is his business. However, I believe that the administrators of the OPA will want him to veto the pending bill regardless of what it contains.

The officials of OPA do not even read what is in the bill, but they have smart attorneys who are figuring out how they can beat the intent of the law. That is what those attorneys are there for. So the only way we can possibly restore Americanism to America and bring back private industry is to abolish OPA, get it out of the way, eliminate it, do away with it entirely.

We had 150 years of prosperity and progress in the United States without an OPA, and I would be willing to assume the entire responsibility of thrusting Americanism back onto the American citizen. I fear no dire consequences at all. I think every American citizen can stand the shock.

Now I read a telegram from Ada, Okla.:

Mr. President, Senators are hearing the voice of the people, spontaneously, coming into their Nation's Capital in the form of telegrams which I am reading for their benefit because I know they want to feel the pulse of the American people on the important bill which is now before this body for consideration.

Most of these telegrams come from downtrodden people who cannot support a lobby in Washington, who cannot afford to buy railway transportation to come to Washington and talk to their representatives. There are many organizations that have representatives who either live in Washington or come here to try to look after the interests of particular lines of industry or particular organizations, but out across the vast acres throughout the States of the Union there are millions of American citizens who place their confidence in the men whom they elected to the United States Senate. They want those men to know their feelings toward the OPA bill; so they have sent me these telegrams, and I am proud to stand on the floor of the Senate and read them. Although they may be obnoxious and monotonous to the ears of some, they should be sweet music to the ears of Senators who may be interested in knowing that their constituents have taken the time and spent money to send these messages. There would be millions of telegrams coming in if many of the people had money enough to pay for telegrams. It means much to some to go to the Western Union and pay cash to send a telegram to the Nation's Capital.

Here is one from Ernst Hammerschmidt, of Lombard, Ill.:

LOMBARD, ILL., June 27, 1946.
Senator O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:
I would sure like to wake up Monday, July 1, without OPA.

ERNST HAMMERSCHMIDT.

It would be almost like waking up in heaven, or next to it. Of course, there is nothing as good as waking up in heaven and making sure one has lived in such a way as to get there, but think of waking up in America, after you have known America all your life, going down to the grocery store, and walking in, not having to stick your head in the back door, not having to have someone call up the merchant on the telephone and tell him you are coming, but walking into the grocery store like an American and having the grocer with a smile on his face meet you, and letting you take your choice of all the cuts of meat, walk up and pick up some toilet articles, some Lux, and perhaps have several choices. Would it not be grand to get back to that condition again? That is the America we used to know, and that is the America we will have again when we get rid of the bureaucrats in Washington who are trying to do the thinking for 130,000,000 American citizens. The bureaucrats simply do not have the ability to do the thinking for all the people. There cannot be found men with brains enough and wisdom enough to administer a bill which will fix satisfactorily to 130,000,000 the prices of the things they buy and sell. If everyone in OPA had the wisdom of Solomon it could not be done. It is an impossibility.

We have had many administrators in OPA. In my initial speech against the bill on January 8, 1942, I said on the floor of the Senate that we would have possibly many administrators of OPA, that they would come and they would go, but that I never intended to take issue with any of those administrators individually. What I take issue with is the system, the process. No man was ever born with sufficient wisdom properly to administer OPA. No man is wise enough to set the prices for American citizens under this new system, after Americans have lived under the system of free enterprise. We picked one administrator out of this very body, a body chosen from among the citizenship of the Nation for its integrity, wisdom, and intelligence. We picked a man out of this body, Prentiss Brown, who stood on the floor of the Senate and, I believe, conscientiously advocated the passage of the OPA bill. He thought it was a good thing. But even Prentiss Brown, with all his wisdom, could not administer OPA. He had a qualification which completely disqualified him from administering OPA. He had honor; he had character. No man with any honor, no man with any character would long attempt to administer such an obnoxious, such a communistic measure as the OPA law, and Prentiss Brown got out and saved his honor.

Mr. President, no man in the Senate, picked out of this great body of men chosen by the people, men in whom the people have confidence for their wisdom and integrity, can possibly administer OPA. If a Senator left this body and went to OPA and attempted to administer that office he would be ruined, because it is impossible to administer it. There must be prices which will fluctuate in accordance with supply and demand. We have the greatest system for fixing of proper prices. The housewives themselves do that. It is the greatest instrument ever devised. An American housewife goes to the stores to buy what she needs. There is one store here and another store there and numerous other stores, every one of them stocked with all kinds of merchandise. The buyer can discriminate. If the price is too high in one store, the buyer will go to the next store. If the price is too high in all the stores, the housewife will buy a substitute. The stores are all out of substitutes now.

We used to have a substitute for oleomargarine. Butter used to be a substitute for oleomargarine. Now there is no quarrel on the Senate floor about whether oleomargarine or butter is best. Neither one can be obtained.

OPA, by setting prices on established brands and articles offered for sale, has encouraged, in fact, it has compelled, the manufacturers to lower the quality of their merchandise. They are prevented from raising the price, so if they are to continue to stay in business they are obliged to lower the quality of their merchandise. Go to any store and try to buy something, and you will find an inferior grade to that which you want to buy. If something is supposed to be made of wood you will find it is made of paper. If there is anything that can be made more cheaply than out of paper it will be made of some other substance. That must be done in order for manufacturers to stay in business. They, on their part, pay higher prices for inferior products.

There is no way to restore the American system except to let prices seek their level. If prices go up, it will encourage production, production will increase, and more manufacturing will be done. More planting will be done. There will be more food and more manufactured products. After a while there will be so great a supply that producers will begin to compete with each other and there will be a buyer's market. The buyer can then set the price.

Then, Mr. President, there will be another great emergency, and then, if the New Dealers are still in power—and God grant that they will not be in power—they will try to do something to raise prices. That is what they did at the beginning of the emergency. They started out with the blue eagle, NRA—the old blue eagle. They were going to raise prices and get everyone organized under the blue eagle. That was tried for a while. But, thank God, we had an honest Supreme Court. That Supreme Court threw the old blue eagle out the window and into the trash can. But the New Dealers never give up. They went out into the alley, reached down into the trash can, and picked the old, bedraggled bird out of the can, the bird with its feathers drooping. They got some red paint from Russia and painted the feathers of the old blue eagle and set it up on the pedestal and they said, "Here is the old bird, but we call it OPA instead of NRA." But, Mr. President, it is exactly the same thing. So I say, let us get rid of OPA. Let us abolish it. Let us put it out of business.

Mr. President, I cannot understand the thinking processes of a man who believes this country could not withstand the shock of returning from communism to Americanism. I cannot understand the thinking of a man who believes America cannot withstand the shock of waking up on Monday morning with the citizens free to pay what they want to for any article they want to buy or free to sell for any price they can get. I cannot understand the mental processes of the man who thinks that then America would go to the bowwows. Mr. President, I should like to see America return to that condition. America has been put to greater tests than that during her existence, and has always come through with flying colors. I believe America will come through successfully again.

Mr. President, prices have always fluctuated from the dawn of history. Prices cannot be kept static or in one place for long, even though all the power and the resources of a great nation were used to maintain them. It simply cannot be done. Effort along that line has been made throughout the ages, but it never has been done completely or successfully.

I read a telegram from Ernst Hammerschmidt, of Lombard, Ill., as follows:

I would surely like to wake up Monday, July 1, without OPA.

I have already read that telegram, Mr. President. That is the one which started me off on my discussion.

Here is one from Minneapolis, Minn.:

Please filibuster.

B. B. Duekme. G. G. Erickson. E. M. Carpenter. Karl Duemke. Florence Duemke.

Mr. President, I am not going to filibuster. I am not filibustering now. I am simply reading these telegrams from people who tell us whether they want OPA continued or not. I think their voices ought to be heard in the Senate, where we are going to decide this matter before we recess.

Here is a telegram from San Antonio, Tex.:

Texas is with you, Big Boy. Stay with 'em.
DAN KENNARD.

That is just Texas language. It is easy to understand what they say down there.

Here is a telegram from Houston, Tex.:

HOUSTON, TEX., June 27, 1946.

Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate:

We urgently request you do everything in your power to reinstate in the OPA extension bill the Wherry amendment which would give to wholesalers and distributors their peacetime mark-ups. The committee bill ignores completely the legitimate wholesaler and distributor and if passed in its present form will do nothing more than compel a vital part of our distribution system to go out of business. You are doing a fine job. More power to you.

GEORGE A. DASCOMB, Jr.,
President,
THE VAUGHAN LUMBER CO., INC.

Those poor old lumber dealers are still trying to hang on. There are very few two-by-fours obtainable, or one-by-fours, or two-by-sixes. If they can be made 1⅞ inches instead of 2 inches in thickness and thereby not exactly fit into the OPA regulations, OPA will crack down on them. But I say that OPA cannot outsmart the American people forever. The American people are too ingenious. The American people are going to find some way to keep going, even if they have to abolish OPA. We may not do so this time—I hope we will—but OPA will be abolished sometime.

Here is a telegram from San Antonio, Tex.:

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building:

I am thoroughly in sympathy with your plan to filibuster on OPA bill. Believe that is our best chance to get from under governmental regimentation. Good luck in your effort.

FRANK L. LAWSHE.

Here is one from Elmhurst, Ill.:

More power to you in filibuster against OPA. Keep it up. Keep it up.

PERRY P. BURR.

Another telegram from Glendale, Calif.:

I hope we wake next Monday morning and find we are in America and that OPA has been a horrible dream.

CHARLES W. BOYLE.

I hope he is right. If I get enough support so that we may succeed in doing just that.

Here is a telegram from Rotan, Tex., out there on the Texas plains:

Keep fighting the OPA. We are with you 100 percent.

PAY AND TAKE STORE,
CHARLES B. KELLY.

A telegram from Bayside, N. Y., S. R. Turinto:

Congratulations on your stand on OPA. Sincerely hope you are able to force them to give America back to the Americans.

Not to the Indians.

I read the following telegrams:

TEXARKANA, ARK., June 27, 1946.
Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Congratulations upon your threat to filibuster on OPA. I truly hope that you can filibuster OPA out of existence forever and thereby hasten the return of this country to decent ways of doing business.

DAVID NELSON.

ROSEVILLE, CALIF., June 27, 1946.
Honorable Senator O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:

Have restaurant trying to feed 3,000 bus passengers each day. Under OPA rule have no meat, bread, flour, butterfats, and short supply milk. Suggest you discontinue OPA and the other racketeers for awhile and see if businessmen can do the job.

I. O. GIFFORD.
BAXTER, CALIF.

The writer of this telegram lives away off in Roseville, Calif., trying to operate a restaurant to feed 3,000 bus passengers, and he is out of everything they want to eat.

I read further from the telegrams which I have received:

BEAUMONT, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Hope filibuster succeeds and we be freed of socialistic controls.

JOHN O. BANKS.

MINEOLA, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Hon. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Congratulations on your proposal to take the floor and all good wishes for your successful filibuster. If you can bury this dead duck on June 30 you will have rendered your country a great service by relieving it of the stench of black markets, illegal trading and the disgrace of a law that is obviously unenforceable.

T. W. BENHAM.

LONGVIEW, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:

Congratulations, "Pappy," we are for you 100 percent. Get on floor now and stay there until Monday.

Longview Used Car Dealers Association; R. L. Fuston & Son; Hubert Kennedy; Bonner, Aycock & Barrow; J. M. Bolls; Dowdy & Seaton; Sam Merritt; N. L. Smith; Bell & Price; Lee Vowell; Wells & Owens.

ROTAN, TEX., June 27, 1946.
Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Washington, D. C.:

Keep up your fight against the OPA. We are backing you 100 percent.

ALVIN M. CLARK.

Almost everyone in Texas is backing me 100 percent—all except the New Dealers down there on the Government pay roll.
